A proposition has recently been made by owners of land abutting the present hospital site to exchange 59½ acres thereof for the above-described lot purchased by the Government in 1867. This proposition was called to the attention of the Senate Committee on Appropriations under date of the 23d instant with favorable commendation.

E. A. HITCHCOCK,
Secretary.

From this, gentlemen will see that the Secretary has another purpose for this land, and that probably nothing will ever come of the proposition which so disturbs you.

Mr. LOUD. Does that plan involve the giving of some of the land on the asylum site in exchange?

Mr. GROUT. As I understand it, it is a proposition to exchange that 59 acres of land owned by the asylum across Nichols avenue, which the asylum does not want, for 59 acres on the same side of the avenue with the asylum buildings, and which the asylum does want, on which to erect new buildings.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understand the proposition to be that this land that the House rejected the other day is to be brought about in this way.

Mr. GROUT. I do not say that this will be so, but I expect that proposition will come before the House on the sundry civil bill when it comes back from the other end of the Capitol, and then the gentleman will have an opportunity to try this question with the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who will have charge of that bill. Then the gentleman can perform on this question again. Mr. Speaker, now, there are other reasons why we put this proposition in the bill and which I have not had an opportunity to state yet. We put this amendment in the bill thinking it would enable the Commissioners to buy land to better advantage by making them independent of those who had land to sell by thus having a chance to provide a site on land already owned by the Government. Keep in mind this is a permissive proposition—simply a permissive proposition—and enables the Secretary and the Commissioners, in their discretion, to deal with this subject as they may think best. Now, those who have had anything to do with buying land in Washington or elsewhere will understand the advantage of not being entirely dependent on those who wish to sell. This provision gives the Commissioners another string to their bow, another alternative to fall back on; and this is another reason why this provision was put into the report——

Mr. LOUD. You have had hold of the string, but the string was in the air.

Mr. GROUT. It is only in the air in the mind of the gentleman. I think everybody else understands it, and has hold of the string with me.

Mr. LOUD. It is admitted by the gentleman.

Mr. GROUT. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. GROUT. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take twenty minutes, I hope, but some things have been said about this conference report to which I desire to make reply, and I hope I do not violate any of the secrets of the conference when I say that the conference was over before I knew this proposition was in the bill.

Mr. LOUD. Evidently the gentleman from Vermont did not know it was there, either.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Yes; the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] knew it was there. The superintendent of the asylum told somebody connected with this conference that this land disconnected from the asylum was of no good to the asylum. It is not good farming land, but it does raise some grass, so he says. This is not the first time we have dedicated land belonging to the Government for the purposes of the city. Gentlemen are very much mistaken about this fact. A year or two ago we dedicated Mount Vernon Park over here, that belongs to the Government, for a site to build a library for the city. Did you hear any talk about schemes then, and an attempt to rob the Government? This thing has been done time and again here in the past, where sites were needed for public buildings, where the Government has given these sites rather than to appropriate the money to pay for them, and this is one of those same schemes.

I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana that while I had no sort of responsibility in originating this proposition, when he talks about schemes and the covering up in this sort of way of transactions in order to delude the House, if he is as far above schemes as I have found my colleague, the gentleman from Vermont, on this committee on the other side in the last four years I have served with him on this committee, when he goes out of Congress he will go out with a very fair record on that proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I meant no reflection on any member of the committee, but upon this species of legislating in conference.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I was absent a part of the time when the conference committee was in session, but reposing in him the confidence which I know he deserves, I authorized my colleague to act for me. But I went over these different things. This was a Senate amendment which we agreed to with an amendment. I agree with the Secretary of the Interior that if this land can be exchanged for land contiguous to the asylum, where these buildings ought to be built, it is a better use to put it to than to use it for the purposes of an almshouse. I have been an advocate of that proposition, but the gentleman from Indiana seems to think that this is a part of a scheme to make the Government purchase more land, when in fact, as you have just been informed by the dispatch from the Secretary of the Interior, he opposes the dedication of this to the use of an almshouse, and it is in his discretion to do it or not.

He virtually says that his discretion will not be to use it in that way, because this land, not being valuable to the asylum, he prefers to exchange it for some adjoining the asylum that he does need. Now, a great many bugaboos have sprung up here. I had supposed and hoped that so far as I was concerned I was about out of the land business in the District of Columbia. If any of you ever have any experience in it you will find that you are between those who want to sell to the Government—and there is not one of them in the District but that would get from the Government the best price he could—and those on the other hand who want to blackmail those who want to sell, and want to keep them from selling unless they give them a part of the purchase price; that is the trouble you are up against when you undertake to purchase land for the Government in this District.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] the other day in closing his speech connected my name and a number of others with the proposition to appropriate money for this asylum to buy land over there. He intimated that I favored buying it at $2,300 an acre, which was never true. I did say here, and I say it again, that if as a business proposition I were going to spend a million dollars for erecting buildings, one hundred and forty-five thousand or two hundred thousand dollars would not be an inducement to me to erect buildings where everybody connected with the institution said they ought not to be. I have been in favor, on that proposition, of getting this land for the Government just as cheap as we could. There are three processes by which we can get it; you may swap for it, buy it, or you can condemn it.

The combination against the Government in the District of Columbia on the subject of the purchase and sale of land has induced those gentlemen, who have had more experience on that subject than I have, to believe that it is better to buy on very liberal terms than to risk the process of condemnation. When the Government attempts to buy land anywhere it has this same trouble. The gentleman from Missouri talked about it as a steal. Well, the subject of larceny, I believe, embraces pretty much everybody who has anything to do with it. There are a great many members of the Appropriations Committee, and that proposition came before them. There was not a dissenting voice to the proposition to report that measure to the House. So you have 17 thieves there. The proposition was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, a gentleman I do not know personally, but who, I understand, has always stood well with his neighbors, and so you have another man added to the number.

Mr. BENTON. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. BENTON. I will ask the gentleman if I did not, in the presence of the committee, serve notice on the chairman that I would not vote for that proposition?

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. I did not hear it.

Mr. BENTON. I did.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. I did not hear it in the presence of the committee. I did not hear a dissenting vote. When the motion was made to report this bill, including this purchase, to the House, I did not hear a dissenting voice.

Mr. LOUD. Well, that only cuts off one. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Now, we have a board of visitors in the city, made up of such men as Mr. Samuel Kauffman, Dr. Wyman, Chief Justic Fuller, and men like that, and this proposition was recommended by them. I suppose they are a part of the scheme to steal. The superintendent of the asylum, the architect who has been selected to put up these buildings, the landscape gardener who approved of it, they are all in this scheme to steal.

Gentlemen, it is very easy to talk about "stealing" schemes. I remember that a year ago, when we had under consideration a proposition to appropriate $100,000 to buy a site for a municipal hospital in the District, the gentleman from New York, I think it was, or somebody right over there, got up and talked about that "steal," and it was stated that particular land was already laid out in view of the proposed purchase. What was the result? We made the appropriation. The land which gentlemen supposed had been selected was never bought. Thirty-six acres of land were afterwards bought—a good deal farther out, however, than the tract which was supposed to have been in contemplation. The District Commissioners advertised for bids or suggestions about land. They rejected them all, and finally bought 36 acres, 2 or 3 miles out, at $2,000 an acre—land never in contemplation when the bill was passed. So you see the scare about that proposed steal was unnecessary. And yet we had to confront these charges that there was some "steal."

Mr. GROUT. And the money was paid out of the unexpended balance of an appropriation.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Now, I want to say a word for the gentleman in charge of this bill, a man with whom I have served on this District Committee for four years. He has sometimes been denominated a regular David Harum on account of his trading capacity with the Senate. He jews them down. He attempts to hold them down on every appropriation. Again and again he has caught me by the shoulder and said: "My God, ALLEN, we must hold these fellows down." I think that when our reports or agreements are denominated "schemes"—efforts to "cover up" something—it is proper the House should know my estimate of the gentleman who, as the majority leader on the part of the House on this conference, has been conducting these transactions. There are some things which he and I have not agreed about; but representing the majority as he does and I the minority on the conference, I did not feel it proper for me to attempt to override him.

I have promised to say one other thing. An amendment was put on this bill by the Senate appropriating $50,000 for Providence Hospital. I know something of the Providence Hospital. I do not think there is a more beautiful or well-conducted charity in the United States than the Providence Hospital—not one that appeals more to me. And when the Government is distributing its bounty I am as ready to do something for the Providence Hospital as for any other institution in the country. But the Providence Hospital is cared for on the sundry civil bill. The point was made that the $50,000 for this institution ought to have gone on that bill, and so this appropriation went out, not on account of any objection to the proposition on its merits, but because it was claimed it did not belong on this bill. This is another of these "schemes" which we may expect to come back here on the sundry civil bill. I rather hope it will, and shall take pleasure in voting for it when it comes here.

Mr. Speaker, this is about all I care to say. Summing up this matter, about the only objection to this report is this, that in the conference report we give the Secretary of the Interior authority to allow the District Commissioners, if they wish, to use these 60 acres of land, which are of no use now to the Government, for the purposes of an almshouse. The Secretary of the Interior, informed of this, informed this House that as a matter of discretion it did not meet his approval; and therefore it does not "go." I do not see why the report should not be adopted. If the Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his discretion, should refuse to do this thing, we are right where we were before, so far as this proposition is concerned. There is nothing in it, so far as I can see, that is in the interest of purchasing any other land. I can not for the life of me see how any other land "scheme" can come in, unless the objection is pressed that the land be used for the purpose of this other trade. That is the whole proposition.

I trust that the House, with this explanation, will adopt the conference report. This is a large bill, it is true, but it is a very good bill; and while our Democratic friends get up here and twit our Republican brethren about these large appropriations, there are not many things reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House when the bills come to the House that do not go in with the concurrence of the Democrats who are placed on the Appropriations Committee to look after the interests of the country and the Democratic party.

I yield back the balance of the time.

Mr. GROUT. Now, Mr. Speaker, if there are no other questions to be asked, I call for a vote on the report.

The question being taken, the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GROUT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I desire to call up the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 13822) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense. I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the House conferees be read in lieu of the House conference report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is this a final report?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is there a unanimous agreement?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] requests that the reading of the conference report be dispensed with, and the gentleman from Tennessee asks that the report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement of the House conferees.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it competent now, before the debate begins upon any question connected with this matter, to reserve points of order? If so, I want to make that reservation. I do not know that I shall take advantage of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa reserves all points of order upon the report.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13822) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, and 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, and 10 and agree to the same.

Amendment No. 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "the expenditure of which shall be made by the several bureaus of the War Department heretofore having jurisdiction of the same, or by the board itself, as the Secretary of War may direct, and one additional member shall be added to the said Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, who shall be an artillery officer of technical ability and experience, to be selected by the Secretary of War;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
SAMUEL J. PUGH,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. C. PERKINS,
F. E. WARREN,
B. R. TILLMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13822) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying report, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Strikes out the appropriation of $225,000 proposed by the Senate for the purchase of land on Cushing's Island, Maine.

On amendment No. 2: Requires, as proposed by the House, that certain tools, electrical and engine supplies shall be furnished by the Engineer Department.

On amendment No. 3: Limits the price to be paid for gun forgings to 21 cents per pound, as proposed by the Senate, instead of 20 cents as proposed by the House.

On amendment No. 4: Appropriates $71,000, as proposed by the Senate, for carriages for 12-inch mortars.

On amendment No. 5: Appropriates specifically, as proposed by the House, $25,000 for care, repair, and preservation of fortifications in the harbor at Galveston.

On amendment No. 6: Appropriates $15,000, as proposed by the Senate, for erecting and equipping a chemical laboratory at Sandy Hook proving ground.

On amendment No. 7: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the expenditure of the appropriation for the Board of Ordnance and Fortification shall be made by the several bureaus of the War Department or by the board itself, as the Secretary of War may direct, and provides for the addition of one artillery officer, instead of two as proposed by the Senate, to the Board of Ordnance and Fortification.

On amendment No. 8: Appropriates $50,550 for the test of the Gathmann torpedo gun.

On amendments Nos. 9 and 10: Places the proposed purchase of the Isham shell and Tuttle thorite in the discretion of the Secretary of War and provides that no money shall be paid for said patent until the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that the Government shall have a lawful right to use the same.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $7,364,011, being $225,000 less than as it passed the Senate, $136,550 more than as it passed the House, $19,617 less than the current law, and $5,097,182 less than the estimates.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
SAMUEL J. PUGH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] as much time as he may desire.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I was not present when this agreement was reached in conference, but I have since examined the bill and the report. And with one exception I have no objection to the report. I think that the Senate amendment No. 3, which increases the price of steel gun forgings from 20 to 21 cents a pound, ought not to have been agreed to; yet I assume that my colleagues on the committee did the best they could. I want to say that we pay more for these forgings than they are worth. We have been paying 22 cents a pound. That is $492.80 a ton. We now buy armor plate at $400 a ton, plus the royalty. On these steel forgings we pay no royalty, and therefore we have been paying $92 more for these forgings than we now pay for armor plate. Under the proposition now agreed to by the committee we shall pay $470.40 per ton.

I think it was unfortunate that we could not have secured in conference the reduction agreed to in the House of 2 cents per pound. Even at that rate we would have paid $48 more for this material than we do for armor plate. And, from all the information we can get, it costs little, if any, more to manufacture these than it does to manufacture armor plate. I do not propose to insist that the report at this time ought to be rejected, but I want it known that it is not a unanimous agreement on this item, but only the best that can be done now.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] was sick at the time of our conference and could not be present. The conferees on the part of the House stood by the House provision until we thought it necessary to yield.

The House will observe that we have decreased the amount of the bill as passed by the Senate to the extent of $225,000, so that the bill as now agreed upon appropriates $136,550 more than the bill as passed by the House.

On the question of gun forgings we had but little evidence. The House proposed to reduce the price from 22 cents to 20 cents per pound. The Senate fixed 21 cents a pound as the price, the result of which is that we make a net saving of about $100,000 to $150,000 a year over the amount paid under the current law. The bill as now agreed upon carries $19,617 less than the current law.

I move the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted was laid on the table.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 12396, reported from the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire about that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to call up the following bill, and to move nonconcurrence in the amendments of the Senate. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12396. To amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act.

The Senate amendments were read at length.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to consider the bill just read, and moves to nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference thereon. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Chair announces the following managers on the part of the House: Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Mr. HITT, and Mr. JONES of Virginia.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

RETURN OF BILLS FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with resolution of the House of Representatives on the 20th instant (the Senate concurring), I return herewith bills of the House (H. R. 4963 and H. R. 8998) entitled, respectively, "An act granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Churchill" and "An act granting an increase of pension to Alexander F. Hartford."

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 27, 1901.

AUTHORITY TO PIMA COUNTY, ARIZ., TO EXECUTE AND ISSUE BONDS.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report which I think will not lead to any discussion, and I ask that the statement may be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8068) to authorize the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., to execute and issue fifty-year 5 per cent bonds upon Pima County to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said county.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read and the report omitted. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was read, as follows:

Statement of the conferees to the Senate and House of Representatives as to amendments, etc., to H. R. 8068, upon which the conference committee is agreed.

First. The House agrees to the amendment of the Senate on page 3, line 9, of the original bill. The effect of this amendment is to reduce the interest upon the authorized bonds from 5 per cent to 4 per cent maximum.

On the second amendment the Senate receded from its amendment on page 3, lines 12 to 14, the effect of which is that the Senate amendment eliminated the denomination of the bonds specified to be funded and the specific amount of the same, to wit, $147,000, bonds as authorized by the original bill, and amended so as to specify legal bonded indebtedness. The Senate receding from that renders the bonds authorized by the original bill, as specified in its preamble, intact, and specifies the bonds authorized to be funded and specifies the amount.

Third. The Senate in receding from its amendment on page 3, lines 15-16, yields their amendment which destroyed the number and amount of the bonds authorized to be funded and left it as originally provided for in the House.

Fourth. The Senate receding from its amendment on page 3, line 18, wherein this amendment struck out the language denominating the bonds authorized to be funded, restores it to the number and kind authorized in the original bill.

Fifth. The House agrees to the Senate amendment striking out the preamble, with the following amendment to which the Senate agrees; that is, they strike out the words "the aforesaid," being the qualifying words referring to the denomination and kind of bonds in the preamble of the bill, and they insert in lieu of it the following, in line 12 after the word "of:" "The 147 negotiable coupon bonds, each in the sum of $1,000, and dated June 30, 1887, issued by the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., and numbered 104 to 250 inclusive." The effect of this is to knock out the preamble specifying the bonds and the history of the legislation on them, and incorporating the number and kind of bonds and the amount of the same authorized to be funded in the body of the bill, which in reality makes the bill as agreed upon by the conference committee, with the exception that it reduces the maximum interest authorized from 5 per cent to 4 per cent.

The bill as amended and agreed upon by the conference committee strips the original bill of its preamble, which specifies the bonds authorized to be funded and the legislative action leading up to them, and incorporates them in the body of the bill, which makes the bill in effect just as it was intended to be by the House, with the exception of interest as aforesaid, being 4 per cent instead of 5 per cent.

All of which is respectfully submitted to the House, and the House is respectfully asked to concur in and indorse this report.

W. S. KNOX,
L. FLETCHER,
D. E. FINLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. KNOX, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now desire to call up and have the House resume further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished work on this bill is the disposition of a motion with respect to the last Senate amendment. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HAWLEY] has fifteen minutes remaining on his motion to recede and agree to the amendment of the Senate. The gentleman from West Virginia has thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. DAYTON. I now desire, Mr. Speaker, to yield ten minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not ask the indulgence of the House for any great period on this proposition, because I do not believe that any extended discussion of the matter involved in this controversy is essential. It will be remembered that the naval bill as it passed the House omitted any reference whatever to submarine boats. In the Senate the House bill was amended so as to provide for three submarine boats of the Holland type; and the question under consideration at this time is, shall we concur in the Senate amendment and authorize the construction of three submarine boats, or shall we reaffirm the former action of the House?

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the Senate amendment. I am opposed to any further authorization of submarine boats at this time; and I desire the House to understand the situation in order that it may vote intelligently upon the question which confronts it. The Committee on Naval Affairs of the House had frequent hearings upon the question involved in this contest. The members of the various boards who are familiar with submarine boats were frequently before this committee. Testimony was taken upon every point involved in this controversy, and after careful consideration of the measure in all its details the Committee on Naval Affairs decided not to authorize the construction of any further submarine boats at this time. The reasons which impelled the committee to this action are many and obvious. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the price is not one which warrants this House at this time in authorizing the construction of these boats.

The Senate placed the maximum limit of $170,000, but we have very reliable testimony before us of men who are conversant with the construction of ships and whose sole duty is to deal with matters of this character that they ought not to cost more than from fifty to seventy-five thousand dollars, and until this matter can be definitely determined it is not wise on the part of this House to authorize the further construction at the price of $170,000 for each ship.

In the second place, Mr. Speaker, the committee decided, and I think wisely, not to authorize the further construction of submarine boats at this time because of the fact that the Holland boat was the one that they sought to insert in the Navy bill as it left the hands of our committee, and the Senate has placed the Holland boat alone in the Senate amendment; so that if this amendment is concurred in it will authorize the Secretary of the Navy to construct the Holland boat, and it alone.

In other words, the Senate amendment precludes competition. It shuts out all opposition. It restricts the Department to the construction of the Holland submarine boat alone. There are various submarine boats in existence. There are various patents and various appliances of that kind and character now. There are many submarine boats in actual operation and actual use in this country. Why then shall we authorize the construction of boats of the Holland type alone? Why not throw it open to competition if we must have them? Why not give other patentees and other systems and other inventions an opportunity, and then determine what is best? Let them contend with other constructions and other inventions and let the Secretary of the Navy test them all and try them all before authorizing the construction of any.

In the next place, we authorized, at the last session of Congress, seven submarine boats of the Holland type. Before that time we owned one. We have seven more under construction at this time. The entire matter is now in an experimental stage, and there only. Therefore is it wise that we should now authorize more submarine boats before those we have already authorized have been constructed, before they have been completed, while the whole matter is yet in an experimental stage, before we know the utility and practical value of ships of this character? Would it not be much wiser on the part of this House to wait until we have constructed, completed, and tested the seven boats we have already authorized before we vote for authorization along this line?

Mr. Speaker, I undertake to say that there are other submarine boats that should be tested; but whether that be true or not, I believe it to be the part of wisdom on the part of this House to wait until the seven boats which have already been authorized shall have been completed and tested before there is any further authorization of vessels of this character.

The French alone have been experimenting with submarine boats. Practically all the other nations of the world have abandoned experimenting with them. The French alone have been testing submarine boats, and the French nation has abandoned the Holland boat and is to-day experimenting with ships of a different character and designed by different inventors altogether. Therefore I do not deem it wise, and the Naval Committee of the House did not deem it wise, and I do not now, even after the Senate's action, deem it wise that we should construct these boats alone, authorize boats of this type alone, to the exclusion of all others that may be superior in merit and have greater demands on the intelligence of the House.

In the next place, Mr. Speaker, this House at this session refused to authorize the construction of battle ships and cruisers. We overturned the former action of the House and concurred in the Senate amendment. We refused to authorize battle ships and cruisers, and why then should we authorize submarine boats? We know what battle ships will do; they have been tested. We know what cruisers can do; they have been tried. If, then, we refuse to authorize the construction of ships of this character, that constitute the very bone and sinew of our Navy, why should we go to something that is yet in the experimental stage, that has not been tested or tried, and the value of which is denied by the Navy Department? Why should we fly from the real in order to embrace the imaginary? Under all these circumstances I deem it wise, and the committee deems it wise, that we should not concur in the Senate amendment, and we ask the House to sustain us in this contention.

I do not intend at this time, Mr. Speaker, to enter upon any discussion as to the defects of the Holland invention—as to the defects of any of its devices or its mechanical appliances. I do not think it essential at this time that the House should enter upon the technical question in order to determine whether it shall stand by its committee or stand by the Senate committee. I believe all we need to know is that this thing has never been tested, that it is in an experimental stage, and that in all the trials that have been given it it has failed in every instance to measure up to the required standard. It has not met its promises in all regards and has only fulfilled them to the extent of 75 per cent of what was originally alleged. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and I wish to say at the outset that every word which he has spoken with respect to the experimental stage of these boats and with respect to the competition which he invites has not only been denied upon the highest authority, but, in my judgment, has been absolutely disproven. There is a true economy which I think this House intends to practice, and there is an economy that will cause great waste in the increase in the Navy. We will build these boats now or we will build them hereafter under stress. The time is at hand when the immense coast of this country from Maine to Texas must be defended by these boats or we must mobilize our battle ships for that purpose.

I wish to say with respect to the gentleman's contention that we are in the experimental stage with these boats, and that he wants a universal competition, that thus far this proposition has been exploited and settled many years ago. In 1888, under Secretary Whitney, that splendid Secretary of the Navy who first inaugurated the development of the American Navy on its present lines had this action before him, and at that time invited propositions for submarine boats, and two designs were submitted, one the Holland boat and one for the Nordenfeldt, the latter boat of highest development of any submarine boat in Europe at that time. Both designs were carefully considered by the board of naval officers, and this board were unanimous in recommending the American Holland boat.

In 1889 proposals were again invited and three competitors entered, and the board again accepted the Holland boat.

In 1893, Congress having made an appropriation March 3 for the purchase of a submarine boat, this time the designs were submitted by Marcus Ruttenburg, Simon Lake, Cowles Engineering Company, Clarence C. Schmedz, Jon Ambrose, Albert Bosshard, O. Brubaker, John R. Forbes, George C. Baker, and the Holland design. Again the Holland boat received the favorable verdict of the board over all her competitors, and a contract was entered into with the Holland Company.

It might be said here that every crank in this country has undertaken to build a submarine boat who has any tendency in that direction. Shall we wait for the gentleman from Connecticut, who proposed the Argonaut, for his firm to perfect a design to be presented in competition with the Holland, when it was tried and rejected twelve years ago, and repeatedly since?

The question is whether we shall accept now that which has been indorsed by a large number of the ablest men in the United States Navy, or shall we accept the ipse dixit of a divided construction board? Mr. Speaker, the question in contention here is one between members of that board and the ablest men on the fighting line of the United States Navy.

Mr. STEELE. Why does the gentleman say that in view of the fact that we have already two and have contracted for six more? How does the question arise in this case? Where would you limit it? Would you buy 40 on the same ground?

Mr. HAWLEY. This only provides for three.

Mr. STEELE. There is a provision in the bill for six more.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; there is no provision in the bill of that kind.

Mr. STEELE. We have contracted for seven already.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well, the time will come when we shall contract for 60.

Mr. STEELE. Why not make it 60 now?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, the men who approve of the submarine boats represent the foremost figures in the American Navy, Admiral Dewey, Commander Folger, Chief Constructor of the Navy Hichborn, Commander Wainwright, Commander Mason, and Commander Kimball and Lieutenant Caldwell, and one of the great naval architects of the world, Lewis Nixon, give their unreserved indorsement of this boat. And in this able company I am entirely willing to be judged.

Mr. VANDIVER. Let me make this suggestion. This is the only one of the many submarine boats that has so fully demonstrated its usefulness as to receive the approval of the Navy Department of any government on earth.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; not only is that so, but to-day I am reliably informed that the English Government is having this boat built at a higher price than this company proposes to charge the American Government. Mr. Speaker, as there are a number of gentlemen who want to talk on this subject, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois). The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Chair mean that I have occupied twelve minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; but the gentleman has three minutes of his own time and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] has the remainder of the time, which is six minutes; there are nine minutes altogether.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 164. Joint resolution giving the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to provide for the public comfort.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 13865. An act relative to the suit instituted for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I shall want to occupy the full amount of my time, but I want to yield now eight minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas argued that we ought not to throw this contract open to public competition because every "crank" in the United States is making an effort to meet the requirements of the Government in this matter. The gentlemen whom I represent are constituents of mine. I do not know Mr. Lake, the president of this company, except as I have spoken to him probably for five or six minutes. I do know some of the other gentlemen who constitute this company and who ask the privilege of making an American bid for American ships. The proposition of the gentleman from Texas is that this matter be closed up, and that in violation of the wish of the Secretary of the Navy, in violation of the recommendation of the board which has had this matter under consideration, this contract be arbitrarily awarded to a specified company. The gentleman speaks of "cranks." It may be that the gentlemen who constitute this company are "cranks," but they certainly are more expert in building ships than in building lobbies. They come here asking only the privilege——

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I think the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] misunderstands the situation. The Navy Department in 1889 advertised for bids for the construction of submarine boats, believing these to be an effective implement of naval warfare. A number of bids were made. Again in 1894 the Department advertised for bids, and very few were submitted. Finally, against competition, and because this seemed to be the best weapon, the Department ordered this boat. That is all there is about the matter.

Mr. HILL. I do not think I misunderstand this situation; and in order that the House may not misunderstand it I will read the conclusion of the board of construction.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. What is the date?

Mr. HILL. It is from the New York Sun, under the date of January 5, 1901.

In conclusion, the board has this to say: Should Congress see fit to authorize any more submarine boats, the board is of the opinion that no special type should be specified, but that the Secretary of the Navy should have discretion to contract for such boats as are in his judgment most likely to prove most efficient and the best suited for naval purposes, thus opening up competition and giving other inventors a chance.

Mr. DAYTON. The gentleman will allow me to say that that is the recommendation of the Board of Construction for the present year.

Mr. HILL. Certainly. That is the latest and the official statement of the Navy Department upon this question.

I have further reports, copied from the New York Tribune, criticising the various vessels. I have here a statement of the competitive trials made by foreign nations, as well as the United States, showing the speed of these vessels on the surface, as well as their submarine speed.

I am not presenting any new proposition. The gentlemen who constitute the Lake Submarine Company are gentlemen of respectability—Mr. Skidmore, of the Skidmore Iron Works, of Bridgeport, Conn.; Mr. Ferris, himself a large shipowner of my State, and other gentlemen of like character, who have put their money into this company; who are not carrying on an experiment, but are actually building the boats to-day for commercial use—boats that will go to the bottom of the ocean; that will traverse the bottom of the ocean; that will open at the side and allow men to go out and dismantle wrecks and secure the valuables therein and bring them in, not boats that are being simply submitted to Congress under the influence and strength of a strong lobby to secure $70,000 apiece for ships when they can be built for $50,000 to $75,000.

That is the character of the proposition I am bringing before the House. I am not asking that these gentlemen have any favors shown to them, but only that when this Government is in need of supplies the matter shall be thrown open to public competition. If these gentlemen can not meet the requirements, they will simply withdraw; if they can meet the requirements, they will put in their bid.

Mr. HAWLEY. They have been before the board three times.

Mr. HILL. I decline to yield. I have but a few moments. I ask the privilege of printing in the RECORD two documents, one submitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs by the Lake Submarine Company and the other from that company calling attention to the various styles of architecture for submarine boats.

This is a plain proposition. The gentlemen who desire the contract for the Holland type of submarine boats come here asking that, in violation of the request of the Secretary of the Navy, in violation of the report of the Construction Bureau, we arbitrarily compel the Department to buy something which the Department says it does not want, and which, as the amendment admits, has not yet been tested. The proposition is based on only one condition—if one boat should be satisfactory, then the Government is to buy more.

A MEMBER. Buy all.

Mr. HILL. Yes, buy all; and bar out every other party that may wish to come in and make a bid. If I had time I would read these letters. I ask to insert them in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore submitted the request, and there was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

DEAR SIR: I understand there is a bill before the House to build additional submarine boats, in which a special type is named, notwithstanding that the Board on Construction and the Secretary of the Navy recommend that "if additional submarine boats are to be built no particular type be designated," thus opening up competition, in which the Government may obtain the best type obtainable.

As a builder of these submarine boats, and one who has spent many years in the study and development of submarine boats, the company which I represent would like to have the privilege of bidding on such craft, believing it would accrue to the great advantage of the Government if we were allowed to do so, and from which at present we are debarred by legislation in favor of one company.

The following letter from the Secretary of the Navy will explain itself:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 28, 1901.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 22d instant, stating that you understand there is a proposition before Congress to build additional submarine torpedo boats, and asking to be informed as to the proper method to get the merits of your type of vessel considered, I have to inform you that the board of construction, to which your letter was referred, reports as follows:

"So far as known to the board of construction there is no proposition before Congress to build additional submarine torpedo boats, nor is there now any appropriation for conducting experiments with such boats.

"The board has not sufficient data concerning the Lake submarine boat to express an intelligent opinion as to its probable efficiency.

"Should there be an appropriation for submarine boats, in which no special type is designated, the question of the Lake submarine boat could then be considered."

In view of the foregoing report the Department is unable to give consideration at the present time to the question of experiments with your boat. However, should Congress make an appropriation for submarine boats in which no special type is designated, the availability of your type of submarine boat will be given consideration.

Very respectfully,

JNO. D. LONG,
Secretary.

Mr. SIMON LAKE,
President the Lake Submarine Company,
Bowling Green Building, No. 11 Broadway, New York.

From the above letter it will be observed that the Navy Department is not sufficiently familiar with my type of vessel "to enable it to express an intelligent opinion as to its probable efficiency;" and also that if an appropriation is made in which no special type is designated the availability of my type will be given consideration. On behalf of the company which I represent I will say: We are not asking for an appropriation at this time to build these boats. All we want is an investigation of the merits of our type of vessel, and for which our company is willing to provide the boat and all expenses connected with our end of the necessary experiments. But it appears from the Secretary's letter that the Government can not at the present time investigate it, because there is no appropriation that would permit them to do so.

As to the merits of our vessel, will say our boat, the Argonaut, has been forty-eight hours on one continuous voyage at sea, part of that time during a storm. Ours is the only submarine vessel that has ever traveled on the bottom of the ocean. During the Spanish-American war the Argonaut entered Hampton Roads in the night when the Road was patrolled. During this time the country was in dread of the Spanish fleet, and, notwithstanding the fact that the searchlights on Fortress Monroe were playing all night, we were not discovered, although we finally anchored within one-eighth of a mile of the mines and remained there in a partly submerged condition all night. We have the capacity (not possessed by other types) of destroying cables and submarine mines, and have actually picked them up from the bottom. We claim for our type greater speed and seaworthiness, and greater stability and efficiency in every respect, than that obtainable by any other type of submarine vessel. We have made long, continuous voyages under water; we have had 28 people submerged in our vessel for a period of four hours at one time, during which time a meal was prepared and served, two hours of which time we had no communication with the surface. Our type of vessel is also capable of making sea voyages to foreign countries.

We claim the ability to remain submerged for weeks at a time, if necessary, and to travel accurate courses while submerged.

I am aware that some of above claims will probably be denied by people who know nothing of what our years of experiments have developed, but all we ask is an investigation, and for which we are willing to bear our portion of the expense.

Yours, very respectfully, ——— ———.

NEW YORK, January 21, 1901.

DEAR SIR: It is reported that there is to be a bill presented before Congress authorizing the purchase of additional submarine boats for the United States Navy. If this is true I would like to have an opportunity of submitting plans for supplying some of such craft. I have been in the submarine boat business for a number of years, and the Argonaut is well known as being one of the most successful submarine boats ever built. Of course she is not a submarine torpedo boat; she has been built for commercial purposes; but vessels of her type are equally well adapted for torpedo boats. They would only need to be fitted with torpedo tubes and storage batteries to make them independent of surface connections. I submitted plans to the Secretary of the Navy in 1893 for such a vessel, but as I was not familiar with the proper methods of presenting a bid for naval work I was disqualified, although afterwards I was informed by some high authorities in Washington that my plans were considered the most practical of any presented.

I finally received a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, returning my plans and stating that as my plans were not in accordance with the regulations they could not be considered in the competition, this notwithstanding the fact that the circular requesting inventors to submit proposals distinctly stated that even if the plans submitted were informal they would be taken into consideration. Fortunately my type of vessel was equally as well adapted for commercial purpose as for war. I therefore devoted my attention to that branch of the business. As you are aware, Congress in 1893 appropriated $200,000 for the purpose of developing the ideas of another inventor, and a contract was made for building a vessel of that type, which vessel is still uncompleted. Since that time the Government has purchased another vessel of the same type, and has authorized the building of six more.

In 1897 the Argonaut was completed and experimented with in the Chesapeake Bay and on the Atlantic coast, and was the first entirely successful boat ever built. At that time she was only 36 feet long, yet some naval officers who were on board while she was at Hampton Roads, Virginia, during the Spanish-American war, said she would have proven invaluable in cutting cables and destroying the mine defenses along the coast and at Santiago, even in her condition at that time. At that time I again tried to interest the Government in my type of vessel, but owing to my inexperience in that line, I did not succeed in getting a hearing.

Now, however, in view of the fact that there has already been appropriated over $1,000,000 for experimenting with another type of vessel, I think it will be to the advantage of the Government if the merits of other types should be considered. I send under another cover a pamphlet descriptive of my style of submarine boat, the Argonaut, which will give you some information as to what I have accomplished. This pamphlet only relates to the commercial features of her type of vessel, but I have in preparation another pamphlet which relates directly to the use of this type of vessel for naval purposes, which will be ready in a few days.

I read a paper before the Naval Militia in New York some time ago and illustrated the method of defending our coast and harbors by the use of submarine vessels of the Argonaut type, and invited criticism; there were also a number of the regular naval officers present; but they all said there was no criticism to make; they believed there was no method known to naval science that could compete with vessels of the Argonaut type when fitted with storage batteries and whitehead torpedoes.

Lieutenant Commander Kimball told me when in Baltimore he believed a vessel of the Argonaut type could enter any harbor in the world and destroy their mine defenses. Admiral Hichborn, in a recent article in the Engineering Magazine, said: "The Lake boat gives good promise of efficiency." "A boat of her type fitted with a true submarine motor might be very valuable in the attack of a mine field." The Argonaut type of vessel has numerous advantages over previous or existing types of submarine vessels, which are protected by numerous fundamental patents and can not be embodied in other vessels without infringement. Its characteristic features are:

First. Automatically maintaining the trim of the vessel while submerged.

Second. Automatically regulating the depth of submergence.

Third. Ability to steer long and correct courses when submerged, without the necessity of frequently coming to the surface to correct the same.

Fourth. Means for communicating with the shore or another submarine or surface vessel while on picket duty.

Fifth. Means whereby divers may readily leave and reenter the boat while submerged, no water entering the boat while the door is open.

Sixth. Ability to guide the vessel toward or away from an enemy while submerged, without exposure of position.

Seventh. Ability to cut and destroy cables and mine defenses.

Eighth. Means for traveling either on the surface, awash, submerged at any predetermined depth, or on the bottom.

Ninth. Means for recharging the batteries while submerged.

Tenth. The ability to travel submerged and at the same time receive an abundance of pure air in its natural condition.

Eleventh. Seaworthiness. Vessels of her type are more seaworthy than purely surface boats and are as capable of making long voyages; the superstructure affords sufficient fuel storage capacity, and also provides a deck, which is a very desirable thing for long cruises.

Twelfth. Her type affords sufficient and comfortable crews' quarters. (See page 15 of pamphlet, when a party of twenty-eight were entertained below the surface.)

Thirteenth. The type is adaptable for being utilized as tenders to cruisers or battle ships, for harbor or coast defense purposes, or for submarine cruisers or gunboats for offensive purposes in foreign waters.

Fourteenth. Provision for the escape of the crew in case of total disablement of the vessel. In addition to the above especial features, the boats have all the advantages possessed by other submarine craft, as all the more important boats of recent years have been simply combinations of old principles, known and described years ago, and are not, as is the Argonaut type, protected by broad or basic patents. A list of these patents will be found on page 27 of the pamphlet.

I have at present plans, and in preparation others, for submarine torpedo boats of the Argonaut type, which will be ready to submit to the naval authorities at an early day.

I shall be glad to answer any questions that you may desire to ask upon this subject, either by correspondence or by personal interview, as may be your pleasure.

Yours, respectfully,

SIMON LAKE.

Hon. JAMES R. YOUNG, Washington D. C.

Mr. HILL. The proposition is that we shall buy these boats whether the Department wants them or not. The Navy Department is against this proposition; the Bureau of Construction is against it, and the Secretary of the Navy has officially declared himself against it in his report. Yet it is proposed to force this contract upon the Government and to limit the work to one party. This is not in accordance with American methods; it is not in accord with our way of doing things.

All I ask in the amendment which I have submitted is that this matter shall be left discretionary with the Secretary of the Navy and that if he should think it wise to purchase any of these boats the matter shall be thrown open to public competition, he himself specifying the design and character of the boats to be built. We ask nothing more; and it seems to me that in sound business judgment we should not be content with anything less.

I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I insist that gentlemen on the other side should now exhaust their time, after which I will yield to a gentleman to close the debate.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I insist that if the gentleman is to give out further time on his side before he closes, he should give it out now.

Mr. DAYTON. I do not propose to close the debate, but as soon as you shall exhaust your time, I propose to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the remainder of the time that he may close the debate. I have already spoken on this question and do not wish to speak further, but I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and insert a large amount of material touching this matter that may be of interest to members of the House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I object to that.

Mr. DAYTON. Very well. I do not care about it particularly.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a table of speeds and comparative tests of results with various boats in Europe and America.

Mr. HAWLEY. I object.

Mr. HILL. I should think you would.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois). The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH].

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I have usually—in fact, I might say always—taken pride in following the recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. STEELE. Do not break your record now.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would not break my record now, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] intimates I ought not to do, were it not for the fact that the Committee on Naval Affairs have reversed their own position. In the last Congress they unanimously reported a measure in favor of the purchase of submarine boats.

Mr. DAYTON. I hope the gentleman will permit me to correct that impression in the House. The committee never reported a provision in favor of these boats. The provision came over from the Senate committee just like it has now.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And you accepted it.

Mr. DAYTON. The conferees accepted it like they do many other objectionable provisions.

Mr. HAWLEY. Did not you vote for it in conference?

Mr. DAYTON. I voted for it in the final conference because it was insisted on, and not otherwise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I reassert what I stated a moment ago—that the Committee on Naval Affairs have reversed themselves. Now, I am of the opinion that it is wise for this Government to adopt such implements for naval defense as our best authority maintains would be proper and right. I have gone over every line of the testimony taken by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I find that one of the best men that ever sat at the head of the Bureau of Construction—Admiral Hichborn, who only ceased active duties yesterday and retires on the 4th of March—has commended this submarine boat in the highest terms. Listen to his testimony, and then let the Committee on Naval Affairs criticise this latest and most effective weapon of naval warfare. The 1st of December, 1900, Admiral Hichborn made this statement in a formal report to the Navy Department with reference to the Holland submarine boat:

> The last year has brought to fruition the experimental work, covering a considerable period, and has demonstrated the practicability of the submarine boat. The vessel which the Department recently acquired has shown herself capable of such perfect control in the vertical plane that she may be kept within a few inches of any desired depth while moving, or brought to the surface and taken under again in a very short time; her direction and control in the horizontal plane on the surface is effected with the same facility as any other craft, and submerged is limited only by the difficulties of vision; her crew are provided for on board with reasonable comfort and perfect safety for such periods as she may be in service, and working either upon the surface or submerged; and her armament, consisting entirely of torpedoes, gives her great offensive power.

In spite of the unsuitableness of the forms of power generators at present available for a vessel running both on the surface and submerged, there is attained, under both conditions, a speed which, while not all that is desirable, will make the vessel capable of efficient service as an element for coast defense. Of the possibilities in the application of efficient submarine vessels to coast-defense work it is not necessary to speak; nor is it necessary to do more than mention the economy of men and money in this form of defensive preparation and the moral effect upon an enemy which will come from a knowledge that we possess and are employing for coast and harbor defense vessels of so great possibilities. At least one European nation having a considerable coast line to defend has entered seriously upon the construction of submarine vessels, and has in hand or projected a considerable number of this class of vessel.

Experience has shown that the appearance of any particular type of fighting craft in sufficient numbers to make its possibilities a factor to be considered forces modifications in types previously existing. That this should be particularly the case with submarine vessels there is every reason to believe, and there can be little doubt that to the first nation in the field with the new type will accrue not only the advantages which will come from the possession of efficient vessels of this type, but the additional advantage in saving in cost which will result from an early understanding of the new type and the modifications which its introduction will force in existing types.

What becomes of the statement of the acting chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs that it is a dangerous boat? It is dangerous to the enemy, but we find Admiral Hichborn says her crew can ride her in perfect safety.

Mr. DAYTON. You quote one; I quote four, O'Neil, Melville, Bradford, and Woodward.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Only yesterday Admiral Hichborn received the highest commendatory letter that the Department of the Navy has given to any of its chief naval constructors, and he is commended to-day by the press over the country for his skill in superintending and directing the construction of some of our best and most powerful ships of war. What does he say about the price of this boat? He says it is reasonable considering the delicate character of her mechanism and the work performed. The laborer is worthy of his hire. Admiral Hichborn says: "The Holland to-day is an improvement on anything that has ever been built in the history of the world." This is the most formidable naval weapon of which the world has any knowledge. Why not let this Government avail itself of it? The Committee on Naval Affairs authorized the purchase of five or six last year at an expense of $170,000, and yet one of the Committee on Naval Affairs comes here to-day and has the audacity to tell this Congress sitting in solemn session that these boats can be bought for $50,000. The great Naval Constructor Hichborn does not take this view, and the Navy Department does not indorse it.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I can not yield. I have only a few minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan declines to yield.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The Admiral says that this submarine boat is the most effective boat that has been devised, and that one shot from the Holland would destroy the most powerful battle ship in the world. What do the Committee on Naval Affairs say to that, and to the following evidence of the efficiency of the Holland as a weapon of warfare, contained in Senate Document No. 71:

Lieut. Nathan Sargent, the commanding officer of the U. S. S. Scorpion, one of the blockading squadron at Newport, says:

"The moral effect of an anticipated attack from the Holland submarine boat was great."

Capt. William M. Folger (formerly Chief of Ordnance of the United States Navy), commanding the U. S. battle ship Kearsarge, the flagship of the blockading squadron, says in his report:

"It is clear that the Holland type will play a very serious part in future naval warfare. There is no doubt whatever that the vessel at Newport can approach a turret ship unseen, either by night or day. Her only danger is she may be run over herself by picket or large vessel."

Admiral Farquhar, the commander in chief of the North Atlantic Squadron, which was blockading Newport, after witnessing the performances of the Holland, states:

"The Holland impressed everyone with the idea that under ordinary circumstances she could always get in a torpedo either day or night without being discovered."

The Holland arrived at Newport June 24 last, and Lieut. Harry H. Caldwell, of Admiral Dewey's staff, was assigned to command her. The annual report of the commander of the torpedo station says, under date of September 1, 1900:

"Up to the present date the boat has made 10 runs entirely under the control of the Navy crew."

Under date of September 27 last Lieutenant Caldwell makes a lengthy report, and, among other things, says:

"She (the Holland) is in excellent condition.

"There have been many minor accidents, but I think fewer than on the ordinary torpedo boats."

Commander N. E. Mason, United States Navy, in charge of the torpedo station at Newport, R. I., makes a lengthy report to the Department on the workings of the Holland, under date of October 1 last. He says:

"In my opinion the Holland has been a grand success so far, and for some time the naval crew have had entire charge of her, under command of Lieutenant Caldwell, running and working her both night and day without the presence of any of the Holland experts.

"Having made several dives in the boat myself with the naval crew alone, I am of the opinion that they are competent in every way to maneuver and manipulate the boat successfully.

"During the late combined maneuvers of the fleet, shore defenses, and the torpedo flotilla the Holland made a successful attack on the fleet at night by herself, without convoy, at a distance of 7 miles out from the mouth of the harbor and with the naval crew alone in her."

Also, letter of Admiral Dewey, Senate Document No. 122:

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of even date, with inclosures, relative to the Holland submarine boat, and particularly to an amendment which you propose to offer to the pending naval appropriation bill providing for the construction by contract of 7 additional boats of this type.

Replying to the first of the questions which you propound, viz, whether or not, in view of the favorable reports made by officers of the Navy upon the U. S. S. Holland since she has been in possession of the Government, I agree with those officers as to the great value of this type of boat for harbor and coast defense, I have to state that I do, and that my opinion as to its value has not changed since my testimony before the House Committee on Naval Affairs in April last.

Referring to your second question, asking if I entertain the same views with regard to an appropriation for 7 additional submarine boats during this session, as does Rear-Admiral Hichborn, who recommends that the Government shall continue the construction of the Holland boats, I have to state that the Secretary of the Navy having, in a letter to the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs under date of the 9th instant, set forth the policy of the Department concerning the construction of additional submarine boats at this time, it would, in my judgment, be unbecoming in me to express a different opinion.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE DEWEY,
Admiral, United States Navy.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Statement of Admiral George Dewey, April 3, 1900:

Admiral Dewey said:

"Gentlemen: I saw the operation of the boat down off Mount Vernon the other day. Several members of this committee were there. I think we were all very much impressed with its performance. My aid, Lieutenant Caldwell, was on board. He could tell, if necessary, what was done from the inside. The boat did everything that the owners proposed to do. And I said then, and I have said it since, that if they had had two of those things in Manila I never could have held it with the squadron I had. The moral effect—to my mind it is infinitely superior to mines or torpedoes or anything of the kind. With those craft moving under water it would wear people out. With two of those in Galveston all the navies of the world could not blockade that place."

And the following from Lieutenant Caldwell, commander of the Holland, contained in Senate Document No. 115:

Letter from Lieut. Harry H. Caldwell, U. S. N., commanding submarine torpedo boat Holland.

U. S. S. HOLLAND, Navy-Yard, Norfolk, Va., January 12, 1901.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 11th instant, I take pleasure in answering your questions as follows:

1. Q. How long have you commanded the Holland?

A. The Holland has been under my charge from June 25, 1900, to the present time. She was formally placed in commission under my command on October 12, 1900.

2. Q. What is the longest submerged run you have made in her?

A. About 1½ miles.

3. Q. Do you consider her durable, habitable, and reliable as a vessel of war for coast and harbor defense?

A. Yes.

4. Q. Commander Mason, of the torpedo station, says in a report to the Secretary: "During the late combined maneuvers of the fleet, shore defenses, and the torpedo flotilla the Holland made a successful attack upon the fleet at night by herself, without convoy, at a distance of 7 miles out from the mouth of the harbor and with the naval crew alone in her." Did you command the Holland upon this occasion? If so, describe how you made the attack and whether you considered it a success.

A. The Holland was under my command on the occasion mentioned. She left the torpedo station at sundown and was placed in a partially submerged condition, with the turret and about 6 inches of the hull above water, ready to dive at short notice. Cruised in this condition to southward and eastward of Brentons Reef light-ship. Sighted two vessels of blockading fleet and fired torpedo signal at them, but was not answered, and they disappeared before I could ascertain their identity. About 9 p. m., about 7 miles south-southeast from harbor entrance, sighted U. S. S. Kearsarge within range and fired torpedo signal. Followed her and, getting within 100 yards without being discovered, showed light, hailed her, and informed her commanding officer that she had been torpedoed. The Holland was not seen by any vessel of the blockading fleet or torpedo boat, although she was within torpedo range of three of the former and several of the latter. I consider that the attack was a success, because the Holland could, in all probability, have torpedoed three blockading vessels without being discovered.

5. Q. Please give your opinion as to the value of the Holland as a coast and harbor defense vessel.

A. I consider her of very great value for that purpose.

6. Q. Would you be willing to command her in case of war with a foreign power that was blockading some of our ports and harbors; and if so, what do you believe you could do with her toward breaking the blockade?

A. Yes. I believe that I could sink one or more vessels of a blockading fleet or else make them keep so far away as to make the blockade ineffective.

7. Q. Do you believe, with six of the Holland boats under your command, having trained crews composed of American men and officered by men of your own selection, that you could break a blockade of New York City made by 15 ships of war? If so, describe how you would do it.

A. Yes. By direct night attacks, approaching the fleet from different directions in partially submerged condition and diving when discovered. If the fleet kept underway, by lying in wait at different points of its course or accompanying a decoy blockade runner.

8. Q. Would it not be a wise provision for the Government to build from five to ten of these Holland boats this year in addition to the seven now under construction, and distribute them among our principal ports and harbors in case of war?

A. In my opinion, decidedly yes.

9. Q. From your experience in command of the Holland, can she go 10 miles or more to sea and make a successful attack on the enemy's fleet by day or night?

A. By night, undoubtedly; by day, in all probability.

10 Q. How is it proposed to take the Holland back from Norfolk; and, if unable to return under her own power, explain why?

A. I am not officially informed how the Navy Department proposes to return the Holland to Annapolis. She could return under her own power, though I should not consider it advisable, as her main motor is disabled through an armature bar being burned out, so that she can not back. She made the last 60 miles of her voyage from Annapolis under this condition.

Very respectfully,

H. H. CALDWELL,
Lieutenant, U. S. N., Commanding.

Hon. R. B. HAWLEY,
Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

What does the committee say of this, as well as the unqualified indorsement of Commander Richard Wainwright, former commander of the U. S. S. Gloucester?

I commend to the Naval Committee the letter of the Secretary of the Navy addressed to you January 9, 1901, wherein he says:

The question with the Department is not so much the desirability of submarine boats. This may be regarded as largely settled by the fact that one is now in commission and has given promise of great possible efficiency, and that seven more have been authorized by act of Congress and are now in process of construction, although like many other new inventions they can not be said to have entirely passed the experimental stage in respect to actual service.

The question with the Department is rather whether the construction of an additional number should be authorized until those now under construction are finished and their usefulness further assured. On this ground, there being no pressing exigency for more, and especially in view of the large naval expenditures in hand and estimated for, the Department does not regard further expenditure in this direction essential at this time.

The Senate amendment provides that the present appropriation shall not be available until the first boat now being constructed for the Government shall have been accepted by the Secretary of the Navy.

But, Mr. Speaker, the opponents of the amendment urge that the price is excessive. In answer to this your attention is called to extract from report of board on construction to Chairman FOSS, dated January 2, 1901:

10. As regards the cost of the present boats, namely, $170,000 each, the board is of the opinion that if the cost of construction, with a reasonable profit to the contractors, is alone considered, it is a very high price; but if the expenses of the company in developing the boat are taken into consideration, the price is not excessive.

Also to the fact that the Dahlgren, 143 tons, an ordinary type of torpedo boat, cost for hull and machinery $194,000.

When the Secretary of the Navy purchased the Holland he compelled the Holland Company to enter into an agreement, which is dated April 11, 1900, and contained in Senate Document No. 321, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session. This agreement provides that the Holland Company should not charge more than $170,000 apiece for these boats, and leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to pay as much less as he sees fit. The fact is that he has already contracted for seven boats at $170,000 each. It would thus appear that he does not agree with Admiral Melville, who says that the boats should cost not more than $50,000 or $60,000.

But the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] says competition is denied. He is mistaken. Competition has been allowed and this type selected. It is time to have competition when any new inventor builds a boat and complies with the requirements of the Navy Department. I like competition, but there can be no competition with undeveloped ideas.

In 1889, proposals were invited by the Navy Department for submarine boats, and this time three bids were received—from Geo. C. Baker, of Des Moines, Iowa; M. P. Hayes, of Virginia; and the Columbian Iron Works, of Baltimore, Md. The design submitted by the Columbian Iron Works was the Holland boat. The competition was again decided in favor of the Holland boat, and it was recommended by the Chief of Ordnance that a contract for the boat be entered into with the company.

Designs for submarine boats were again advertised for by the Navy Department in May, 1893, Congress having made an appropriation March 3, 1893, for the purchase of a submarine boat. This time the designs submitted were as follows: Those of Marcus Ruttenburg, Simon Lake, Cowles Engineering Company, Clarence B. Schnetz, Jon. Ambrose, Albert Bosshard, O. Brubaker, John R. Forbes, George C. Baker, and the Holland designs.

Again the Holland boat received the favorable verdict of the board over all her competitors, and upon the recommendation of the board a contract was entered into with the Holland Company for the present submarine boat Plunger.

(According to the Report of Bureau of Ordnance for 1894, dated October 1, 1894, contained in Annual Report Secretary of the Navy for 1894–95, pp. 336 to 350.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. I extend the gentleman the balance of my time.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. You can buy twenty of these submarine boats of this type for one-half what it will cost to build one battle ship; and I think we have reached that point, Mr. Speaker, when we can afford to forego some of the pride of offensive warfare and buy some implements that will defend our coast against possible danger. I am in favor of availing ourselves of this privilege. I am not one of those who are in favor of driving the inventor, whose genius and skill invented these ships, to European countries to be appreciated, as we have the inventions of Maxim, Hotchkiss, Gatling, and others. I take my information from high officers of the Navy, and not from the promoters of this invention, and feel that we should avail ourselves of this type of ship at the lowest possible cost.

So I say it comes with ill grace from the Committee on Naval Affairs, after urging us to build six of them at an expense of $170,000 apiece, to now walk in here and say they have made a bad bargain, when Admiral Dewey and other naval experts say we have not. For one I decline to follow such leadership. I prefer to follow the advice of Admiral Hichborn, Admiral Farquhar, Admiral Dewey, and Lieutenant Caldwell, who is placed in charge of the Holland. He says that with 5 of these ships he could break a blockade of New York Harbor consisting of 15 battle ships of any European government on earth. What has come over the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Are they afraid that if we inaugurate this policy that no more battle ships will be authorized and the opportunity for attractive display will become a thing of the past? Let us avail ourselves of the genius of this American inventor, and carry out the recommendations of our most successful naval constructor. It has been tried. Admiral Hichborn says it has; that he has been in her, knows her mechanism and safety, and I prefer to take his judgment rather than the judgment of men who have never been upon the Holland and do not know any of its workings or effectiveness. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from New York has one minute remaining.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Connecticut, I want to say that in 1888, under Secretary Whitney's administration, the Navy Department invited proposals for submarine boats. Two designs were submitted, one for a Holland boat, and one for the Nordenfeldt boat. The latter was the highest development of the submarine boat at that time. Both designs were carefully considered by a board of naval officers. This board was unanimous in recommending the American, or Holland, boat. In 1889 proposals were again invited by the Navy Department for submarine boats. Three bids were received, one from George C. Baker, of Des Moines; one from M. P. Hayes, of Virginia, and one from the Columbian Iron Works, of Baltimore.

The design submitted by the latter was the Holland boat. The Chief of Ordnance recommended that a contract for the Holland boat be made with the Columbian Iron Works Company. On March 3, 1893, Congress made an appropriation for the purchase of a submarine boat. Designs were again advertised for by the Navy Department in May following. The designs submitted were those of Marcus Ruttenburg, Simon Lake—this was the boat known as the Argonaut—the very boat which the gentleman from Connecticut is now advertising—the Cowles Engineering Company, Clarence B. Schnetz, Jon Ambrose, Albert Bosshard, O. Brubaker, John R. Forbes, George C. Baker, and the Holland designs. The Holland boat received the favorable verdict of the board over all her competitors, and upon the recommendation of the board a contract was made with the Holland company.

My friend from Connecticut need not deny this statement, for all the facts are contained in the Report of the Bureau of Ordnance for 1894, and were contained in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy, 1894–95, pages 306 to 350.

Thus there have been three competitions for submarine boats, and all resulted in favor of the Holland. Now, Mr. Speaker, this Board of Construction, to which the gentleman from Connecticut has referred, is the same board that drew up the requirements for the present Holland boat. The Board of Inspection and Survey declared that this boat filled every requirement, including an additional requirement made by the Secretary of the Navy. Therefore I say that this Board of Construction has had its day in court and is estopped from coming in here at this time and attempting to reopen the question again.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all that the Senate asks is that in case these additional submarine torpedo boats fulfill the requirements and act to the satisfaction of the Secretary, he shall be authorized and directed to build three more of them.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. OTEY. I would like to submit a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to extend all courtesy, but is that relative to this topic?

Mr. OTEY. Yes.

Mr. DAYTON. Is it to have something printed in the RECORD?

Mr. OTEY. Nothing at all. I just want about thirty-three seconds.

Mr. DAYTON. Then go on.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, there is no man living who knows the opinion which I entertain on this question, and probably would not know after I got through; and I ask unanimous consent to address the House for ten minutes.

Mr. DAYTON. I am constrained to object to that.

Mr. OTEY. I will compromise on five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman in charge of the bill is constrained to object.

Mr. DAYTON. I yield twelve minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with attention to the gentlemen who have talked touching this proposition. I have been confused by statements and counter statements. "I told you so," says one naval constructor; "you are mistaken," says another. So that, Mr. Speaker, I have been compelled to resort to the hearings before the Naval Committee and to inquire what is the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, and to inquire further, as there is a difference of opinion between the naval constructors and the naval board, where the preponderance is. And also to inquire, in the light of these inquires, what is the necessity for speed in this exact legislation at this time. I have no pride of opinion about it. I would hardly know one of these submarine boats from an elephant if I were to see it. [Laughter.] So that I must resort to the hearings.

Now it seems to me this is the condition: Two days ago the House of Representatives, by a vote of 158 to 80, said the time had come to call a halt, so far as further authorizations are concerned for naval construction, and it did that, too, touching the battle ships and cruisers. It takes from three to four years to build a battle ship or a cruiser. Still, we said we will wait another year before we will authorize the construction of these great marine engines of war. Well, now, from that standpoint let us inquire about these submarine destroyers. Working stress, says this hearing, they can build one of these submarine boats in five months; not four years, not three years, but in five months.

Admiral O'Neil says, in substance, we are about to have six or seven of them completed in April next, and that there is no immediate use for them; and, he says: "As they can be readily constructed I recommend that the further construction of the boats be dispensed with for the present." So says Melville; so say the majority of this board; so says the Secretary of the Navy. So that it is not a case where there is an absolute necessity to have these boats for present use. If we are constructing for a future war, we had better construct the ships that take three or four years and let the five-months' boats wait.

Now, then, so much for that. I am not going to try to discuss the merits, but I want the attention of the House a minute to what this bill does by Senate amendment. It was born in the Senate last year and accepted by the conference committee in the House. Here it comes again, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to contract for three additional boats with the highest bidder? No; but at not exceeding $170,000 per boat of the Holland company. All the balance of the world, every shipyard in the United States, is barred out, and there is an absolute contract to give $170,000 a boat to this company.

Mr. VANDIVER. It does not say the "Holland Company," it says the "Holland type."

Mr. CANNON. You say the Holland Company owns the Holland patents and nobody else but the Government and the Holland Company could build the boat.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Wherein does that policy in giving discretion to the Secretary of the Navy, or commanding him to do it, differ from what Congress did in giving him the authority to contract with a monopoly for the supply of armor plate?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I will not be switched off upon that. If that contract was wrong, two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I only wanted to bring the attention of the gentleman to that fact.

Mr. CANNON. Now, how much are these boats worth? Why, read the hearings, and here is Admiral Melville and Admiral O'Neil both agreeing that these boats are worth from fifty to seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Admiral Hichborn says that they are worth what they cost.

Mr. CANNON. Admiral Hichborn is a good man and I like him, but I am not going to pin my faith to him when a majority of the people, who are equally able, say no. Now, then, this boat costs fifty or seventy-five thousand dollars and this bill proposes to pay $170,000.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will my friend yield to me? I know he does not wish to misstate the facts.

Mr. CANNON. Let me finish this statement first and then I will do it. Now, then, if this man deserves well of his country, he has already had contracts, at the rate of $170,000 a boat, for his boats. Now, it is alleged that the first one that he built cost more than a hundred and seventy thousand dollars, but it is nowhere alleged—and such, I am informed, is the truth—that the others cost far less, so that he has had six or seven hundred thousand dollars clean profit. That is enough, especially as we do not need the boats, and especially as the Secretary of the Navy says "No."

Now, then, gentlemen may say that the Government can not construct this boat. Yes it can. The Government, when there is an article that it desires to use, whether it is patented or not, goes to work and uses it and constructs it, and the question of payment of damages comes afterwards. The Government is the only entity that can do that. But, they say, keep it from going abroad. Why, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] informed us the other day that there was a contract by this company for five of them abroad. I do not know whether he was fully informed about it or not, but that was his statement.

I always look with disfavor upon legislation that ties the hands of the Government and says there shall be no competition, but that a contract shall be given to a certain concern to the exclusion of all the balance of the world. I know, then, that you ought to be able to say that was the only thing in the world that could build this best thing in the world, and there was no other way to do it. I know upon the merits you ought to be able to say that, and if you are not able to say that, then I would take it by the throat and say, Halt, there is a cat in the meal or a nigger in the wood pile! [Laughter.]

Now, that is about all I want to say about it. We can halt. We get 6 more of these boats in April, at $170,000 each, under a former contract, that does not cost over fifty or seventy-five thousand dollars a boat to build. That is enough bonus for these people. We better wait until April and try them, and then when we come back next winter, if it is desirable to have more of them, authorize the Government of the United States to go into the markets of the United States and take the boats, and let the contracts to the lowest and the best bidder therefor.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman now yield to me?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to read from the report of the Bureau of Construction from a letter of the chairman, dated January 2. He says:

> As regards the cost of the present boats, namely, $170,000 each, the board is of the opinion that if the cost of construction, with a reasonable profit to the contractors, is alone considered, it is a very high price; but if the expenses of the company in developing the boat are taken into consideration, the price is not excessive.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, these people have had the contract for eight boats——

Mr. CUMMINGS. Only six.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). Which do not cost more than $50,000 to $75,000 apiece to build. They have had the contract. The Government is bound. Now, they come and want us to contract for three more. At the hearings, I repeat, it was stated by Admiral Melville, Admiral O'Neil, and a majority of the board that the cost was $50,000 to $75,000 apiece for these boats.

Mr. Speaker, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. DAYTON. I now ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HAWLEY], that the House recede from amendment numbered 89, and concur in the same.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. HAWLEY and Mr. SULZER)—ayes 74, noes 91.

Mr. SULZER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 132, answered "present" 8, not voting 94; as follows:

Mr. WOODS with Mr. NOONAN.

Mr. WATERS with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. DRIGGS.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment 89 and concur in the same with an amendment which will be read.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the proposed amendment of Mr. HILL, when

Mr. HILL said: Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment. In view of the present condition of the question, I do not think it necessary to take up the time of the House by a vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia, that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate——

Mr. DAYTON. And request a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. FOSS, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. CUMMINGS as conferees on the part of the House.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill. I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the House conferees be read in lieu of the conference report, and that the latter be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 7, 9, and 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, and 8; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of amendment numbered 11, lines 19, 20, and 21, page 2, and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, page 3, of said amendments and insert in lieu thereof:

"When any publication has been accorded second-class mail privileges the same shall not be suspended or annulled until a hearing shall have been granted to the parties interested."

And the Senate agree to the same.

As to amendments numbered 2 and 3 the conferees are unable to agree.

E. F. LOUD,
GEORGE W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

E. O. WOLCOTT,
WILLIAM E. CHANDLER,
MARION BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in the accompanying conference report on each of the Senate amendments, namely:

The Senate made 11 amendments to the bill, involving an increase of $24,400.

By the action of the conferees, submitted in the accompanying report, the House recedes on no amendments involving an increase of appropriation. The Senate recedes on one amendment involving an increase of $4,400.

The effect of the action of the conferees on amendment No. 1 is to permit the purchase of canceling machines as well as their rental.

On amendments Nos. 4, 5, and 6 the House conferees recede. These amendments require the transmission of mail equipment from depositories to the post-offices and depots of distribution by freight.

Amendment No. 7: This amendment provided for the increase of the salaries of assistant superintendents Railway Mail Service from $1,600 to $1,800 per annum, and the Senate receded.

Amendment No. 8 strikes out the words "in charge of lines," and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 9 increased the appropriation for Railway Mail Service in conformity with amendment No. 7, and the Senate receded.

Amendment No. 10 provided that public libraries should be permitted to send books through the mails at third-class rate of postage, bearing library stamp and number, and the Senate receded, the Post-Office Department having already ruled that under existing law they had that privilege.

Amendment numbered 11 provided that when a publication had been accorded second-class mail privileges, the same should not be suspended or annulled except after a report made to the Postmaster-General, and a written decision of the Postmaster-General, after a hearing granted, secured thereon. The House receded with the following amendment: Strike out the paragraph, and in lieu thereof insert the following: "When any publication has been accorded second-class mail privileges, the same shall not be suspended or annulled until a hearing shall have been granted to the parties interested."

On amendments numbered 2 and 3 the conference committee were unable to agree.

E. F. LOUD,
GEO. W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LOUD. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. LOUD. I now ask that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 3, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. LOUD, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, and Mr. SWANSON as conferees on the part of the House.

ST. LOUIS INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table House bill No. 9829, with Senate amendments, with the view to nonconcurring in those amendments, and agreeing to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendments will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9829) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri.

Mr. GROUT (before the reading of the amendments was concluded). Mr. Speaker, I believe the amendment now being read proposes to make an appropriation for the exposition at Charleston, S. C.

The SPEAKER. This bill is what is known as the Louisiana purchase bill; and the amendment known as the Charleston amendment is now being read.

Mr. GROUT. That is a quite lengthy amendment, and I believe it is understood by the House generally.

The SPEAKER. It was read once before.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendments of the Senate be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMS. I object.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to suspend the rules so as to nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked by that body.

The SPEAKER. Is there a second demanded on the motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. GROUT. I call for a second.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] to control the time allowed by the rules for debate on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield, that the gentleman from Vermont may now proceed in his own time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota reserves his time. The gentleman from Vermont is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, my object in demanding a second is to take the sense of the House upon the first amendment of the Senate. I want to submit a motion to concur in that amendment, and thus dispense with sending it to conference. The amendment to which I refer is known as the Sunday-closing amendment. The only way to get at this question under the motion to suspend the rules is to vote down that motion and then take a vote of the House on concurring in that amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. How are you going to get the bill before the House?

Mr. GROUT. It is before the House now.

Mr. PAYNE. No, it is not. The gentleman can not accomplish his object except by unanimous consent.

Mr. GROUT. The object of the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota is to bring the bill before the House, and it does bring it before the House.

Mr. PAYNE. But to get a vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Vermont will require unanimous consent.

Mr. GROUT. I do not expect a vote on this proposition now without unanimous consent. Very soon I will ask such consent, but I expect some one will object. I presume the gentleman himself would object.

Mr. PAYNE. The only way to get the amendment before the House——

Mr. GROUT. I am going to ask the House to refuse to adopt the motion to suspend the rules until the sense of the House can be taken upon my proposition to concur in this Sunday-closing amendment, whatever may be the best way of getting at it.

And upon that question, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Vermont will permit. If this motion to suspend the rules and nonconcur is voted down, the result will be that the bill will go to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and not be before the House.

Mr. GROUT. I realize that, but can not help it. I am aware of that result; and if the gentleman in charge of the bill and those interested in this measure will consent to let the House act on this amendment separately, then I am content. I do not care when it is done.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to make a statement? The proposition here is to suspend the rules, to nonconcur, and agree to a conference. Now, you do not propose to let the House agree on this question whether or not this exposition shall be hermetically sealed.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, if it be in order now, to make a motion to concur in this first amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is on his feet, and he can ask unanimous consent.

Mr. GROUT. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I make that request of the House now.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent for a division of the question, so that the first amendment may be left out from the operation of the motion.

Mr. GROUT. So that a motion may be made to concur in the first amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. GROUT. Very well, then. Mr. Speaker, I am for voting down this motion to suspend the rules and send the bill to conference, because if this motion prevails it will go straight to conference, and the House will have lost control of it for the present. I believe that if the House should be given an opportunity to vote upon the question it would concur in the amendment.

If it goes to conference, we have every reason to expect that a modified proposition will be the result of the conference report, and then we would have to vote down the conference report in order to reach the question at issue. The parliamentary situation is such that if we concur in that amendment we must either vote down this motion to suspend the rules or vote down the conference report, and I propose to force a vote upon it now.

A MEMBER. What is the amendment?

Mr. GROUT. I will ask the Clerk to read the first amendment.

Page 15, line 4, insert:

"SEC. 25. That as a condition precedent to the payment of this appropriation the directors shall contract to close the gates to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the fair."

Mr. GROUT. Now, Mr. Speaker, in support of this proposition I want first to submit the protests of several religious organizations which I have received within the last two days from different parts of the country. Here they are:

The Presbyterian Ministers' Association of Washington and vicinity respectfully and earnestly represent to the Congress of the United States that in conformity with the practically unanimous Christian sentiment of the country, the gates of the coming St. Louis Exposition should be closed on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, which under our laws is a dies non. In evidence that such is the sentiment of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, we call attention to the attached resolution, unanimously adopted by our General Assembly at St. Louis in May, 1900:

"Resolved, That we respectfully request the United States Congress and all State legislatures to make no more appropriations for expositions to be held in this country without the proviso that such expositions shall be closed on the Lord's Day."

Celebration Louisiana Purchase should exhibit American Sabbath, not French Sunday.

W. P. FULTON, President,
WM. HUTTON, Secretary,
Presbyterian Ministers' Association.

Mr. Speaker, this last dispatch strikes the keynote of this whole question and furnishes a text for what I want to say. There is every reason why this celebration of the Louisiana Purchase should exhibit the American Sabbath, which is set apart as a day of rest and for moral and religious instruction, and not the French Sunday, in which the theaters and saloons are wide open and the day one of gaiety and dissipation. The vast territory included in the Louisiana Purchase was brought by that transaction from under the French flag and French civilization into the glorious liberty of American institutions and under the protection of the Stars and Stripes. It finished the work begun by Wolfe on the Plains of Abraham in 1759. It completed the transfer of the American continent from the control of the Latin race to that of the Anglo-Saxon. With that transfer came, instead of the civil code, the common law, with trial by jury, and a free representative government. There came also, with other Anglo-Saxon institutions, instead of the French Sunday the Anglo-Saxon Sabbath, the Sabbath of our English ancestors, the Sabbath that came over in the Mayflower and has given character, in varying degree, to be sure, but still character, to the observance of the Lord's day in every quarter of this great Republic.

Then why, Mr. Speaker, in celebrating this great event, for which we are now appropriating $5,000,000, should we reinstate the French Sunday, with its round of frivolous, if not wicked, pleasures, and relegate to the rear the sober Sabbath of our fathers, which is founded on the plain, simple injunction, "Remember the Lord's day to keep it holy."

This would be turning back the hands on the dial of human progress. It would be a surrender of Anglo-Saxon civilization to the notions of the Latin race. It would be a surrender at last of the English to the French—a complete reversal of history for the last five hundred years. The American people, who inherited their Sunday habits from England, may so surrender, but England will not. The fact is, there is no nation in the whole world where Sunday observance is to-day more rigidly maintained than in England. I have no time to dwell upon the influence throughout the earth of this little seagirt isle, "whose morning drumbeat is heard around the world," nor upon the question how much of that influence is due to her careful observance of the Sabbath as a day of rest, in which the moral and spiritual side of man is given a chance for development and strength, and in which the physical man is made strong for every encounter.

The Sabbath is not so well kept in America as in England. In certain portions of this country it has become somewhat demoralized by the influx of large bodies of immigrants from the nations of Continental Europe; nevertheless, it still stands as a day of worship instead of a day of worldly pleasure; still stands as a distinctly Anglo-Saxon institution: and ill fares the day when religious and moral exercises shall give place to theatricals and dances and the midway plaisance of the modern exposition.

In no part of the country would a county fair be tolerated on Sunday, and why any more this great interstate fair? No reason exists for it unless it be found in the fact that its great size so divides and obscures responsibility that no one in particular feels answerable for it. Mr. Speaker, these dispatches which I have just read, from the religious bodies of the country, ask Congress to take the initiative and settle this question in behalf of the American Sabbath by saying to the promoters of this exposition that if this $5,000,000 be paid to them out of the Treasury then the gates shall be kept closed on Sunday.

But we are told that if this be done the laboring man will have no opportunity to attend the fair. If there is anything good in this fair for the laboring man—and there is—I want him to have it, for he certainly has no more than his share of the good things of this life. This fair will last for six months, and it will be strange, indeed, if in that time there will not be some day when he can relieve himself of toil and attend this fair. But our friends who work the workingman in behalf of Sunday opening, but who see it will not quite work to work him on Sunday, propose to have all the machinery shut down on Sunday and to dispense with work of every kind, with an opportunity for visitors to walk through the grounds as through a park. Mr. Speaker, in the name of the workingmen of this country I protest against this scheme. I do not believe the workingman wants anything of this kind.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. We want to have attention here. We can not hear the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. GROUT. I will try and make myself heard. I say I do not believe the workingman wants to attend the fair unless he can see the whole thing. He is fairly entitled to see it all. He ought to have just as good a chance to see the fair as the rich and the idle. He wants to attend the fair, just as other folks do, and he will find a way to do it.

Not only this, but he knows that more than any other class it is for his interest to keep the Sabbath as a day of rest. He knows that when it is made a working day the result will very soon be as on the Continent of Europe—seven days' work for six days' pay. I repeat, the intelligent workingman is everywhere in favor of keeping the Sabbath day as one of rest.

Mr. Speaker, 25,000 railway telegraphers are on record before a committee of this House asking that Sunday be kept as a day of rest; 31,000 of the Brotherhood of Trainmen make the same request, and 2?000 of the National Order of Railway Conductors ask the same thing. And yet everyone knows that if the St. Louis Exposition be kept open on Sundays excursion trains will be run every Sunday from all points within 100 miles and even more. Who believes the workingmen are in favor of this? They do not want it.

Not only this, but here is another phase of this question worthy of careful consideration by the managers of this fair, viz: Whether it will be for the pecuniary interest of the fair itself to keep it open on Sunday. More than 30,000,000 people in this country do not want it open.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Vermont yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I want to say, with reference to the Chicago fair, that the experience of the fair managers and the people was that the people did not desire the fair opened on Sundays and that it was not profitable to keep it open on Sundays.

Mr. GROUT. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I was just developing that point, and his testimony is important. As I said, there are more than 30,000,000 people in this country to whom the idea of Sunday opening is offensive—almost one-half of our entire population. In the discussion of the subject of Sunday closing of the Columbian Exposition in 1892 the late Representative Dingley estimated—and he was a careful man—that fully one-half of our entire population were members of the families of professors of religion, who would be under an influence adverse to attending the fair if it were kept open on Sundays; whereas if the sanctity of the Sabbath were not violated, a large portion of this number would be likely to attend. It stands to reason that the managers of this fair can not fly in the face of one-half of the people and yet make the fair a success, and the Chicago fair may well be referred to. They tried it both ways, and finally settled down on the plan that they did not want Sunday opening, but did want Sunday closing.

Mr. TAWNEY. Right there, if the gentleman will pardon me, that was not the fact. The only portion of the exposition that was closed was the machinery and the exhibits. The gates and grounds of the fair were open all day.

Mr. GROUT. I do not understand this matter as the gentleman does. But, on the contrary, as stated a moment ago by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I have already shown that an arrangement such as the gentleman describes would be satisfactory to no one.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman is an old member of the House, and therefore familiar with parliamentary practice. I want to ask him whether he is against the St. Louis Exposition?

Mr. GROUT. I voted against the bill when it passed the House because I sought recognition to introduce this amendment which we are now considering, and I was whistled down, or, rather, silently turned down, with no chance whatever for the presentation of this proposition, and so I voted against the bill. I think it a piece of extravagant folly for the United States to appropriate five millions at intervals, hardly at intervals either, for they come about every year, for these expositions. I think it is an extravagant piece of business, and while I do not want to go on record as fighting this fair by itself alone, I am on record against it without this amendment requiring Sunday closing, and shall so stand to the end.

Mr. STEELE. As an old member of this House, does not the gentleman from Vermont know that the only practical way of getting the very question that he is now arguing before the House is to disagree to the Senate amendments and let it go to conference?

Mr. GROUT. I do not know that. On the contrary, I know it can be settled now and would be if the gentleman in charge of the bill would only consent to let the House vote on this amendment.

Mr. STEELE. Every other member of the House knows it.

Mr. GROUT. I believe every member of the House, or a majority of them, will agree to this proposition when they are given a chance to vote on it, and I want it understood once for all that I am going to make the passage of this bill a rough and rugged one till a chance is given to test the sense of the House on this amendment. I do not, however, want to be understood as opposing the bill beyond the point of a vote on this Sunday-closing proposition. I have not heretofore been opposed to these expositions. I was in favor of the Chicago World's Fair. It was the celebration of the quadricentennial anniversary of the discovery of the new world. There is also good reason for this fair. The transaction it celebrates, as we have seen, brought an empire under the American flag, but when it comes to a restoration of the French Sunday, there I draw the line. If we can have the fair with an Anglo-Saxon Sunday, I am for it. But if the French Sunday is insisted upon, I think we can get along without both.

And here just a word about the Charleston proposition, which the Senate has put on also. Charleston has behaved herself very well lately, and I would like to give her a reward of merit and every other Southern city for good behavior if the Treasury holds out. Indeed, I hardly see how we can reasonably refuse Charleston if we appropriate for St. Louis. I am not certain but it would be a good investment for the good feeling it would establish between the sections. I voted for both the Atlanta and Nashville expositions, and largely on the ground that it would lead to a better acquaintance and better feeling between the South and North, and, upon the whole, think it has proved a good investment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is not whether we are in favor of a French Sunday or an Anglo-Saxon Sunday. The question is whether or not this bill that has passed the House with only 40 votes in the negative, which has been amended in the Senate, shall, with the amendment, go to conference in order that the questions of difference between the two Houses may be considered and a settlement arrived at.

The House does not forfeit its right to future consideration of this question upon its merits by voting to suspend the rules and nonconcur in the amendment. The conference committee will have to report to this House, and that report will be open for consideration, and hence acted upon by a majority of the House. With the few gentlemen in the House, as there has been ever since last Saturday, objecting to the consideration of this measure, there is no other way whereby we can get this matter into conference or finally determine on what kind of a bill we shall enact into law except by the method which we now propose.

The question of whether or not this exposition shall be closed entirely or whether a portion of it shall remain open or all of it remain open on Sunday is not in the least involved in the question of whether or not we should suspend the rule and send this bill to conference for the purpose of settling these matters of difference between the two Houses. I therefore hope that the motion to suspend the rules and nonconcur, which does not finally dispose of the question, will be agreed to and the House will have at some future time an opportunity to discuss and consider and vote on the merits of the proposition which the gentleman from Vermont is now advocating. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the expenditure of money from the Federal Treasury for exposition purposes. I therefore voted against this bill for the St. Louis Exposition in the House and shall therefore continue to vote against it. I shall therefore vote against the amendment for the Charleston Exposition, which comes over from the Senate.

I shall vote as a conferee for one of the amendments which the Senate sent over and against the other. But, Mr. Speaker, the question presents itself to my mind here as one of fairness toward the House itself.

I think the House has the right to have a chance to cast a majority vote upon this bill and upon the amendments which have been made to the bill. I shall therefore vote to suspend the rules in order that there may be a conference between the two Houses and in order that the two Houses, after conference, may have the power to exercise their right to vote upon each one of these propositions.

I shall vote for the conference because it is the only possible manner in which the two Houses can arrive at the consummation of their desire, if it is their desire to vote on the bill and on each of the amendments. I thank the gentleman for the time and yield back whatever may be left of it.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROUT. Suppose the motion prevail to suspend the rules and send the bill to conference, would it be competent to instruct the conferees on this first amendment?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order to instruct the conferees providing the motion applies to something germane, but the Chair will state that it is very seldom done, the theory being that the conferees should start in with an opportunity for a full and free conference.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the case presented here exactly the same as that which was presented by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] on the District of Columbia appropriation bill when he asked the House to disagree to amendments of which he was in favor?

The SPEAKER. This motion, if carried, will put this bill exactly where every other bill is placed when sent to conference—with no greater and no less rights or privileges.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask for a vote.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for two or three minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am glad to do so.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that this motion will be adopted. This is not the proper time to discuss the merits of either of these propositions. The question is simply whether the House shall have an opportunity to express its opinion upon both of them. The St. Louis Exposition project has already passed the House and the Charleston project has twice passed the Senate. The only object in this matter of those who support this motion is that the House shall be allowed to give its judgment by a vote in the only possible manner in which the matter can be brought before the House. As I have said, this is not the time to discuss the merits of this question, but I wish to disabuse the minds of some members of the House of a misapprehension as to the object of the appropriation for the exposition at Charleston, S. C. The object is not to defray the expenses of the exposition, but simply and purely to furnish a Government exhibit. I hope that every friend of that measure will vote in support of the motion made by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. GRAHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM. In order to reach the amendment in which the gentleman from Vermont desires the House to concur, shall we be compelled to vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota?

The SPEAKER. That does not facilitate the purpose at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would like to reach the proposition which the gentleman from Vermont wishes to reach.

The SPEAKER. A vote against the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota does nothing whatever toward accomplishing the purpose of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GROUT. I want to say——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do.

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. TAWNEY. One minute.

Mr. GROUT. I want to say that I really do not feel like standing in the way of this exposition, and I am inclined to think that it would be best for me to defer asking action upon this question until the conferees have dealt with it. Though it seems that a motion to instruct them would be in order, that proposition might not be understood in the right sense. So I am willing that this question go to conference and that we deal with it later.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the motion of Mr. TAWNEY to suspend the rules). In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor of the motion——

Mr. SIMS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 19 voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds have voted in favor of the motion to suspend the rules; and it is agreed to. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. TAWNEY; the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. STEELE, and the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAMS.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FORAKER, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. MALLORY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 11598) for the relief of Frank B. Case, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution No. 90.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill of the House (H. R. 9903) granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Shell.

MONUMENT TO PRISON SHIP MARTYRS AT FORT GREENE, N. Y.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 152) in relation to monument to prison ship martyrs at Fort Greene, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I object.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Then I move to suspend the rules and put the joint resolution on its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas nearly 20,000 patriot soldiers and sailors of the colonial forces in the war of the Revolution perished upon the English prison ships in New York Harbor from neglect, privation, and disease incident to their imprisonment, as many as 11,000 having died upon a single hulk; and

Whereas their remains were buried in trenches on the Long Island shore, where the tide soon swept the bones of hundreds into the sea, strewing the shore for miles with human bones; and

Whereas in the year 1808 all the bones still remaining were gathered by the Tammany Society, of New York, and interred in a vault on a plot of ground then known as Jackson's farm, now a part of the borough of Brooklyn, in the city of New York; and

Whereas in the year 1873 the authorities of the city of Brooklyn removed the bones to a public park in the then said city, known as Fort Greene Park, which overlooks that portion of the bay in which the ships were anchored whereon they died and that part of the beach wherein they were buried; and

Whereas their heroic martyrdom, running through weary months and years, with liberty constantly offered as the price of dishonor on the one hand, and death as the only reward of fidelity to country on the other, is without a parallel in the world's history; and

Whereas no stone marks their resting place and no inscription commemorates their virtues, their sufferings, or their death throughout the whole land for which they died; and

Whereas a society has been incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, entitled the Prison-Ship Martyrs' Monument Association of the United States, which is organized and conducted by eminent patriotic citizens for the express purpose of building a monument in Fort Greene Park, in the borough of Brooklyn, in the city of New York, to the memory of those patriotic dead; and

Whereas many thousands of dollars have already been collected and are being safely held as a private contribution to said monument fund, and laws have been passed in the legislature of the State of New York for joint aid by the State of New York and the municipality of New York: Therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 as a part contribution to the erection of said monument, payable to said Martyrs Monument Association of the United States: Provided, however, That said sum shall not be payable until there has been raised, by private subscription and by public appropriations as aforesaid, sums aggregating an additional $100,000: And provided further, That said moneys shall not be paid for the erection of a monument, plans for which shall not have been approved by the Secretary of War of the United States and the governor of the State of New York; and the said moneys shall be expended under the joint supervision of the said Secretary and said governor.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded on the motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to control the time on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order. Members will take their seats and refrain from conversation. The Chair hopes that gentlemen of the House will bear with him if in the closing hours of the session he does not show the patience which he trusts he shows on other occasions—patience in indulging those who are disposed from thoughtlessness to disturb the business of the House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, after the battle of Long Island, where over 2,000 Americans were taken prisoners, and after the evacuation of New York by General Washington, the British authorities filled Wallabout Bay with prison ships. In all there were 20, the most notorious being the old Jersey. Seven thousand men died in this prison ship alone by disease and torture, and were buried in the sand at high-water mark on Wallabout Bay.

Mr. Speaker, the rich man who refuses to honor the grave of his father with a tombstone deserves and receives the scorn of mankind. That scorn becomes execration when his wealth was inherited from that father. These martyrs of the British prison ships were the fathers of American freedom—our forefathers. They left us an inheritence priceless in value—the most magnificent on the face of the globe. It has made us the richest and most powerful of all nations.

In resources and influence we are unsurpassed. El Dorado itself bears no comparison to the richness of our domain. The bones of these martyrs are our bones, the bones of our ancestors. They are owned by neither the city nor the State of New York. They are the bones of Revolutionary soldiers—sacred relics of liberty—the exclusive property of the United States. These martyrs suffered a fate far more horrible than those killed and wounded in battle. Their dust is a part of the soil of the 13 colonies. The bones of the Maryland Line were whitened in the sand with the bones of the minutemen of Massachusetts. The soldiers of John Stark and of Light-Horse Harry were thrown into the same trench. The dust of North Carolina and the Palmetto State is commingled with the dust of patriots from New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. Jersey, Georgia, and Delaware are represented here. These ashes represent the hopes and aspirations of a nation struggling for liberty. They commemorate the prayers and tears of the noble women of the Revolution.

They recall the telling words of Ethan Allen at Ticonderoga, and disclose anew the dead body of Montgomery in the snow at Quebec; they picture the blood of Warren sinking into the sod at Bunker Hill; they call to mind the daring escape of "Old Put" at Horse Neck; they recall the critical hours at Saratoga and Germantown, and the lithe figure of Lafayette at the Brandywine; they paint anew Washington at prayer amid the bloody footprints in the snow at Valley Forge; they emblazon the sterling patriotism of Williams, Paulding, and Van Wert at Tarrytown; they memorialize the glorious triumphs at Trenton and Princeton, the narrow escape of Washington, and the death of brave Hugh Mercer; they point to De Kalb, dead at Camden, and sanctify the glorious death of Pulaski at Savannah; they recall the days of Marion and Sumter, and immortalize the feat of Sergeant Jasper at Fort Moultrie; they render vivid the victory at Kings Mountain and the overthrow of Tarleton at the Cowpens; they proclaim anew Mad Anthony Wayne's storming of Stony Point, the sweeping triumph at Eutaw Springs, and the crowning victory at Yorktown; they recall the sad fate of Isaac Hayne at Charleston, repeat the immortal dying words of Nathan Hale, and enroll themselves among the innumerable heroes who gave up their lives for American freedom in the long ago.

Colleagues, I repeat it, these are bones of our bones. They belong to the American people, whose representatives we are. We are responsible for the neglect of these sacred ashes. We are enjoying the glorious inheritance purchased by the dreadful fate of these martyrs. Is there no sense of gratitude in the American heart? Are we not grateful to these martyrs for the magnificent inheritance which they have left us? Is this nation to imitate the example of the rich man who refuses to place a headstone at the grave of his father? For sixteen years this bill has appeared upon the Calendar of the House and yet no action has been taken. The ancients paid due regard to the ashes of those who died for their country. Even the red Indian reverences the bones of his fathers.

God has periodically brought these ashes into light as if to shame this nation. The very elements themselves seem to have conspired to rivet the attention of the people upon them. Buried at high-water mark, the tide washed the sand from these skeletons and scattered their bones along the shore of the Wallabout. Still the country neglected them. Then the patriotic Tammany Society gathered the remains and interred them in the terrace near the wall of the Brooklyn Navy-Yard. Its example failed to spur the nation to action. Again the elements wrought to awaken the conscience of the people. Heavy rains and storms finally washed out the terrace, and these sacred but neglected bones were again brought to view. It is to the glory of Brooklyn and her citizens that she removed them to Fort Greene. But still the Congress failed to act. Then Providence again intervened. While the foundation of a building was being laid in the Brooklyn Navy-Yard last summer the uncoffined bones of 250 more prison-ship victims were unearthed. Yet no official action was taken. They were about to be carted off as common clay when the citizens of Brooklyn again interfered. They claimed the right to give them decent burial, and the United States permitted them to inter these relics of the dead with their comrades at Fort Greene.

The citizens now ask Congress to appropriate $100,000 for a monument to the memory of the martyrs. The State of New York has already appropriated $25,000; the city of New York is ready to appropriate $50,000, and the citizens of Brooklyn are adding twenty-five thousand more to the fund, making $100,000 in all. They ask that the Government should now repair its long neglect and make a similar contribution toward a monument to the memory of the prison martyrs.

I think I know what we shall do with this proposition, but I surely know what the Continental Congress would have done if it had had a tithe of our means and our opportunities. We appropriated $250,000 to complete the Washington Monument in this city. We did well. But if Washington himself could have been consulted he would undoubtedly have said: "Care for the mortal remains of these poor victims of British tyranny, these martyrs of American liberty, before you erect a monument to me."

At an expense of millions we have gathered the bones of those who gave their lives to preserve the unity of the nation. We are still gathering the remains of those who fell in Cuba, the Philippines, and China. We consider this a national duty. These were men who died in fair war, on the field of battle or in the hospitals of their country. Why not awaken to our duty toward these victims of British tyranny on prison ships, whose death by starvation and the slow tortures of disease, aggravated by inhuman cruelty and neglect, was required to endow us with the priceless boon of freedom? The dust of these 20,000 neglected, martyred patriots cries reproachfully to heaven protesting against the ingratitude of the Republic. Shall its cry remain forever unheeded? [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has five minutes remaining.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I reserve that time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it is always ungracious, after such a talk as the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] has given us, not to acquiesce in the appeal. The sufferings of the prisoners in the prison ships over a century ago are known to all readers of history. The sufferings of the Americans in the war of the Revolution everywhere in the thirteen colonies were, all things considered, almost unprecedented; and not only in the colonies, but in the territory beyond, the sufferings and the heroism of our ancestors were such as have rarely been equaled in time. They fought and sacrificed and died.

When we come to mark the resting places of the dead, it does not help the dead. We mark them from love and affection and as a matter of sentiment affecting the living. I have sometimes wondered that the great metropolis embracing New York and Brooklyn—now Greater New York—and the magnificent Empire State have not heretofore, by private subscription, by county or city action, or otherwise, done what the gentleman from New York now asks the American Congress to do. I suspect one reason is that they did not listen to the charm and the spell of his magnificent appeal.

Those prisoners lost their lives in a struggle of seven or eight years, extending over a large theater of war. The remains of the brave men who lost their lives in that struggle are not to be found marked as a rule. Since that time we have had wars in which there was much greater sacrifice of life. Take the civil war. In many of our counties throughout the country, either by county action or city action, but in the main by individual subscription, monuments mark the graves of the heroic dead. In erecting those monuments we did not wait a hundred years.

Now, these propositions, since I have served in the House, come, not one, but many. For sixteen years this proposition has been made, as the gentleman states. For many years propositions have been made to mark the battle ground of the battle of Tippecanoe, and there comes, Congress after Congress, a bill to mark the heroic action of people in northern Indiana and northern Ohio during the war of 1812 and in the Indian wars. There is not a county in any State of the Republic but what has its heroic dead that deserve monuments. But I certainly submit to the gentleman that perhaps it were better to leave the immediate residents living to care for monuments for the dead. When a bill comes to purchase a battle ground——

Mr. CUMMINGS. Do you want the people to erect a monument to your father? Will you not put a headstone there yourself?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I have marked the graves of my dead. But if you are going into the monument business, let me say to the gentleman that while this action was grand, heroic, suffering in the extreme, a thousand monuments might be erected with equal propriety, and it seems to me that after one hundred and twenty years have passed by that if my friend would make an appeal in the great metropolis they would build a monument as we build them throughout the Northland and throughout the Southland.

Now, I have said all that I desire to say about it. I have felt from year to year, as the propositions have come to buy battlefields, to build monuments, thick and fast, that the time, perhaps, had come when, so far as the Federal Treasury was concerned, we had better devote it to expenditures for the purposes of the Federal Government and leave something for the patriotism of the various localities to do. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof, the motion was lost.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 72.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Sixteen gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number; the yeas and nays are denied; and the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill is lost.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who desire to do so may be permitted to print remarks on the bill which has just been under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general leave be granted to print remarks on the bill which has just been rejected, for how many days?

Mr. CUMMINGS. For five days.

The SPEAKER. For five days. Is there objection?

Mr. STEELE. Not if they confine themselves to the bill.

The SPEAKER. It is understood that the extension of remarks or speeches must be confined to the bill. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GROUT. I ask unanimous consent to print the communications that I made reference to in my remarks, and also Mr. Dingley's speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that he may print with his speech the papers referred to therein.

Mr. GROUT. And the speech of Representative Dingley.

The SPEAKER. And the remarks of ex-Representative Dingley. Is there objection?

Mr. STEELE. I object. We have had that speech once.

BRONZE STATUE OF HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution 48.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 48) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a pedestal for a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of the late Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on the Library are hereby appointed as a commission to select a site upon property belonging to the United States in the city of Washington, other than the Capitol or Library grounds, for the erection of a statue in bronze of the late Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to be provided by the Longfellow Memorial Association.

SEC. 2. That for the preparation of the site so selected and the erection of a pedestal upon which to place said statue, and the reasonable expense of superintendence and inspection of the same, under the direction of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LANDIS. I object.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and that the bill be passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the rules be suspended and the bill be passed.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. On that I demand a second.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Chair will designate as tellers the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. McCLEARY, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BAILEY.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 71.

So a second was not ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6146. An act for the relief of the administrators of William B. Moses, deceased, and of Lebbeus H. Rogers;

H. J. Res. 74. Joint resolution authorizing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the San Antonio International Fair and at the Texas State Fair and Dallas Exposition, to be held in the cities of San Antonio, Tex., and Dallas, Tex., to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury;

H. R. 6204. An act for the relief of Olivia M. Clifford;

H. R. 11821. An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11820. An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee tribe of Indians, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3205. An act for the relocation of certain tracks of street railways in the District of Columbia;

S. R. 163. Joint resolution regulating licenses to proprietors of theaters in the District of Columbia; and

S. 5978. An act authorizing the Attorney-General upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior to appear in suits brought by the States relative to school lands.

RESOLUTION CONCERNING DISFRANCHISEMENT.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged report I desire to send to the desk.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. HEPBURN. A parliamentary inquiry. Does this proposition take precedence of the special order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not state. The gentleman said it was a privileged report.

Mr. HEPBURN. So it is.

The SPEAKER. It has not been read far enough for the Chair to judge of its privilege.

Mr. HEPBURN. I make the point of order that a privileged report from the Committee on Census does not take precedence of the special order. It is not a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds that this is a report of the committee on what is known as Olmsted resolution, which involves a question of constitutional privilege. The Chair thinks it is a higher privilege than the regular order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Select Committee on the Census, to whom was referred House resolution 329, beg leave to report that on January 22 a resolution was adopted by your committee calling on the Director of the Census for information necessary to a fair and proper consideration of said resolution No. 329. A copy of the resolution of your committee was forwarded to the Director with a request that the data be furnished at the earliest date possible. A reply was received from him January 26, a copy of which, with a letter from Mr. W. C. Hunt, chief statistician for population, is shown below:

CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1901.

DEAR Mr. HOPKINS: In reply to your communication under date of January 22, I beg to send you herewith a letter from Mr. W. C. Hunt, chief statistician for population, giving somewhat in detail the plans of the office and the time necessarily involved in obtaining the data which you require concerning the number of male inhabitants in each of the States 21 years old, white and colored, respectively.

I regret very much that I shall not be able to accede to the request of your committee in time to be of service until after the expiration of the present Congress.

Respectfully, yours, WM. R. MERRIAM, Director.

Hon A. J. HOPKINS,
Chairman Select Committee on Census,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1901.

DEAR SIR: In connection with the accompanying resolution of the House Committee on the Census, I would respectfully submit the following statement:

It was originally intended to have commenced on August 1, 1900, the first detailed count of population according to color, sex, general nativity, and certain age groups, but owing to the conditions of the work at that time and the lack of proper space, this was not begun until October 1, 1900, and will probably be completed by the end of this month. The data called for by the resolution of the House Committee on the Census are derived from this count, but this information can not be made up by States and Territories for some time yet.

Owing to the necessity of retaining the services of the entire force during last summer in order to complete the count of population for apportionment purposes by December 1, 1900, no annual leaves to any amount were granted to clerks until some time in November, and during the latter part of December there was practically no clerical force available for work. Furthermore, all the clerks engaged on final result work were occupied in preparing copy for the minor civil division bulletins, the publication of which will probably be completed early in February. The number of pages of print derived from the count of population for apportionment purposes is upward of 500 and constitutes practically one-half of Part I of the Report on Population. Following the completion, early in February, of the publication of the minor civil division bulletins for the several States and Territories, the matter contained therein will be made up in its final form for the printed report and will be plated ready for printing at any time.

The entire force of result clerks having been thus occupied in the preparation and final verification of the bulletins relating to the aggregate population, it was not until the beginning of the new year that any work, aside from the machine work, could be done toward the compilation of the results derived from the first detailed count of population by color, sex, general nativity, and certain age groups. The results derived from this count of population will furnish, approximately, 350 printed pages for Part I of the Report on Population, of which that relating to males of voting age represents about 50 pages. The tables relating to the citizenship of males of voting age will form the last section of Part I of the Report on Population, and if this information is compiled out of its regular order it will necessarily prevent us from furnishing the printer with copy in the order of its presentation in the printed report.

Under these conditions it seems almost an impossibility to furnish the information called for by the House Committee on the Census prior to the close of the present session; that is to say, it will probably be some time in March, or possibly the 1st of April, before it will be possible to supply a verified statement by States and Territories of the number of white and colored males of voting age, and the number and proportion of illiterates among each of the two classes.

Very respectfully, WM. C. HUNT,
Chief Statistician.

Hon. WILLIAM R. MERRIAM,
Director of the Census.

Upon due consideration your committee adopted the following resolution: "Resolved, That House resolution 329 be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table until necessary statistical information can be obtained from the Census Office."

Your committee, therefore, respectfully recommend that the resolution (H. Res. 329) lie on the table in accordance with the resolution quoted above.

Whereas the continued enjoyment of full representation in this House by any State which has, for reasons other than participation in rebellion or other crime, denied to any of the male inhabitants thereof being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States the right to vote for Representatives in Congress, Presidential electors, and other specified officers is in direct violation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which declares that in such case "the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which such male citizens bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State," and is an invasion of the rights and dignity of this House and of its members, and an infringement upon the rights and privileges in this House of other States and their Representatives; and

Whereas since the last apportionment the States of Mississippi, South Carolina, and Louisiana have, by changes in the constitutions and statutes of said States, and for reasons other than participation in rebellion or other crime, denied the right of suffrage to male inhabitants 21 years of age, citizens of the United States, and such denial in each of said States extends to more than one-half of those who prior thereto were entitled to vote, as appears from the following statistics, published in the Congressional Directories of the Fifty-second and Fifty-sixth Congresses, namely:

In the seven districts of Mississippi the total vote cast for all Congressional candidates in 1890 was 62,652; in 1898, 27,045. In the seven districts of South Carolina the total vote in 1890 was 73,522, and 28,831 in 1898. In the six districts of Louisiana 74,542 in 1890, and 33,161 in 1898.

One member of the present House, representing 10 counties in Mississippi, with a population in 1890 of 184,297, received only 2,008 votes; one member of the present House, representing 6 counties in South Carolina, with a population in 1890 of 158,851, received only 1,765 votes; and one member representing 13 counties in Louisiana, with a population of 208,802, received only 2,494 votes; and

Whereas it is a matter of common rumor that other States have, for reasons other than those specified in the Constitution of the United States, denied to some of their male inhabitants 21 years old and citizens of the United States the right to vote for members of Congress and Presidential electors, as well as executive and judicial officers of said States, and members of the legislatures thereof, and no reduction has been made in the representation of any State in this House because of such denial; and

Whereas the President of the United States has, by message, recommended "that the Congress, at its present session, apportion the representation among the several States as provided by the Constitution:" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Census shall be, and is, authorized and directed, either by full committee or by such subcommittee or subcommittees as may be appointed by the chairman thereof, to inquire, examine, and report in what States the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such States 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crimes, and the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire at the present to take any time upon this report. The gentleman from Indiana, a member of the committee, desires to address the House for ten minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression, though he has been engaged a good deal, that this is a report with the recommendation that it lie on the table. Is the Chair correct?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is the kind of report it is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not debatable.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point order that it is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. That point of order is made by two gentlemen.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think the report is a conditional one—that it lie on the table until a particular time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman's point.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is to say, the report, as I understand, is that the resolution lie upon the table until such time as certain information can be obtained; and I think that introduces an element into the question that is not the usual recommendation that a measure lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that that is not within the meaning of the rule, and that the question is on laying the report on the table. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The question was taken, and the resolution was laid on the table.

BRONZE PORTRAIT STATUE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

A bill (H. R. 5795) for the purchase of a bronze portrait statue of George Washington.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, the sum of $17,500 for the purchase of a bronze portrait statue of George Washington; said statue to be placed in Statuary Hall in the Capitol building, or in the Congressional Library building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I object.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I demand a second.

Mr. COWHERD. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Texas. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to act as tellers.

The House divided, and the tellers reported yeas 24, nays 44.

So a second was denied.

BRONZE STATUE OF GEN. FRANCIS E. SPINNER.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 47, granting permission for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of Gen. Francis E. Spinner, late Treasurer of the United States.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the ladies employed in the United States Treasury Department, and others, have raised a fund for, and have caused to be executed, a bronze statue of Gen. Francis E. Spinner, Treasurer of the United States from March 16, 1861, to June 30, 1875, in commemoration of his faithful public service, and especially as a token of their admiration and gratitude for his successful endeavors in behalf of the employment of women in the civil service of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, etc., That permission be, and the same is hereby, granted to the General Spinner Memorial Association to erect said statue at such place in the city of Washington, other than the Capitol or Library grounds, as shall be designated by a committee composed of the Joint Committee on the Library, the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, and the president of the General Spinner Memorial Association; and the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of a pedestal upon which to place said statue.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I object.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. If the gentleman from New York will strike out the appropriation, I have no objection.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment, and I will modify my motion by striking out all after the semicolon, in line 5, page 2.

Mr. CANNON. I shall object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The bill as amended would not carry any appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. It will come when it gets to conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to be advised as to what the objection of the gentleman from Illinois is.

Mr. CANNON. Is this a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is, and the gentleman from New York had a right to make his motion. The question is, is a second demanded to the modified motion of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. My understanding was, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from New York struck out the appropriation. That was objected to, and therefore the motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill as it was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York had the right to amend the bill and offer the motion in any form he chose. He offered it in the amended form, striking out the entire appropriation, and the question now is, Is there a second demanded to the motion to pass the modified bill?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a second, and the Chair will appoint the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 32, nays 37.

So a second was denied.

Mr. CUMMINGS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Of what use is the Joint Committee on the Library? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 5499, and pending that, I move that all general debate be closed when two hours have been consumed in debate. I mean two hours in all, and upon that I ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 5499, being the regular continuing order, and upon that he moves that all general debate, including the amount of time that has already been consumed in debate upon this bill, be limited to two hours, and he also asks for the previous question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Pending that I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How much of that time will be consumed this evening?

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand that under this motion there can be but twenty-five minutes' debate. The opposition have had an hour and the affirmative has had thirty-five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then that will not carry us beyond 6 o'clock.

Mr. HEPBURN. No.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would dislike to so hold. Nothing has developed to show that, and the hour is now half past 5. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes 77.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GILL indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

So the motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a preliminary report from Maj. John Tweedale upon the present condition of that portion of the State, War, and Navy building devoted to the use and occupancy of the War Department—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. DAVEY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14279) authorizing the Texas and Pacific Railway to construct a bridge across Red River, Louisiana, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2972); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14228) to authorize the city of Nashville, Tenn., to construct a free public bridge across the Cumberland River within the corporate limits of said city, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2974); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JENKINS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14289) to authorize the supreme court of the District of Columbia to decree the sale or lease of real estate in certain cases, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2975); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. TAWNEY, from the Special Committee on the Centennial of the Louisiana Purchase, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9829) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition, etc., with Senate amendments, reported the same, accompanied by a report (No. 2976); which said report was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. STALLINGS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13774) granting increase of pension to Mary J. Clark, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2973); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 14299) to authorize the revoking of approval of useless or obstructionary rights of way for canals, ditches, and reservoirs—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. GRIFFITH: A bill (H. R. 14300) providing for the payment of certain losses sustained by citizens of Indiana during Morgan's raid through said State, and also for the payment of services rendered by the Indiana Legion and Indiana Home Guards—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KERR of Ohio: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 314) to receive and deposit in the Library of Congress a memorial volume to the memory of the late Hon. John Sherman—to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DRIGGS: A bill (H. R. 14301) granting a pension to Fanny Wallace—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MANN: A bill (H. R. 14302) granting a pension to Cornelia Wood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REEVES: A bill (H. R. 14303) granting a pension to Andrew J. Baker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14304) granting a pension to David Brobst—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SALMON: A bill (H. R. 14305) granting a pension to Lewis Runkle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14306) granting a pension to Mary Probasco—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14307) granting an increase of pension to William B. Dungan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Petition of McKees Rocks Division No. 201, Order of Railway Conductors, in opposition to the amendment to the anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 28, 1901.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. TILLMAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

DEATH OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, inclosing, for the information of the Senate, a copy of a dispatch from the ambassador of Great Britain, transmitting a note of the British secretary of state for foreign affairs, in which the thanks of His Majesty the King are expressed for the respect shown by the United States Senate to the memory of his royal mother, the late Queen, as evidenced by the Senate's resolution of the 22d ultimo. Accompanying the communication is a letter from the American ambassador, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

No. 511.] AMERICAN EMBASSY,
London, February 16, 1901.

SIR: With reference to your instruction, No. 536, of the 29th ultimo, transmitting an engrossed copy of the resolution adopted by the United States Senate relating to the death of Queen Victoria, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a note from Lord Lansdowne, expressing the appreciation of the King and his thanks for this mark of respect shown by the Senate to the memory of the late Queen.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
JOSEPH H. CHOATE.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter from Lord Lansdowne will also be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

LONDON, February 14, 1901.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: The prime minister duly laid before the King the copy of the resolution of the Senate of the United States of America which your excellency forwarded in your note to me of the 8th instant.

By command of the King, I am to request your excellency to be so kind as to express to the President of the Senate His Majesty's most sincere thanks for the mark of respect shown by the Senate of the United States to the memory of her deeply lamented Majesty Queen Victoria, Empress of India.

The terms of the resolution are highly appreciated by His Majesty.

I have the honor to be, etc.,
LANSDOWNE.

His excellency Hon. JOSEPH H. CHOATE, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication and accompanying papers will lie on the table.

MONUMENT TO PRISON-SHIP MARTYRS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has received a letter from Mrs. Daniel Manning, president-general of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution; which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to transmit to you a rising vote of thanks tendered by the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution in congress assembled for the passage by your honorable body of a bill appropriating $100,000 to the erection of a monument in memory of the prison-ship martyrs of the Revolution.

The great interest taken in this commendable project by our "committee on prison ships," has been productive of some excellent work, and the generous appropriation recently made by your honorable body is indeed good news to our Daughters in congress assembled.

Very sincerely,
M. MARGARETTA MANNING,
President-General National Society Daughters American Revolution.

FEBRUARY 23, 1901.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will lie on the table.

DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries stating, in response to a resolution of the 25th instant calling for certain information respecting the employees of that Commission, that it will be necessary to communicate with some of the employees who are on duty at distant points, and that the data called for by the resolution will be transmitted to the Senate at the earliest possible moment; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY ESTIMATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of deficiencies in appropriations required by the several Departments of the Government to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for prior years, and for the postal service; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented a petition of the Banner Association, Patrons of Industry, of Saratoga County, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the so-called Grout bill, to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of George L. Shearer and sundry other citizens of New York City; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and sundry citizens of Port Chester, and of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Dunkirk, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, firearms, and opium in the New Hebrides and other islands of the Pacific; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KENNEY presented a petition of the State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Dover, Del., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the public roads of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wilmington; of the congregation of the Mount Salem Methodist Episcopal Church, of Wilmington; of sundry citizens of Newport, and of sundry citizens of Middletown, all in the State of Delaware, praying for the enactment of legislation providing better rations for the soldiers of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS presented the following joint resolution of the legislature of California; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD:

[Senate joint resolution No. 10, introduced by Senator Laird January 21, 1901. Referred to committee on Federal relations.]

Senate joint resolution No. 10, relative to the establishment of a boarding school for Pit River Indians in Modoc County, Cal.

Whereas the Pit River Indians, with the assistance of the white citizens of Modoc County, Cal., have forwarded to the Congress of the United States a petition asking for the establishment of an Indian boarding school at or near Alturas, Cal.; and

Whereas the Pit River Indians entered into a solemn covenant with Gen. George Crook, about the year 1865, to remain peaceful, and by said agreement were required to remain within certain territory, namely Hot Spring and South Fork valleys, and being unfriendly with the tribe known as the Paiutes, whose territory was and is east of the Warner range of mountains, were by this treaty to refrain from crossing said range and coming in contact with the Paiutes, who were a more powerful and warlike tribe; and

Whereas the Government has established at Fort Bidwell, in the said county, a boarding school for Indians within the limits occupied by the Paiutes, and, it being distasteful to the Pit River Indians for the reason of jealousies existing and the domineering spirit of the Paiutes, but few will attend while there is an existing friction between the children of the two tribes; and

Whereas it is impossible for the Pit River Indians to journey back and forth to the school so situate during the winter months on account of heavy snows in the mountains and passes, and it being some 50 to 75 miles distant from their territory; and

Whereas the Pit River Indians have faithfully kept their pledge and have at all times remained friendly to the white settlers, and during the Modoc war of 1872 and 1873 they rendered such excellent service as guides, friends, and protectors of the whites; and

Whereas the chief of the Pit River Indians has felt that in consequence of the treaty spoken of and the friendship so truly preserved and assistance rendered the Government as stated, and they now having become farmers, laborers, and stock raisers of this section, they ask that the Government to which they have been so loyal now grant them the advantage of education by establishing a school as requested, so that they may educate their children, now numbering some 250, at such a place as they may desire, said school to be a boarding school such as is customary for the Government to establish for this purpose: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate of the State of California (the assembly concurring), That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives in Congress be requested to use their best endeavors to secure such legislation and appropriations as will establish the school petitioned for: And be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be instructed so transmit by mail a copy of these resolutions to the Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS, Senator, and Hon. J. A. BARHAM, Congressman, at Washington, D. C., and also that a copy be forwarded to the Hon. Frank L. Coombs, Congressman-elect, at San Francisco, Cal.

I hereby certify that this is a true and correct copy of senate joint resolution No. 10.

F. J. BRANDON,
Secretary of Senate.

INDIANS AND WHITES.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners most respectfully represent and show: That the Pit River Indians, a tribe properly so called, have from time immemorial lived and occupied a territory almost exclusively within the boundaries of Modoc County, Cal.

That since the year 1865 they have been at peace and always obedient to the laws of the State and Government.

That they have assimilated with the white population, and have become an integral part of our community, conforming to our laws, customs, and civilization.

With few exceptions, they have acquired lands and homes under the laws of the United States.

That they have here lived among the whites for nearly forty years without a reservation or recognition by the General Government.

That they are a steady, industrious, and moral people.

That they have always been and are now without any educational facilities, except as hereafter stated.

That there are 225 children between the ages of 5 and 18 years who have no opportunity for obtaining an education.

That the children and their parents are exceedingly anxious for an education of their young, and they are, as a class, apt and ready scholars when given the advantage of instruction.

That in the year 1893 a small schoolhouse of rude construction, 20 by 30 feet, was built for this tribe in Hotspring Valley of this county, and a school maintained there for two seasons, which was well attended, notwithstanding the fact that such school was remote from any considerable Indian settlement, and those who attended were compelled to camp in the open and away from their homes and avocations; but since said time no school has been supplied to these Indians.

That the General Government has very generously furnished a boarding school, and supplied the same with all necessaries, at Fort Bidwell, which is situated in the extreme northeastern corner of this county and State, and in the territory always occupied by the Piute tribe of Indians, and separated from the Pit River territory by a lofty range of mountains known as the Warner Range.

That the Pit River Indians and the Piute Indians are traditional enemies, and as far back as the history and traditions of these people serve us, they have been in a state of hostility toward each other and are radically distinct in their characteristics.

That the Piutes have always considered the Pit Rivers as legitimate prey, and were accustomed to make incursions into the Pit River country, levying tribute and carrying off their females and property and even forbade them the ownership of horses or homes until the the settlement of the country by the whites; when the whites, not the Government, interfered and protected the Pit Rivers against the Piutes, and thereby cemented their friendship for the white man and made them a different and a prosperous people.

While the Fort Bidwell School is, of course, open to the Pit Rivers, yet by reason of these jealousies and the domineering spirit of the Piute, but few of the Pit River children attend this school, and there is always more or less distracting friction between the children of the two tribes.

The Piutes, on the other hand, are in, at least, a semisavage state and, in a great measure, decline to accept the civilization tendered them, and live apart to themselves upon reservations supplied them by the Government in an unwilling and enforced peace.

Wherefore, your memorialists respectfully and earnestly pray that a law be passed and an appropriation be made for the establishment of an Indian school for the Pit River Indians, and the construction of buildings and appliances sufficient for the accommodation of 225 scholars, to the end that these children be educated in the elementary sciences, practical arts, and trades; and that a capable corps of instructors be supplied and, altogether, that such institution be established at a distance from the towns or centers of population of the whites, at such place as shall appear the more suitable for the attainment of the object sought—and your petitioners will ever pray.

Dated in the county of Modoc, State of California, A. D. 1900.

Mr. PERKINS presented the following joint resolution of the legislature of California; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD:

[Amended in assembly February 15, 1901. Amended in senate February 6, 1901. Senate joint resolution No. 12. Introduced by Senator Rowell, January 22, 1901. Referred to committee on Federal relations.]

Senate joint resolution No. 12, relative to attempted location of mineral oil lands as agricultural lands.

Whereas there is now pending in the Land Department at Washington, D. C., numerous applications of persons seeking to locate the oil mineral lands of this State in lieu of agricultural lands contained in various reservations pursuant to the act of June 4, 1897; and

Whereas bona fide locators of said lands as mineral lands have contested such application to select said oil lands under said act; and

Whereas the mineral locators and miners engaged in the development of oil lands in this State have developed an industry of great importance and value to this State and to its people; and

Whereas [certain of] said matters having been judiciously investigated before Judge E. M. Ross, judge of the ninth circuit court, southern district of California, and by him adjudged as to matters before him to be fraudulent and void applications for the selection of said oil lands as lieu lands; and

Whereas said matters are pending for consideration and decision before the honorable Secretary of the Interior at Washington, D. C., and believing that the acquiring of title to said lands as agricultural lands under said act would be an injustice to the miners of this State and the persons who have actually developed the valuable character of said lands, and would, as we believe, amount to a fraud upon the Government of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the said honorable Secretary of the Interior is hereby requested and urged to fully and thoroughly investigate said matters on behalf of the Government of the United States, and to thoroughly and carefully examine into the truth and honesty of the applications made to select said lands as agricultural lands, and he is hereby requested to take all necessary steps on behalf of the Government of the United States to fully examine into said matters and ascertain if frauds have been committed in the attempted selection of said mineral lands as agricultural lands, and if the same be adjudged to have been fraudulent, then we request the said Secretary of the Interior to use all lawful ways and means to prevent the consummation of [any] attempted fraudulent selection of said lands.

[Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be instructed to immediately transmit a copy of this resolution by mail to the Secretary of the Interior, and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.]

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of senate joint resolution No. 12, as adopted in senate and assembly.

F. J. BRANDON,
Secretary of Senate.

Mr. PERKINS presented the following joint resolution of the legislature of California; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD:

No. 1113. STATE OF CALIFORNIA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, C. F. Curry, secretary of state of the State of California, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of Chapter XXIII, resolutions 1901, with the original now on file in my office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole thereof. Also, that this authentication is in due form and by the proper officer.

Witness my hand and the great seal of State, at office in Sacramento, Cal., the 22d day of February, A. D. 1901.

[SEAL.] C. F. CURRY, Secretary of State.

Assembly joint resolution No. 11, adopted in assembly January 25, A. D. 1901. Clio Lloyd, chief clerk of the assembly. Adopted in Senate February 20, A. D. 1901. F. J. Brandon, secretary of the senate. This resolution was received by the governor this 23d day of February, A. D. 1901. W. I. Foley, private secretary of the governor.

Chapter XXIII. Assembly joint resolution No. 11, relative to what are commonly known as and called the "California war claims."

Whereas the just claims of the State of California against the Government of the United States for furnishing, equipping, and paying volunteers during the civil war, aggregating over $4,000,000, are still unsettled;

Whereas the equity and justness of these claims have often been admitted and never successfully disputed;

Whereas the two Houses of Congress have heretofore passed bills relating to and providing for the refunding of at least three million nine hundred and fifty-one thousand nine hundred and fifteen and forty-two one hundredths dollars of the said claims; but have failed to agree finally upon the terms thereof, so that the same have not been enacted into laws; and

Whereas this State has so long been deprived of its rights respecting these claims that the delay is becoming oppressive and intolerable: Therefore, be it, and it is,

Resolved by the assembly of the State of California (the senate concurring), That we respectfully instruct our Senators and request our Representatives in the Congress of the United States to use all honorable means to secure the enactment by that body of a law providing for the refunding to this State without further delay of at least the sum of three million nine hundred and fifty-one thousand nine hundred and fifteen and forty-two one hundredths dollars in settlement of the claims aforesaid; that his excellency the governor of the State of California be requested to forward to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a properly certified copy of this resolution.

Mr. PERKINS presented the following joint resolution of the legislature of California; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD:

Resolution of the California State senate, adopted February 14, 1901.

Whereas there are now pending in Congress bills to provide for the reimbursement of Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont for her property seized by the United States Government for military purposes at Point San Jose (Black Point), in San Francisco, in 1863, and for the relief of all other persons claiming under the same title, and having been ejected at the same time; and

Whereas Mrs. Fremont is now a resident of California, and is, by reason of her age and physical disability, in need of the financial aid which is her just due; and

Whereas the nobility of character of Mrs. Fremont, and the distinguished services to this State and this coast of herself and her illustrious husband, Gen. John C. Fremont, the historic "Pathfinder," entitle her to special consideration not only from Californians, but from all Americans: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That this senate of California most earnestly petitions the Congress of the United States, and respectfully urges the Senators and Representatives to favorably pass the claim of Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont, and give her the speedy relief and financial aid which are her just due, of which she is now in need; and

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be at once forwarded by the president of the senate to the honorable Senators THOMAS R. BARD and GEORGE C. PERKINS, and to our California Congressmen.

THOMAS FLINT, JR.,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE presented the following resolution of the legislature of Maine; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD:

STATE OF MAINE:

Resolve in favor of the passage of the ship-subsidy bill.

Resolved, That this legislature gives its hearty approval to the ship-subsidy bill which has been so ably presented in the United States Senate by Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE, of Maine, and that the same ought to become a law, thereby giving the United States a chance to secure an honest share of the ocean carrying trade of the world, which would eventually be instrumental in increasing the demand abroad for our merchandise and more especially our farm products, the surplus of which at this time is in very limited demand from our State for exportation. The many tenantless farms in the rural districts of Maine call loudly for legislation which shall be instrumental in restoring them to their former productiveness. The subsidy bill now pending in becoming a law, together with increased reciprocity with foreign countries, would stimulate shipbuilding in Maine and load our ships with the surplus of our farm products for our foreign neighbors. The struggle now going on for existence in most towns remote from markets would disappear with the increase in demand for our products, which demand would surely increase if the quality and prices of our products sustained us in remaining in the foremost ranks among the food supplying nations of the world. This struggle disposed of, the farming industries of Maine would be on the road to prosperity, and the price per acre of our now tenantless farms would equal the price per acre of land now under cultivation. The United States also, in the excellence of the manufacture of its wares as a whole, can undoubtedly compete with the world and should introduce into the Orient such goods as are in demand, in competition with Germany and other nations. We therefore pray that all possible means be employed favoring the passage of the above-mentioned bill.

ARMY POST EXCHANGE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I present some brief papers relative to the post exchange in the army of Great Britain and of this country, which are of interest. I move that they be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

SYSTEMS OF TAXATION.

Mr. BUTLER. I hold in my hand the report of the revenue commission of Colorado, appointed by authority of the senate of that State to investigate the State and local revenue laws, and, so far as possible, to discover their defects, and a just, wise, and complete remedy therefor, and particularly to investigate the tax laws of New Zealand and the Australian colonies and the effect of such laws. The commission has gone over many countries in the world studying their systems of taxation. It is an official report and contains very valuable information. Whatever a man's views may be, he ought to have the benefit of this information, and I move that it be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM E. WOODBRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 149) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William E. Woodbridge for compensation for the use by the United States of his invention relating to projectiles, for which letters patent were ordered to issue to him March 25, 1852.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The House nonconcurred in the amendment of the Senate, and I move that the Senate recede from its amendment. That will pass the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate recede from its amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. CULLOM on the 27th instant proposing to appropriate $250,000 for the construction of a revenue cutter for use in the waters of the Territory of Hawaii, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8270) for the relief of Herman Von Marsdorf, late a lieutenant of Company D, First Maryland Cavalry, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5924) for the relief of Herman Von Marsdorf, late a lieutenant of Company D, First Maryland Cavalry, reported adversely thereon, and moved that the bill be postponed indefinitely; which was agreed to.

Mr. TALIAFERRO, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10758) granting a pension to Sallie B. Wilson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

DOCUMENTS FOR LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 259) to regulate the distribution of public documents to the Library of Congress for its own use and for international exchange, which went over yesterday on the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I submit a letter from the Librarian on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks for the consideration of the joint resolution reported yesterday from the Committee on Printing and which was read yesterday to the Senate. He submits a letter from the Librarian, which will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS, THE LIBRARIAN'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 27, 1901.

SENATOR: You may recall that last year I spoke to you of the very unsatisfactory provisions of the present law relating to the distribution of Government documents to the Library of Congress for its own uses and for international exchange.

There is, as you know, a system of international exchanges which is carried on by the Government at a considerable expense, and from which, under the present law, it has been impossible to secure the fullest benefit. The purpose of the exchange is to bring to the Library of Congress the public documents of foreign countries and the publications of institutions and learned societies abroad. The material which is sent out is the public documents of the United States. Of these, in general, 50 copies are supposed to be placed at the disposal of the Library. The difficulty under the existing law is that there are some documents that are not supplied at all; there are others of which much less than 50 copies are supplied, and there are none of which 50 copies suffice to cover all the governments and institutions with which we should exchange.

My secretary has seen Senator HALE and Senator HAWLEY, to whom Senator HALE referred him, and explained the intent of the resolution, and particularly explained that the purpose was not to accumulate more copies of public documents in the Library building, but primarily to promote the system of international exchange. I understand that both the Senators were satisfied with the explanation.

Sincerely hoping that the resolution may be brought up and passed, so that proceedings under it may be taken in the long recess, I am,

Very respectfully,

HERBERT PUTNAM,
Librarian of Congress.

I inclose herewith copy of a letter to Senator HAWLEY, which covers the points raised by him.

Hon. T. C. PLATT,
Chairman Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I will state also that the joint resolution involves an expense of something less than $900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York

asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA BATTLEFIELDS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 4,000 extra copies of the Atlas of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga Battlefields, with such additional positions as have been identified, 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Secretary of War and the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park Commission.

GENERAL STAFF OF THE ARMY.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution, submitted by Mr. HAWLEY on the 25th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives 6,000 copies of the Legislative History of the General Staff of the Army of the United States, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the War Department.

REPORT ON GEOGRAPHIC NAMES IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] on the 26th instant, to report it with an amendment changing the form of the resolution from a concurrent to a Senate resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read in the form now reported.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 15,000 copies of the Special Report of the United States Board on Geographic Names, relating to geographic names in the Philippine Islands, transmitted to Congress by the President February 21, 1901, 3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 5,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for distribution by said board among the Government Departments, public libraries, and other suitable depositories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

The resolution was agreed to.

TENNESSEE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) providing for the publication of the report of the board of management of the United States Government exhibit at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to apply so much as may be necessary of the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $100,000 provided in section 3 of the act to aid and encourage the holding of the Tennessee Centennial Exposition at Nashville in 1897, approved December 22, 1896, to the preparation of illustrations and the printing and binding at the Government Printing Office of 6,000 copies of the report of the board of management of the United States Government exhibit at the exposition, under the direction of the chairman of the board.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. WOLCOTT on the 23d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearings before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

MARTIN MAGINNIS.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. HOAR on the 23d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Martin Maginnis the sum of $2,000 in payment of expenses necessarily incurred by him in prosecuting his title to a seat in the Senate from the State of Montana under appointment of the governor of Montana.

INVESTIGATION BY FINANCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. ALDRICH on the 26th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make an investigation of internal revenue, customs, currency, and coinage matters, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess or sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

RICHARD R. KENNEY.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution reported by Mr. PETTUS from the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the 22d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there should be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Senator RICHARD R. KENNEY, of Delaware, the sum of $488, the amount expended by him in defending his right to a seat in the Senate.

PAYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. HALE on the 26th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate, adopted January 18, 1900, authorizing the Committee on the District of Columbia to employ an assistant clerk, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "during the Fifty-sixth Congress."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 6062) to further promote the study of military science and tactics at institutes of learning; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 6063) for the relief of Edward Haile, surviving partner of Savage & Haile; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 6064) for the relief of Samuel M. Blair; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $182,844.96 to pay amounts found by commissioners of the Court of Claims to be due letter carriers under the act of May 24, 1888, entitled "An act to limit the hours that letter carriers in cities shall be employed per day," intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment proposing that on and after the 1st day of July, 1901, and during the next fiscal year Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress whose claim to a seat has not been adversely decided shall receive $7,500 per annum each, which shall be paid in lieu of all pay and allowances, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment proposing to amend sections 2529 and 2544 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so that there shall be one appraiser of merchandise at each of said ports instead of two, and increasing the salaries of the appraisers from $3,000 to $4,000 each, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. THURSTON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for the relief of Rasmussen & Strehlow, contractors on Government work, on account of damages done to the main building at the Pan-American Exposition, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $86,018.26 in payment of amounts due as salaries for various persons who served as United States Senators between March 4, 1867, and March 20, 1870, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEITFELD submitted an amendment providing that all moneys received from the sale and disposal of public lands in the arid and semiarid regions of the United States, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, except money set aside by law for educational purposes, shall be, and are hereby, reserved, set aside, and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury, to be known as the "arid-land-reclamation fund," etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

STATUTES RELATING TO PATENTS.

Mr. PRITCHARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 500 extra copies of the report of the commissioners to revise the statutes relating to patents, etc., as submitted to the Committee on Patents, with an index and other matter and corrections made by the commissioners, be printed for the use of the Committee on Patents.

CORPORATIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution of inquiry which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to report to the Senate the list of persons and corporations in arrears to the District of Columbia for personal taxes to the amount of $472,185.05, as noted in the report of the collector of taxes for the year ended June 30, 1900; and that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to report to the Senate the names of all banks, trust companies, safe deposit companies, railroad companies, gas companies, electric lighting companies, telephone companies, local insurance companies, title insurance companies, market companies, etc., doing business in the District of Columbia, giving the capital (and surplus and undivided profits, if any) of each, and the amount of tax (other than real estate tax) paid by each to the District of Columbia for the year ended June 30, 1900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SEWELL. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under the rule.

SHIPPING INTERESTS.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce of the Senate be authorized to employ an experienced and competent person skilled in the legislative history of Congress, who shall compile, under the direction of said committee or subcommittee thereof, legislation or proposed legislation relating to the maritime or shipping interests of the United States in chronological order, who shall be paid therefor such compensation, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, as may be certified by the Committee on Commerce, subject to the approval of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

LETTERS OF JEFFERSON ON CUBAN ANNEXATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. HANSBROUGH on the 18th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed to send to the Senate copies of letters written by Thomas Jefferson to President Madison and President Monroe concerning the annexation of Cuba.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. Are not those letters in our edition of the Jefferson and Madison papers?

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] is not here.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from North Dakota is not present, and the resolution might lie over. I think all those letters are to be found in public documents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie over, retaining its place?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will lie over, retaining its place.

HOURS OF LABOR ON GOVERNMENT WORK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 557, by Mr. PETTIGREW:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6882) limiting the hours of daily service——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There are two resolutions offered by the Senator from South Dakota coming over. I ask him if he is not willing to take the other one this morning first?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to dispose of this one. I am willing that one or the other shall go over.

Mr. SEWELL. I understand that it will cause debate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This one will cause debate, possibly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope it will be disposed of, because it is near the close of the session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW on the 26th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6882) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia, thereby securing better products, and for other purposes, and that the Senate proceed to consider the same.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, this resolution ought to be considered and passed and the legislation enacted to which it refers.

Last year the House of Representatives passed the bill. It is an eight-hour law. The House evidently considered it good legislation, and the labor organizations of this country insist upon its being enacted into a law.

On the 23d of May this bill was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. That committee did not act upon it. On the 4th or 5th of June I offered a resolution similar to the one just read at the desk, asking the Senate to discharge the committee from the consideration of the bill and report it to the Senate so that we might act upon it. Upon a roll call my resolution was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The majority of this body voted unanimously to so refer it; and the bill has remained there ever since. Representatives of the Federation of Labor have importuned that committee every week during this whole session to try to secure immediate action upon this proposed legislation. The committee has utterly refused to take up the matter and report the bill either adversely or favorably. Under these circumstances I believe the laboring men of this country are entitled to have this committee discharged as incompetent to perform its functions as a committee of this body, and that we should proceed to the consideration of the measure.

In this connection, for the purpose of not taking up the time of the Senate, I desire to have printed in the RECORD, from the American Federationist, a history of this legislation in the last session of Congress. This article is signed by Andrew Furuseth, George Chance, and T. F. Tracy, the legislative committee of the Federation of Labor. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE EIGHT-HOUR BILL.

The eight-hour bill (H. R. 6882; S. 4521), "A bill limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon public works of, or work done for, the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia."

This bill was drafted in the early part of the second session of the Fifty-fifth Congress by Representative GARDNER of New Jersey. It passed the House in the same session. It was introduced in the Senate by Senator KYLE, of South Dakota, and after extensive hearings, reported to the Senate by the Senate committee without recommendation. It was called up by Senator Cannon, of Utah, during the same session, but was headed off by a motion made by Senator WOLCOTT, of Colorado, to go into executive session, and the session finally adjourned without any action being taken on the bill.

In the first meeting after the Christmas holidays in the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, Senator KYLE, of South Dakota, moved to re-refer the bill to the Committee on Education and Labor and the motion was adopted. Then began again extensive hearings, and finally the bill was re-reported back to the Senate by a majority and a minority report, the minority report being signed by Senators KYLE, of South Dakota, and CAFFERY, of Louisiana. It was called up by Senator Turley, of Tennessee, by a motion to go into a consideration of the bill, which motion was carried, but was immediately side tracked by one of the appropriation bills. There being no further time left, it thus died in the Fifty-fifth Congress.

It was re-introduced in the Fifty-sixth Congress, on January 19, by Representative GARDNER, of New Jersey, as H. R. 6882, and after hearings which lasted about three months it was reported to the House with amendments. These hearings, 9 in all, 8 of which were given to the opposition, were attended by representatives of the Carnegie Steel Works (armor makers), the Bethlehem Steel Works (armor), the Midvale Steel Works (shells), the Newport News Shipbuilding Company, the Cramp Shipbuilding Company, the New York Shipbuilding Company, of New Jersey, the Bath Shipbuilding Company, of Bath, Me., the Union Iron Works, of California, sundry small-arms manufacturers in Connecticut, and other firms who contract with the United States Government.

The final hearing on the bill was on April 12, when it was closed by an extensive argument of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, whereupon the next meeting of the committee was to take up and consider the bill in executive session. There was considerable difficulty in obtaining a quorum, but through the efforts of the chairman of the committee, Representative GARDNER, of New Jersey, and the loyal support given by Representatives BARTHOLDT, of Missouri; SHOWALTER, of Pennsylvania; RHEA, of Kentucky; CALDWELL, of Illinois, and CUMMINGS and REARDON, of New York, the bill was finally ordered to be reported.

Your committee then obtained a copy of the bill as indorsed by the Committee on Labor of the House and requested Senator PENROSE, of Pennsylvania, a member of the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate, to introduce the bill in the Senate, a request which he promptly complied with on May 1, 1900. Below find in parallel columns the bill as introduced in the House and as reported to the House and also introduced in the Senate:

H. R. 6882. A bill limiting the hours of daily services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public works of or work done for the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the time of service of all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon any public work of or work done for the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, whether said work is done by contract or otherwise, is hereby limited and restricted to eight hours in any one calendar day; and it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States, or of any Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any person acting for or on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or said District, or any contractor or subcontractor for any part of any public works of, or work done for the United States, or any Territory, or said District, or any person whose duty it shall be to employ or to direct and control the services of such laborers, workmen, or mechanics, or who has in fact the direction or control of the services of such laborers, workmen, or mechanics, to require or permit them, or any of them, to labor more than eight hours in any one calendar day, except in cases of extraordinary emergency caused by fire, flood, or danger to life or property, and work upon public military or naval works or defenses in time of war.

SEC. 2. That each and every contract to which the United States, any Territory, or the District of Columbia is a party, and every contract made for or on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or said District, which contract may involve the employment of laborers, workmen, or mechanics, shall contain a stipulation that no laborer, workman, or mechanic in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor doing or contracting to do any part of the work contemplated by the contract, shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day; and each and every such contract shall stipulate a penalty for each violation of the stipulation directed by this act of $10 for each laborer, workman, or mechanic, for each and every calendar day in which he shall labor more than eight hours; and the inspector or other officer or person whose duty it shall be to see that the provisions of any such contract are complied with, shall report to the proper officer of the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, all violations of the stipulation in this act provided for in each and every such contract, and the amount of the penalties stipulated in any such contract shall be withheld by the officer or person whose duty it shall be to pay the moneys due under such contract, whether the violations for which said penalties were imposed were by the contractor, his agents or employees, or any subcontractor, his agents or employees. No person on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, shall rebate or remit any penalty imposed under any stipulation herein provided for, unless upon a finding which he shall make up and certify that such penalty was imposed by reason of an error of fact.

SEC. 3. That any officer of the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any person acting for or on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, who shall violate the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be subject to a fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court, the fine not to exceed $500, nor the imprisonment one year.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act, in so far as they are inconsistent, be, and the same are hereby, repealed. But nothing in this act shall apply to any existing contract or to soldiers and sailors enlisted, respectively, in the Army or Navy of the United States, or to seamen on seagoing vessels.

S. 4521. A bill limiting the hours of daily services of laborers and mechanics employed on work for the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia, thereby securing better products, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That each and every contract hereafter made to which the United States, any Territory, or the District of Columbia is a party, and every such contract made for or on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or said District, which may require or involve the employment of laborers or mechanics, shall contain a provision that no laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work contemplated by the contract, in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor contracting for any part of the said work, shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day; and each and every such contract shall stipulate a penalty for each violation of the provision directed by this act of $5 for each laborer or mechanic for each and every calendar day in which he shall labor more than eight hours; and any officer or person designated as inspector of the work to be performed under any such contract, or to aid in enforcing the fulfillment thereof, shall, upon observation or investigation, report to the proper officer of the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia all violations of the provisions in this act directed to be made in each and every such contract, and the amount of the penalty stipulated in any such contract shall be withheld by the officer or person whose duty it shall be to pay the money due under such contract, whether the violation of the provisions of such contract is by the contractor, his agents, or employees, or any subcontractor, his agents, or employees. No person on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia shall rebate or remit any penalty imposed under any provisions or stipulations herein provided for, unless upon a finding which he shall make up and certify that such penalty was imposed by reason of an error in fact.

Nothing in this act shall apply to contracts for transportation by land or water, nor shall the provisions and stipulations in this act provided for affect so much of any contract as is to be performed by way of transportation or for such material as may usually be bought in the open market, whether made to conform to particular specifications or not.

The proper officer on behalf of the United States, any Territory, or the District of Columbia may waive the provisions and stipulations in this act provided for as to contracts for military or naval works or supplies during time of war or at a time when war is imminent. No penalties shall be exacted for violation of such provisions due to extraordinary emergency caused by fire, flood, or danger to life or property. Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal or modify chapter 352 of the laws of the Fifty-second Congress, approved August 1, 1892, or as an attempt to abridge the pardoning power of the Executive.

Immediately after the introduction of the bill in the Senate we went to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, endeavoring to obtain some information as to what course would be followed by the Senate committee. Senator KYLE referred us to his clerk, who informed us that while he was not speaking for the committee he felt satisfied that there would be no necessity for any hearings, owing to the extensive hearings that had been held by the Senate committee during the previous Congress, and the further and still more extensive hearings which had been held by the House Committee on Labor in the present Congress, both of which hearings had been printed, and further, that as soon as the House had acted upon the bill the committee would no doubt then take up and consider the bill in executive session.

The bill having been reported to the House, we sought an interview with the Speaker of the House for the purpose of urging that a special time be set aside for the consideration of the eight-hour bill and the convict-labor bill. The Speaker accorded us the interview, in which Representatives DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, and GROSVENOR, of Ohio, members of the Committee on Rules, were present. After the Speaker and Committee on Rules had listened to what we had to say, they stated that they would take the matter under advisement. We reported this to Representative GARDNER, chairman of the Committee on Labor, and arrangements were entered into by which he was authorized and instructed to call up these two bills at the first opportunity. A few days later bills were being taken up by unanimous consent, but our bills could not be taken up that day from the fact that Representative BAILEY of Texas had served notice that he was opposed to the bill and would object, and sat in his seat all that day for the purpose of objecting in the event of the bills being called up. Our next recourse was to have the bills taken up under a suspension of the rules, which requires a two-thirds vote. This method was adopted, and we again met with a strong opposition from Representative BAILEY; in fact he was the only man who spoke in opposition to the bills, but despite this opposition the eight-hour bill passed the House, only 24 votes being cast against it, and the prison-labor bill passing by a unanimous vote on May 21, 1900.

On the next day, Tuesday, May 22, we went to the committee room of the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate to call attention that the bills had passed the House and to urge immediate consideration by the Senate committee, and were then informed that the Senate Committee on Education and Labor would hold no more meetings during that session of Congress. We then went to see the members of the committee. We saw Senator TURLEY, of Tennessee, and were informed by him and Senator LINDSAY, of Kentucky, that they had been informed by the chairman that the business before the committee was cleared up and disposed of, and that there was a tacit understanding based upon that presumption that there would be no more meetings of the committee. They did state, however, that they were perfectly willing to meet, consider, and report upon these two bills. We then saw Senator KYLE, who informed us that he did not think anything could be done with the bills this session, and that the new members of the committee would desire hearings upon the bills. The new Senators on the committee are Senators MCCOMAS, of Maryland, and DANIEL, of Virginia. We saw them and were assured by them that they desired no hearings; that the hearings already had and in print were sufficient for them. We went to Senators PERKINS, of California, and PENROSE, of Pennsylvania, to urge that the committee be called together, and they promised that they would request Senator KYLE to call a meeting, and that they would attend the same. We received the same assurance from Senators LINDSAY, TURLEY, MCCOMAS, and DANIEL, whereupon we went to Senator KYLE and reported the matter to him. He then, on Tuesday, May 29, stated that he would call a meeting for Thursday, May 31.

On Wednesday we again saw the Senators to remind them of the meeting, and were surprised to ascertain that they had received no official notice of any meeting. They again stated that they would attend upon receiving such a notice. Senator LINDSAY said that he had business in New York on that day, but he had made arrangements so as to remain in Washington and attend the meeting.

Thursday, May 31, we called at the office of Senator PENROSE, and found that no official notice had been received. At 11 o'clock we called at the committee room on Education and Labor, and were there told by Senator KYLE that a meeting had been called by him and that everything had been prepared for the meeting, but that none of the Senators on the committee had appeared. We informed Senator KYLE that the different Senators on the committee which we had seen had been waiting an official call and had received none, whereupon the Senator stated that he had asked them personally on May 29 (Tuesday) to attend the committee meeting.

We saw Senators TURLEY, PENROSE, and other Senators about this matter and were informed that they had not understood Senator KYLE to call a meeting, but that he had endeavored to ascertain whether he could obtain a quorum, and that they had promised to be present upon a call.

The bills had passed the House on May 21, and would, under ordinary circumstances, be reported to the Senate on the 22d and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. The following letter, under date of May 28, written by Senator KYLE to George W. Perkins, president of the Cigar Makers' International Union, is interesting in connection with the statements above made:

MAY 28, 1900.

GEORGE W. PERKINS, Esq.,
President Cigar Makers' International Union,
Monon Building, Chicago, Ill.

MY DEAR SIR: Yours of the 21st duly received. In reply will state that the House bill 6882, to which you refer, was referred to my committee only three or four days ago, after we had held our last committee meeting for this session. Since the passage of the bill by the House, scores of protests have come from all parts of the country, and it is the impression of the committee that it will be impossible to consider the case at this time. The Senate is holding sessions beginning at 11 o'clock in the morning, all committees having given up hearings except the Committee on Appropriations.

Very truly, yours, JAMES H. KYLE.

The fact that Senator ELKINS, of West Virginia, on Tuesday, May 29, introduced Senate 4906, a "bill providing for leaves of absence to certain employees of the Government," which bill was reported from the committee by Senator KYLE on Thursday, May 31, is another interesting incident, and would indicate that if there had been any desire on the part of Senator KYLE to report upon these two bills, H. R. 6882 and H. R. 5450, it might have been done.

Immediately after obtaining the information about the adjournment of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor for the session, we reported the matter to President Gompers, and steps were taken to inform the executive officers of the different national and international unions of the existing situation. Daniel J. Keefe, president of the International Longshoremen's Association; John Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers of America; M. M. Garland, ex-president of the Iron and Steel Workers, and Harry White, secretary of the Garment Workers, upon request, came to Washington with a view of urging the passage of these two bills at this session of Congress. They had interviews with Senators CULLOM, of Illinois; HANNA and FORAKER, of Ohio; ELKINS, of West Virginia, and PLATT of New York, seeking to enlist their sympathy, and succeeded to the extent of obtaining the promise from them that when the bills came before the Senate they would vote for them. As to what they did, see the vote taken.

It was remembered that the President of the United States had, in his message to the Fifty-fifth Congress, recommended amendments to the eight-hour law which would make it more effective, and the President was appealed to in the matter. On Tuesday, the 29th, we were assured that the bills would come out of the Senate committee on Thursday, be reported to the Senate, and considered.

On Thursday afternoon, in an interview with Senator KYLE, we were again promised by him that he would call the committee together so that the bills could be acted upon. We had in the meantime seen members of the "steering committee" about our bill; we had urged the justice of, and the necessity for, the adoption of especially the eight-hour bill, using as an argument that if it is not enacted during this session of Congress, the appropriations made for the increase of the Navy would be contracted for, and hence all the war ships and the armor for the same would be made under such conditions as to hours of labor as the contractors might decide, or be able to compel their employees to accept.

We received assurance that they "favored an eight-hour workday," and the other statements were such as to justify our hope that the bill would be considered and passed during this session. Friday came and went; no committee meeting; no action taken. Saturday came and went; no committee meeting; no action taken. So far as your committee was able to ascertain, there was no intention on the part of the majority in the Senate to pass this bill during this session of Congress. On Monday, June 4, after consultation, it was decided to ask Senator ALLEN, of Nebraska, to offer a motion to discharge the Committee on Education and Labor from further consideration of the eight-hour bill, and to put it on its passage, which he promised to do.

During an interview with Senator PETTIGREW we were informed by him that during that day the Senate had taken the following action with reference to bills H. R. 5450, H. R. 6882, and H. R. 10539:

"Mr. PETTIGREW. Here is a bill, House bill 5450, that ought to engage the attention of the Senate. It is a bill 'to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the several States in goods, wares, and merchandise, wholly or in part manufactured by convict labor, or in any prison or reformatory.' I have received many letters from all over the country with regard to the evil proposed to be corrected by this legislation. This bill ought to be passed before we adjourn, and I am going to insist upon placing it in antagonism to any other unanimous consent that may be asked until we act upon it.

"There is another bill, House bill 6882, 'limiting the hours of daily services of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, thereby securing better products, and for other purposes.' This is a bill with regard to labor, and it ought also to be considered.

"There is still another bill, Mr. President, and that is the proposed anti-trust law which was passed by the House of Representatives. The Senate ought to take up that bill and dispose of it at this session of Congress; and there is no special reason why we should adjourn until we do it. As far as I am concerned, I am going to antagonize and oppose every request for unanimous consent that less important subjects may be considered which leaves out these important measures." (Page 7015, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

On page 7037, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, we find the following record of an endeavor on the part of Senator ALLEN, of Nebraska, to have the Committee on Education and Labor discharged from further consideration of H. R. 6882 and to place it on the Calendar. This colloquy between Senators ALLEN, of Nebraska, PLATT of Connecticut, and ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, is very interesting:

"Mr. ALLEN. I desire to enter a motion to discharge the committee having in charge the consideration of House bill 6882 and to place it on the Calendar.

"Mr. HALE. What bill is that?

"Mr. ALLEN. It is what is known as the eight-hour bill.

"Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is not in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement.

"Mr. ALLEN. I desire to enter that motion at this time.

"Mr. ALDRICH. You can not do that.

"Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I object to that.

"Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator from Rhode Island object to it?

"Mr. ALDRICH. It is in violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

"Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator from Rhode Island object to it?

"Mr. ALDRICH. I do object. I object to anything which is contrary to the unanimous-consent agreement.

"Mr. ALLEN. Let it be noted, then, that the Senator from Rhode Island objects.

"Mr. ALDRICH. Of course it will be noted."

On page 7039 we find the following:

"Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent to have the resolution laid on the table and printed without reading.

"Mr. ALDRICH. What is it about?

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

"Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the resolution read for information.

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

"The Secretary read as follows: 'Resolved that the Committee on Education and Labor'——

"Mr. ALDRICH. I object to it, anyhow. It is out of the unanimous-consent agreement. I object to its reception.

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made."

This was the resolution to discharge the committee from further consideration of H. R. 6882 and H. R. 5450, and to place these bills on the Calendar.

As will be seen, it was objected to by Senator ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. On the next day, the 5th, it was regularly introduced, and would therefore become the regular order under morning business on the 6th.

After some consultation between your committee and the president and secretary of the Federation, it was decided that the following letter be sent to all the Senators:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 5, 1900.

Hon. NELSON W. ALDRICH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As you are no doubt aware, there are now pending in Congress two bills, one commonly known as the eight-hour bill (H. R. 6882) and the other the prison labor bill (H. R. 5450). Both of these bills passed the House of Representatives by practically a unanimous vote, and both have been referred to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

On May 1, 1900, the eight-hour bill was introduced in the Senate by Hon. BOISE PENROSE, identically as it subsequently passed the House. Despite the efforts of the friends of the bill, a meeting of the Committee on Education and Labor has not been held for its consideration and report thereon, this, too, in view of the fact that we have every reason to believe that a majority of the committee favor its passage.

It may not be amiss to call attention to the fact that the eight-hour law of 1892 proved a sad disappointment to those who favored it; for it was found to be ineffective in so far as its scope and operations are concerned, and from that time until the present there have been uninterrupted efforts on the part of the working people, organized and unorganized, to secure its amendment in each subsequent Congress. In the Fifty-fifth Congress practically the pending bill was introduced, passed the House by unanimous vote, and failed of enactment in the closing hours of the Congress by reason of the then pressing appropriation bills to carry on the war with Spain. Though greatly disappointed at the failure of the passage of the eight-hour bill, we realized the grave situation which confronted our country, and comforted ourselves in the firm conviction that at the earliest opportunity in this Congress the bill would be enacted into law. The bill was introduced in the House and its opponents requested us not to have it introduced in the Senate, and thus abstain from taking an unfair advantage of them by diffusing their efforts. To this we consented. The bill was introduced in the House, referred to the Committee on Labor, and nine hearings were had thereon, covering a period of nearly ten weeks. Eight of these hearings were devoted exclusively to the hearings and arguments of the opposition, and they finally exhausted all their resources to oppose its passage. The Committee of Labor unanimously reported the bill favorably to the House; and, as stated above, it passed by a practically unanimous vote. It should be stated too that these hearings and arguments have been printed as are also the hearings and arguments upon the same bill for the Senate Committee on Education and Labor in the last Congress. Thus opponents have no good ground to claim that further hearings should be had on the bill, and the evidence and arguments have for nearly two months been at the disposal of the Senators and Members of the House.

Nor is it out of place to correct the impression which the opponents have endeavored to create in the minds of some Senators that the bill contains a penalty of imprisonment for violation of its provisions. Even a casual examination of the bill will demonstrate its eminent practicability and its freedom from any provision against the interests of the people or the policy and interests of the Government. That the principle involved in this bill for a shorter workday is economically and socially right and just is not even questioned by its opponents; that the demand for the eight-hour day is universal among the toilers of the United States can not be questioned. In the language of one of the most prominent citizens of our country, "the eight-hour day is as great a shibboleth and principle with the working people of the United States as is the Gospel to the devout Christian and the Declaration of Independence to the patriotic American."

What is true of the eight-hour bill is equally true of the bill to regulate prison labor.

It is said that there is now not sufficient time to pass this bill at the present session of Congress. It is not out of place to say that there is a grave suspicion in the minds of many working people that unless the bill does pass before this session of Congress adjourns that their interests have been trifled with and their credulity imposed upon. There can be no question but if there is a real disposition to pass this bill it can be enacted, ample hearings and arguments having been had thereon.

The wage-workers of America, who are expecting relief, will be unable to understand why it is not granted when the Congress has power to do so. There can be no question but that the failure to grant this relief at this session of Congress will contribute largely to destroy the belief held by earnest, thinking, conservative workers that when their grievances are intelligently presented to Congress they will be remedied by legislative action.

If this subject-matter and the bill itself had not received ample discussion, I should hesitate to make the suggestion I now do; that is, to favor the proposition now pending in the Senate, and which will be before that body for consideration to-morrow—Wednesday, June 6, 1900—to discharge the Senate Committee on Education and Labor from further consideration of the eight-hour bill and the prison-labor bill and put them on their passage.

For the above reasons, and in the name of the workers of our country, both organized and unorganized, I earnestly beseech you to work and vote to secure the passage of these bills.

Very respectfully yours, SAML. GOMPERS,
President A. F. of L.

This letter was delivered to the Senators during the night session between the 5th and 6th.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 7332 and 7333, we find the following:

"Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 397, which is on the table.

"Mr. HAWLEY. I move to lay the motion on the table.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from South Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution No. 397, and the Senator from Connecticut moves to lay the motion on the table.

"Mr. PETTIGREW. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

"Mr. CHANDLER. Is a motion to proceed to the consideration of a measure subject to be laid on the table?

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair will rule that it is not. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Dakota, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be read.

"Mr. ALLISON. Is the resolution pending before the Senate?

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

"Mr. LODGE. No; it has never been reported.

"Mr. ALLISON. The motion of the Senator from South Dakota is to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill and therefore the bill is not before the Senate.

"Mr. PETTIGREW. I simply ask to have the resolution considered.

"Mr. ALLISON. The resolution to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill?

"Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; it comes over from yesterday.

"Mr. CULLOM. Read the resolution.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

"The SECRETARY. Senate resolution No. 397——

"Mr. HAWLEY. I want this thing distinctly understood. Does the Chair rule that my motion is not in order?

"Mr. CULLOM. What was the motion?

"Mr. HAWLEY. To lay on the table.

"Mr. LODGE. To lay on the table the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

"Mr. CHANDLER. It is not in order pending the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

"Mr. HAWLEY. I move to lay the motion of the Senator from South Dakota on the table.

"Mr. CHANDLER. If the resolution is taken up, it will be in order to move to lay it on the table.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is constrained to rule against the Senator from Connecticut. A motion to lay on the table is not in order under the rules of the Senate. The motion being nondebatable, it can not be laid on the table.

"Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. When the resolution is once before the Senate, then a motion to lay it on the table will be in order.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unquestionably.

"Mr. PETTIGREW. Is not the resolution in order as coming over from yesterday, and therefore before the Senate, and any proper motion is in order?

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is not aware of any arrangement or suggestion that may have been made concerning the resolution. He will be pleased to be informed.

"Mr. PETTIGREW. The resolution was offered yesterday and went over, on objection, under the rule. It therefore comes up regularly.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that is the status of the resolution, it undoubtedly would come in its regular order without a motion.

"Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. And it is now before the Senate.

"Mr. CULLOM. Read it.

"Mr. PETTIGREW. Let it be read.

"Mr. HAWLEY. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let it be read first.

"The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW on the 5th instant, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from further consideration of H. R. 6882, an act limiting the hours of daily services of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia, thereby securing better products, and for other purposes, and that said committee be also discharged from the further consideration of H. R. 5450, an act to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the several States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory, and that both of said bills be placed upon the Calendar.

"Mr. HAWLEY. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to lay the resolution on the table.

"Mr. PETTIGREW and Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

"The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

"Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], but I transfer it to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and will vote. I vote 'nay.'

"Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

"Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I should vote 'nay' if he were present.

"Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. Not seeing him in the Chamber, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote 'yea.'

"Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Gear].

"Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

"Mr. BATE (when Mr. TURLEY'S name was called). My colleague is absent. He is paired, however, with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If my colleague were here, he would vote 'nay.'

"The roll call was concluded.

"Mr. LODGE. I announced my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and will vote. I vote 'yea.'

"Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. I withhold my vote.

"Mr. BACON. My colleague [Mr. CLAY] has been unavoidably called to attend to some urgent business in one of the Departments. He left under an arrangement to pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote 'nay.'

"The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—33.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

In conclusion, we desire to say that of the sundry measures above referred to it is worthy of note that when they passed the House they were buried in the Senate, and when they passed the Senate they were, with one exception (the abolition of slavery in Hawaii), buried in the House.

Respectfully submitted.

ANDREW FURUSETH,
GEO. CHANCE,
T. F. TRACY,
Legislative Committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now, I desire to have the Secretary read a letter handed to me by this legislative committee, dated February 26.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the letter? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to ask who wrote that letter? It seems to be a letter in criticism of the action of a committee of this body.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The letter was written by the representatives of the Federation of Labor—their legislative committee. It is not a criticism, but is a statement of facts.

Mr. GALLINGER. The letter will go into the RECORD, I have no doubt; and yet I want to protest against some party outside writing a letter in criticism of a committee of this body and having it spread upon the record, without any knowledge on our part as to whether the facts are as stated or not. I think it is a very bad custom to pursue in the Senate. I do not, however, object to the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the reading of the letter began the Chair inquired if there was objection, and no objection was made. The Secretary will continue the reading.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the letter, which is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26, 1901.

DEAR SIR: We desire to call your attention to the status of the bills now pending in the Senate, particularly H. R. 6882, and the manner in which consideration of that bill has been treated during the present session of Congress.

We have endeavored all during the session to have a committee meeting to consider this bill among others. The chairman of the committee, Senator KYLE, has insisted that before our bills could receive consideration there must be present at the meeting a quorum of the committee. Many meetings have been called, and to our full knowledge there has not been a quorum present at any meeting of the committee held during this session.

We have also been promised that meetings would be called on certain days; and we found upon investigation that no call had been sent out. In interviewing some of the Senators who are on the committee, they took objection to the time of day at which the meeting was called, to wit, 11 o'clock a. m., stating that the Senate going into session at that hour it was necessary for them to be on the floor of the Senate instead of attending committee meetings. This fact was brought to the attention of Senator KYLE, and he informed us that he would again call a meeting of the committee for that hour, and assured us that it would be easier to get a quorum at that time than at any hour earlier in the day. That meeting was supposed to have been called for a week ago last Friday; but, on going to the committee room, we were informed that the chairman of the committee had not called a meeting for that day.

It was again promised us that a meeting would be called for the following Tuesday; and on that day there was not a quorum present.

We then pressed for another meeting, and it was agreed that there should be a meeting on last Saturday at 10.30 o'clock a. m. Two of the members of the committee—Senators PERKINS and TURLEY—were present at that time, and waited in the committee room until 11 o'clock, when they had to leave to attend to their duties on the floor of the Senate. Later, Senators MCCOMAS and DANIEL appeared at the committee room and stayed there for some time, presumably considering the eight-hour bill. At no one time was there a quorum of the committee present.

From interviews held with the various members of the committee, we are firmly of the opinion that had the committee had the opportunity of meeting at an hour that would not have conflicted with their other duties the bill would have been reported from the committee early in this session.

It is peculiar to notice that on page 207 of the July issue of the American Federationist that Senator KYLE says, over his own signature, to G. W. Perkins, president of the Cigar Makers' International Union, in reply to a letter received by him, and answered on May 28, 1900, that one of the reasons for the committee, during the last session of Congress, not holding meetings to consider these bills was from the fact that the Senate began meeting at 11 o'clock in the morning, and for that reason the committee could not be gotten together. It is also strange to notice that every meeting, or every supposed meeting, of the committee that was called during this session, with the exception of the meeting last Saturday, which was called at 10.30, was called at the very hour at which the chairman of the committee contended it was impossible to get a meeting during the last session of Congress.

Further than this, we beg to note that while there was not a quorum present at the meeting last Saturday, the chairman of the committee yesterday reported to the Senate from the committee an amendment to the sundry civil bill calling for an appropriation in the direction of extending the life of the Industrial Commission for another two years.

We feel that we are justified in asking you to press the resolution which you have introduced, as, in any event, it is as well that our bill dies on the floor of the Senate as to have it practically strangled in a pocket or pigeonhole in the desk of the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor.

We inclose herein copy of our report on the eight-hour bill during the last session of Congress, which will be found on page 205 and succeeding pages.

With every expression of good wishes, we remain, yours, very truly,

ANDREW FURUSETH,
THOS. F. TRACY,
Legislative Committee, American Federation of Labor.

Hon. R. F. PETTIGREW,
United States Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this resolution is not in order during the morning hour; that it is a resolution not only to discharge the committee, but to proceed to the consideration of the bill named; and that that part of the resolution clearly is not in order, and when such a motion is made it must be decided without debate. That portion of the resolution to proceed to the consideration of a bill can only be made when the morning hour has expired.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator means when the morning business has been concluded.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; when the morning business has been concluded, and the Calendar of the Senate is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to amend the resolution so as to strike out the last two lines, which provide that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. I offer the resolution in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota modifies his resolution. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, after the word "purposes," strike out "and that the Senate proceed to consider the same."

Mr. PETTIGREW. As modified, I desire that the resolution shall be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not think this resolution ought to be adopted, especially after the criticism of this committee, which, the Senator from South Dakota says, is insisting on this legislation, and which has been spread upon the record, reflecting upon the chairman of a committee of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. I do not like to cut off the Senator from Connecticut, but I think he is out of order. My proposition is that this resolution, having been ruled out of order as containing in it a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill named before the morning business is over, and the Chair having sustained the point of order, the resolution can not then be amended and made in order. The Senator from South Dakota must introduce a new resolution, which would go over until the next day under the ordinary rule of the Senate.

So I submit that the resolution can not now be proceeded with, even if an amendment is made to the resolution. That would be out of order. The matter has been ended and terminated by the ruling of the Chair, and the resolution can not be amended and presented and take precedence of all other business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I insist that the point of order was prematurely made. I had a right to modify the resolution before it was ruled upon, and therefore the rule of the Senate as practiced would be to consider the question open and not ruled upon.

Mr. HOAR. If the resolution was ruled out of order, it could bring nothing before the Senate for action. It is out of order and is not here, it having been so ruled, and the Senator can not take such lines of it as are in order and have the right of way and precedence by dropping the rest. He must introduce a new resolution; he has a right to do that and let it go over until to-morrow. That is my point.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think that course was pursued under the ruling of the Chair by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who moved to discharge a committee from the consideration of a bill and that the Senate proceed to its consideration. It was held that the resolution was out of order. Thereupon he introduced a new resolution, which went over until the next day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is clearly correct. The point of order having been made and having been ruled upon, there is no resolution before the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then, as modified, I desire to reintroduce the resolution at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from South Dakota presenting a resolution at this time? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. I object.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think there can be any objection to the Senator from South Dakota presenting a new resolution, with the last clause stricken out.

Mr. HAWLEY. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from South Dakota offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6882) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia, thereby securing better products, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

AUTOMATIC CAR COUPLERS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent to submit another resolution, which I ask to have read and go over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator presenting the resolution at this time? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from further consideration of H. R. 10302, an act to amend an act to promote the safety of employees, etc., by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, etc., approved March 2, 1893.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over on the request of the Senator offering it.

The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW on the 26th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from further consideration of H. R. 10302, an act to amend an act to promote the safety of employees, etc., by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, etc., approved March 2, 1893, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of said bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to withdraw that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO GUNNER CHARLES MORGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. ALLEN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of the letter of Charles Morgan, gunner in the United States Navy, addressed to Admiral W. T. Sampson in the month of February, 1901, asking for a recommendation to the Secretary of the Navy for promotion to the office of ensign in the Navy, and Admiral Sampson's indorsement thereof, and all other letters and communications on the subject between Admiral Sampson and the Navy Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SECURITIES OF INTERSTATE RAILROAD COMPANIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a statement showing in detail the character and par value of all common stock, preferred stock, mortgage bonds, income bonds, car trust certificates, and other securities issued or authorized to be issued by each railroad company subject to the provisions of the act to regulate commerce, together with the par value of each class of such securities outstanding on June 30, 1900, the rate of interest or dividends paid thereon during the year ended June 30, 1900, and the market value of such securities on March 31, June 30, September 30, and December 31, 1900.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not want to object. I think that if any Senator wants that information it certainly ought to be furnished, and so I shall favor the resolution.

Mr. KEAN. I think it had better go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HOAR. The only question with me regarding the resolution is whether a sum of money should not be put at the command of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or whether they can procure and furnish information at their own cost.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think unquestionably they can.

Mr. HOAR. Then I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. SEWELL. Any gentleman can get from the Interstate Commerce Commission any information in possession of the commission at any time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the commission can get information without any expenditure.

Mr. KEAN. I think the resolution had better be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Poor's Manual contains such information and is on sale almost everywhere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If that motion is made for the purpose of killing the resolution, I am very much opposed to it; but if the Committee on Interstate Commerce wish to examine the matter and will act upon it—and it is pretty hard to make them act on anything—I shall not object to its reference.

Mr. CULLOM rose.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not refer to the chairman of the committee, but he has a committee that will probably not report the resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I rise to inquire whether the resolution is to be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce or to the Commission on Interstate Commerce? I did not quite understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The information is called for from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no special objection to the Interstate Commerce Commission furnishing the Senate with the information.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the resolution be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read Mr. PETTIGREW's resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to the adoption of that resolution.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hope that order will not be made. It seems to me the Senate ought to observe its usual custom in this matter, unless in a very extreme case, and that is when a Senator asks for information from one of the Departments of the Government the Senate, as a general rule, authorizes it. Here is information which the Interstate Commerce Commission can undoubtedly furnish. They have the mechanism; it is one of the things they are created for, and I think the Senator has just as much right to have that information, unless it is going to be expensive to furnish it, as if he had asked that a book be sent for from the Library.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to say that we have not heard one word uttered by the Senator from Massachusetts on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. CULLOM. It is only a question of an inquiry to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] moved to refer the resolution to the Interstate Commerce Committee. I do not see any occasion for that reference. I do not see why the Interstate Commerce Commission might not be authorized to furnish the information.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee if the information called for is in the records of the commission, or will they have to investigate outside of those records?

Mr. CULLOM. They will be required to investigate beyond their own records, but that is part of their duty.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise for information.

Mr. STEWART. Has the Interstate Commerce Commission the means at hand for furnishing the information?

Mr. CULLOM. I think they have.

Mr. STEWART. Then I do not object.

Mr. HAWLEY. I want to ask some of the gentlemen who are more familiar with these questions than I am whether the whole of the information called for is not in Poor's Manual?

Mr. CULLOM. A great many of these things are in Poor's Manual.

Mr. SEWELL. My colleague [Mr. KEAN] suggested that the Senator who offered the resolution could get all the information called for in Poor's Manual, and in all probability the Interstate Commerce Commission will go to Poor's Manual to procure it.

Mr. HOAR. If all this information is in Poor's Manual and the commission will go to Poor's Manual to procure it, it can be done very easily, and they will send it here. We shall then have the advantage, when the information comes in, of that commission's indorsement of Poor's Manual, and it can be made a public document.

I wish to appeal to the Senate not to break, except for some very grave and serious reason, into the custom of the Senate, which, on the whole, has proved convenient and saved long discussions; and that is, when a Senator representing a State in this Union rises in his place and says, "I want some information in the discharge of my duties, or that it may be brought before the public in connection with the duties of the Senate," we grant that as a matter of course. I appeal to Senators not to break in upon that custom.

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw the motion I made, Mr. President, for the reference of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to refer is withdrawn. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

The resolution was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment to have considered and passed a local bridge bill, which has passed the House and has been favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NELSON. I hope the Senator will allow the river and harbor bill to be taken up, and then we can afterwards consider his bill.

Mr. MONEY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the amendments proposed by the Committee on Commerce be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. MONEY. Now, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the consideration of a local bridge bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For what purpose does the Senator from Michigan rise?

Mr. BURROWS. To present a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has that right.

DANIEL COONAN.

Mr. BURROWS. I submit the conference report which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan submits a conference report, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3288) for the relief of Daniel Coonan, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the amendment strike out the word "pensions," and the House agree to the same.

J. C. BURROWS,
F. E. WARREN,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on part of the Senate.

ADIN B. CAPRON,
F. C. STEVENS,
THOMAS M. JETT,
Managers on part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I rise to a privileged report. I present the report of the conference committee on the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey presents a conference report, which will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12846) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11 and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

After the word "Navy," at the end of line 17, page 1 of the amendments, add "or Marine Corps, until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 2 of the amendments, lines 17 and 18, strike out "allowances and emoluments," and on page 3, line 6, strike out "officers and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. J. SEWELL,
F. E. WARREN,
W. A. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. T. HULL,
CHARLES DICK,
JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SEWELL. I beg to say, in explanation of the report, that the House conferees recede from the eleventh and twelfth sections, which were proposed for the punishment of cadets, and we modified the original clause as adopted by the Senate by adding after the word "Navy," at the end of line 17, on page 1 of the amendment, "or Marine Corps, until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member." The punishment ceases at the end of two years from the graduation of the class of which the cadet was a member.

I think the report will be satisfactory to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I present the report of the committee on conference on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13801) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30,

1902, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 53, 55, 70, 72, 73, and 83.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 67, 68, 71, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, and 82; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 8, line 23, in lieu of the words "forty-three" insert the words "forty-six:" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 33, line 21, strike out the word "ten," stricken out by said amendment, and insert "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 33, line 22, strike out the word "sixty," stricken out by said amendment, and insert "sixty-three;" also, on page 33, line 24, after the word "Columbia," insert "of which sum $3,000 shall be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 34, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "forty-six," stricken out by said amendment, and insert "fifty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 39, in line 3, strike out the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
WILLIAM B. BATE,
Managers on part of the Senate.

J. W. WADSWORTH,
E. S. HENRY,
JOHN S. WILLIAMS,
Managers on part of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. I could not tell from the reading of the conference report, and of course no Senator could, just what is done. I should like to inquire with respect to the Senate amendment to increase the appropriation for the distribution of seeds. Did the House accept the Senate amendment or did the Senate conferees recede?

Mr. PROCTOR. The House by a vote, not by the act of the conferees, accepted the Senate amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. So the Senate amendment remains in?

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

SPANISH WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of Article VII of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to inquire whether this is the bill creating a commission to adjudicate claims?

Mr. FORAKER. It is.

Mr. BUTLER. I have myself, from what investigation I have been able to give it, very grave doubts about the wisdom of this legislation. It seems to me that it is an opening for a raid on the Treasury, the limit of which none of us can know. There is no Senator here who has any conception—unless it is the Senator in charge of the bill, and if he has he has not informed the Senate—how much appropriation this will lead to, how many claims it will cover.

Mr. FORAKER. This is to settle claims which the United States, by treaty with Spain, assumed and obligated itself to settle and pay. I do not know what will be the amount of those claims. I understand that there have been filed in the office of the Secretary of State claims amounting to something more than $20,000,000 in the aggregate. I do not know how just they are or to what extent they will be finally allowed, but the Senator will concede that the United States is under obligations to provide for the adjudication of those claims. It is an international obligation, a sacred compact, and one which we ought to proceed promptly to carry out.

When this measure was before the Senate and in the House it was debated as other measures are. It is now reported from a conference committee, and the only question is whether or not what the conferees have agreed upon shall be adopted by the respective Houses. The House of Representatives has adopted this report, and I hope the Senate will adopt it without further prolonging the consideration. I have had it passed over two or three times for further consideration, each time on account of a supposed constitutional question. I think all the lawyers in the Senate pretty much have examined the authorities in regard to that point, and are satisfied that there is no difficulty whatever about the provision on the ground of unconstitutionality.

Mr. BUTLER. Not being a member of the committee having the matter in charge, I do not feel familiar enough with the details of it to be justified in objecting or in detaining the matter further. Yet I do feel that it is a very serious piece of legislation, and that it is going to result in a great raid on the Treasury.

Mr. FORAKER. It can not. We are under obligations to hear and determine these claims, and whatever they are we have to pay them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

FORT FETTERMAN MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CLARK submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 323) entitled "An act granting homesteaders on the abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation in Wyoming the right to enter one quarter section of public land on said reservation as pasture or grazing land," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 4.

H. C. HANSBROUGH,
THOMAS H. CARTER,
C. D. CLARK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN D. LINNEY,
CHARLES H. BURKE,
JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

CITIZENS' BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13707) authorizing the Citizens' Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NELSON. I trust that Senators will not ask unanimous consent. There are three or four bridge bills, and if we let in one we have to let in all. I suggest to Senators who ask unanimous consent that there will be ample time when the appropriation bills are in conference to consider these bills. I dislike to object to anyone, but if you admit one you have to admit another, and there will be no end of it. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he defer his request until later in the day.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I supposed, when the motion was made to take up the river and harbor bill, that the Senator from Minnesota signified his intention to yield to me on this matter, which is of pressing importance.

Mr. NELSON. I will yield if Senators will not continue to ask further consent.

Mr. BATE. There are only three of these bridge bills, and they are all short and undisputed.

Mr. NELSON. There are three.

Mr. BATE. They are all bridge bills about which there is no contest, and they will take no time.

Mr. NELSON. I will yield to the three bridge bills, but after that I hope Senators will not ask further unanimous consent.

Mr. BATE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13707) authorizing the Citizens' Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUMBERLAND RIVER BRIDGE, CARTHAGE, TENN.

Mr. BATE. The next one of the three bills is the bill (H. R. 13992) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Carthage, Tenn., and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER (LOUISIANA) BRIDGES.

Mr. McENERY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 6054) authorizing the Texas and Pacific Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Red River, Louisiana. It is a short bill and will take but little time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota agreed to yield to three bridge bills.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Minnesota declined to yield to the Senator from Nebraska, but if he yields to the Senator from Louisiana, I shall have nothing to say about it.

Mr. NELSON. I shall have to decline to yield unless it is a bridge bill. I agreed to yield to three bridge bills.

Mr. BERRY. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is a bridge bill.

Mr. CLAY. I understand the Senator from Minnesota to yield to a bridge bill of 12 lines which I have.

Mr. NELSON. If it is a short bridge bill, I will yield to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Louisiana.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 5, after the word "Louisiana," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation;" so as to read:

That the Texas and Pacific Railway Company is hereby authorized and empowered to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River, Louisiana, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Turnbulls Island, so as to connect its lines south of Red River with proposed lines on the opposite or north bank of said river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 1, line 10, after the word "secured," to insert "and maintained;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be so constructed that a reasonable, free, and unobstructed passageway may be secured and maintained by proper draws to all water craft navigating said river at the point aforesaid, and that said draw or draws shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats and vessels.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 5, after the word "been," to insert "submitted to and;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That said bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plans and location of the same shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War; that no change shall be made in this construction, and no alteration of it after its construction, unless such change or alterations shall in like manner receive the approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following proviso at the end of section 3:

Provided, That if said bridge shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river or shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and such alteration shall be made and all such obstructions be removed at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 2, line 23, after the word "year," to strike out "after notification of the approval of plans" and insert "from the date of approval of this act;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. This act shall be null and void if the actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year from the date of approval of this act, etc., and completed within three years from the date thereafter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 6. That said bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to the said bridge, and shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal telegraph and telephone purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 7. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains over the same and the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; or, in case of disagreement, upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 8. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PEARL RIVER BRIDGE, MONTICELLO, MISS.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14144) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River at Monticello, Miss. It is approved by the Engineer Corps; it has been passed by the House; it has been approved by the Senate committee, and it will take only a minute to pass it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7571) to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 3 to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, further insists upon its disagreement to the said amendments to the bill, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUD, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, and Mr. SWANSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1136) for the relief of parties for property taken from them by military forces of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 13575) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 13822) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

FLINT RIVER (GEORGIA) BRIDGE.

Mr. CLAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13907) to revive and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Georgia Pine Railway of Georgia to construct a bridge across the Flint River, a navigable stream, in Decatur County, Ga." It is a short bridge bill, which has passed the House. It will take but a minute to pass it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR FROM NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. I can not very well yield.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I simply desire to make a statement.

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina to make a statement, if it is not long.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I intended to address the Senate this morning in regard to a motion which was recently made by my colleague to refer the credentials of Mr. Simmons, Senator-elect from the State which I have the honor in part to represent, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but inasmuch as the friends of the river and harbor bill are exceedingly anxious for the speedy consideration of that measure, I have decided not to address the Senate at this time, and I give notice that at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow I will submit some remarks to the Senate on the subject.

Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me to make a further statement?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

DISTRICT CODE.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I desire to make one more request in regard to the District code bill. That bill has passed the House with certain amendments; certain amendments have been made by the Senate District Committee in order to accommodate those who objected to the bill as it came from the House. I appeal to my distinguished friend the Senator from Minnesota to permit me to put the bill upon its passage at this time.

Mr. NELSON. I can not consent to that at this time.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I give notice that I will again call it up at the earliest opportunity.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 27th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 879) for the relief of Levi Stolz;

An act (S. 2946) for the relief of William H. Wanamaker; and

An act (S. 5350) for the establishment of a subport of entry at Douglas, Ariz.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 1, line 11, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the construction of breakwater from Mount Desert to Porcupine Island, Maine, from $12,500 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 9, to insert:

Improving Bucksport Harbor, Maine, in accordance with the project submitted in House Document No. 275, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, completing improvement, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 21, after the word "Vermont," to strike out "Continuing improvement, $25,000," and insert: "For the immediate renewal and repair of the existing breakwater, $57,750;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Burlington, Vt.: For the immediate renewal and repair of the existing breakwater, $57,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred thousand" and insert "one hundred and eighty-seven thousand five hundred;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended until the said project shall have been examined by a board of engineers and a favorable report made by them upon the feasibility and advisability of continuing said project to completion. And the said board shall also report whether, with advantage, any part of said original project can be completed, and if so, what part, and whether any modification can be made therein with a view to diminishing the cost.

And insert:

A special board of three engineers shall examine and report, not later than September 1, 1901, upon the feasibility and advisability of continuing said project to completion.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Cape Ann, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement, $187,500. A special board of three engineers shall examine and report, not later than September 1, 1901, upon the feasibility and advisability of continuing said project to completion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 25, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" and on page 4, line 5, after the word "aggregate," to strike out "$202,083.43" and insert "$227,083;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Gloucester, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $75,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the approved project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $227,083, exclusive of amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. NELSON. I move to amend the amendment in line 3, page 4, by striking out the word "complete" and inserting the word "prosecute."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 19, after the word "session," to insert "completing improvement;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Beverly, Mass., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 129, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, completing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and sixty-three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Boston, Mass.: For maintenance and general improvement, $100,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the appropriation for Boston has been cut by the committee, cut in pursuance of what I understand is the general policy. Of course we feel the importance of the harbor very strongly and the need of deepening our channel with a view of getting in large ships and cheapening transportation. It is the second port of the United States, and we have not thought our request unreasonable; but I entirely approve of the general policy of the committee in reducing this bill. It came over here too large.

Mr. President, I only desire to say that if the general policy of the committee is to be carried out, I shall submit to it absolutely, shall make no debate and no attempt to raise the appropriation, as far as Massachusetts is concerned; but if other amendments are to be let in, raising the cuts made by the committee—and wisely made, I think—my colleague and I, and I know other Senators, will be forced in, in order to defend their own projects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six hundred" and insert "four hundred and fifty;" and on page 6, line 4, before the word "million," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving said harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 119, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, by providing channels 35 feet deep, but modified in width so as to provide a channel 1,200 feet wide from the navy-yard at Charlestown and the Chelsea Bridge and Charles River Bridge to President Roads, and 1,500 feet wide from President Roads, by route designated as No. 3 through Broad Sound to the ocean, $450,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be required for prosecuting such improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $2,000,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "completing improvement, twenty-one thousand six hundred and seventy;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Cohasset, Mass., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 284, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, completing improvement, $21,670.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 25, after the word "with," to insert "plan No. 1 in;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Fall River, Mass., in accordance with plan No. 1 in the report submitted in House Document No. 56, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, $38,000: Provided, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 12, to insert:

Improving harbor at Manchester, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 14, to insert:

The Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a board of officers of the Corps of Engineers, whose duty it shall be to make a thorough examination of the entire locality of Vineyard Haven and Nantucket sounds, with the view of selecting the best site or sites for a harbor or harbors of refuge, and after such selection to make the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates therefor.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he will have any objection to striking out the word "Haven" after "Vineyard?" It is a mere mistake in description.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 18, after the word "Vineyard," strike out "Haven."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 4, to strike out:

Improving harbors of refuge at Block Island, Rhode Island, and Great Salt Pond, Block Island, Rhode Island: For maintenance, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 7, to insert:

Improving harbor of refuge at Block Island, Rhode Island: Continuing improvement, $50,239.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "completing improvement, fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Milford, Conn., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 280, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, completing improvement, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 19, after the word "Connecticut," to strike out "continuing improvement, $5,000" and insert "completing improvement, $12,700;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Southport, Conn.: Completing improvement, $12,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after the word "session," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "completing improvement, $17,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Echo Bay, New York, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 235, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, completing improvement, $17,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 10, after the words "New York," to strike out:

In accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 122, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, so as to provide a channel 40 feet deep and 1,200 feet wide, $300,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,500,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

And insert:

Continuing improvement, $112,500.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Buttermilk Channel, New York Harbor, New York: Continuing improvement, $112,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 21, to strike out:

Improving harbor at Olcott, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and fifty-seven thousand seven hundred" and insert "one hundred and ninety-three thousand two hundred and seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Tonawanda Harbor and Niagara River, New York: Continuing improvement, $193,275, including the dredging of Tonawanda Harbor in Erie County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 6, after the word "maintenance," to strike out:

And improving harbor by construction of breakwater in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 74, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, $84,827.50.

And insert "$20,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Dunkirk, N. Y.: For maintenance, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred thousand" and insert "one hundred and fifty thousand;" in line 5, before the word "the," to strike out "complete" and insert "prosecute;" and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred and fourteen thousand six hundred and forty-three" and insert "four hundred and nine thousand seven hundred and sixty-two;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Lake Erie entrance to Black Rock Harbor and Erie Basin, New York, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 125, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $150,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $409,762, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 11, to insert:

The Secretary of war is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of engineers, to consist of not less than three and not more than five, and to be taken from either the active or retired list of engineers in the service of the United States, to consider the entire subject of a waterway of not less than 16 feet depth from Norfolk Harbor, in the State of Virginia, to Beaufort Inlet, in the State of North Carolina, with instructions (first) to make surveys of all possible routes, if necessary, whether or not included in recent surveys made by Maj. James B. Quinn and Capt. E. W. Van C. Lucas and reported to Congress in Executive Document No. 202, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session; and (second) to submit a report with estimates and recommendations, and, in the event of a favorable recommendation, a description of the best route; such report to contain an estimate of the total cost of the construction of the route recommended for adoption, including the probable cost of the purchase and improvement to 16 feet depth of any private waterways that it may be to the interest of the United States to acquire and improve in connection with the above improvement. And said board, when appointed, is authorized to order such journeys for any or all of its members as may be necessary to investigate, not only any or all possible parts of proposed route, but also the commercial interests of any port or ports liable to be affected by the establishment of the proposed waterway.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 14, to insert:

Beaufort Harbor, North Carolina: For maintenance, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 12, after the word "project," to insert "including dredging of the channel up to Georgetown;" so as to make the clause read:

Winyah Bay, South Carolina: The dredge or dredges employed in connection with the work of improvement at the entrance to Winyah Bay, and such other dredges owned or controlled by the Government as are used on Winyah Bay river systems and canals, may be used in dredging the shoal places between the entrance and the city of Georgetown, S. C., over which the least channel depths may at any time be less than at the entrance of the bay; and any expense so caused shall be paid from amounts appropriated or that may be appropriated for said Winyah Bay: Provided, That the expense of said dredging, added to that of improving the entrance to said bay, shall not exceed the total sum authorized by act of June 3, 1896, to be appropriated. The provision in the said river and harbor act authorizing contracts to be made for improving said bay is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project, including dredging of the channel up to Georgetown," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 4, before the word "recommended," to strike out "complete the project" and insert "prosecute improvement;" and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one million" and insert "six hundred and sixty-six thousand six hundred and sixty-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Savannah Harbor, Georgia: For maintenance, $50,000. The unexpended balance of amounts heretofore appropriated and now available for the present project is hereby made available for continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 123, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute improvement recommended in said report, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $666,667, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated, and in the prosecution of said project materials may be purchased and work done otherwise than by contract, in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. NELSON. I have an amendment to offer at the end of line 11, page 21. The words I ask to have inserted there I ask to have stricken out on page 62. The amendment is found on page 62.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of line 11, after the words "Secretary of War," the following:

And the Secretary of War is directed to report whether, in his opinion, any work is necessary and advisable for affording protection to rice plantations along the Savannah River, in the State of South Carolina; and, if so, in what way such protection should be given—whether by raising the rice-field embankments, or by means of a canal or otherwise for drainage through Wrights River or other waterway, or by any other means—also the estimated cost of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I ask to have the same words stricken out on page 62 and page 63, the words in italics.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not understand where the Senator moved to put in this amendment.

Mr. NELSON. It was put in at the end of line 11 on page 21. It is transposed from page 62. The same amendment is in the bill on page 62.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest to the Senator that it is not now in the bill.

Mr. NELSON. It is in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. It is simply an amendment. It has not been agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I mean that it is an amendment reported in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. The proper way is to wait until we reach page 62 and then disagree to the committee amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was my intention to ask for some explanation of this amendment, and I ought to do it now, because the motion to strike out made by the Senator from Minnesota calls for the adoption of the same thing somewhere else in the bill. So I will ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who I see is rising for that purpose, to explain this provision.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will explain it now or later, just as the Senator in charge of the bill desires.

Mr. BERRY. Let us go on with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to insert at the end of line 11, page 21, the words which have been read.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it be passed over, then.

Mr. TILLMAN. I prefer to explain it now. It will take no longer to explain it at one time than another.

In the scheme of improvement for deepening the harbor at Savannah the engineers found it necessary to close one of the outlets of the river which flowed around through the South Carolina side, and in shutting up that outlet the flood water of freshets from the up-country when it reaches Savannah now overflows rice plantations which formerly were not inundated. The result has been that several thousand acres of very valuable rice land on our side of the river has been practically confiscated by the Government or rendered worthless.

The proposition which first came to me from my constituents in regard to their rights in this matter was a request that a provision be inserted authorizing them to go into the Court of Claims to have their rights determined and the damages assessed. But the committee finding that that would open too much of a floodgate, so to speak, of similar suits for all improvements of the Mississippi River and elsewhere, were unwilling to consider such a proposition.

Then I asked them whether they were willing to have the Government confiscate the private property of citizens of South Carolina in order to improve the harbor of Savannah, or would they accept the alternative proposition of letting the engineers in charge of the harbor improvements make a reconnoissance or survey of the conditions which have been brought about by the change in the river, and report what they can do, or what it would cost the Government, or what in the judgment of the Secretary of War would be necessary to protect this private property from the injury resulting from the improvements made by the Government of the harbor of Savannah.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. CHANDLER. Instead of asking him a question I think I will make a little speech. The Senator has kindly yielded.

It is not clear to me, from the amendment on page 62, whether the protection to the rice plantations that inquiry is to be made about is protection from public works hitherto constructed or to be constructed under the bill. The Senator will notice that the improvement of the Savannah River is referred to, and then it says the Secretary of War is to report whether the rice plantations need protection; but the clause does not say protection against what; and while——

Mr. TILLMAN. It means, of course, from flood; and I am perfectly willing for the Senator to put in anything which will elaborate the idea. I merely drew a crude amendment and suggested it to the committee, and they incorporated it in its present form.

Mr. CHANDLER. The question with me is this: Protection from natural floods, which from time immemorial have come to that section, or from floods caused by some Government work?

Mr. TILLMAN. From floods caused by the closing of the estuary above, which I spoke of, which used to let the flood water off; but now since it is closed it has to flow by and the result is that the water is higher and these places are inundated and the crops destroyed; whereas formerly, under the embankments which the planters themselves had, their crops were saved.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, that idea ought to be in the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish the Senator would turn his acute mind to an amendment of the amendment which will protect the Government and at the same time give our people the protection which they seek.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the idea ought to be conveyed that it is to protect the rice plantations from injury resulting from work done by the Government.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to have the Senator incorporate those words.

Mr. CHANDLER. A Senator yesterday suggested to me that if there was any bill before the Senate that would have a softening and soothing effect upon the Southern section of the country it was this bill, and as I am in entire accord with anything that will soften and soothe the South, including South Carolina, when my eye lighted upon this clause it occurred to me that possibly here was a scheme for building up embankments and draining the rice plantations of South Carolina without any real cause for it except that of softening and soothing.

Now, Mr. President, when it is explained to me that the theory is that there has already been constructed, or will be constructed by this enormous sum of $1,000 appropriated for the Savannah River, an embankment or some public work that would produce floods——

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will pardon me right there——

Mr. CHANDLER. Not right there, but in a moment. Then I at once see the propriety of not only appropriating the $1,000, but also of building up embankments and digging canals and creating, so to speak, a very large crop of rice next year in South Carolina, which I hope will sell at a large price.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator had not gone off half-cocked, which he will do sometimes, he would have seen that the appropriation of $1,000 which he speaks of there for the improvement of the Savannah River above Augusta is not involved here, because we have transposed the amendment from the position in which it was erroneously placed to the place in the bill where the harbor improvements of Savannah are involved.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not gone off half-cocked. It is the committee and the Senator who put their amendment in the wrong place.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not put it in anywhere. I left it on the committee table, and the clerk, I dare say, is responsible for putting it in the wrong place. The Senator has gone off half-cocked in charging that we are spending only $1,000 on the improvement when it is upwards of a million.

Mr. CHANDLER. Anyone would infer that spending that thousand dollars was going to make it necessary to have an elaborate scheme reported here for building embankments and drainage ditches to produce a large rice crop in South Carolina. That is the legitimate inference. I am not responsible for the amendment being in the wrong place.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senators from South Carolina and New Hampshire allow me to suggest an amendment which I think will close the debate on this proposition?

Mr. CHANDLER. It will not close the debate.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to let the chairman of the committee offer an amendment to see whether the Senator from New Hampshire can be soothed into letting a decent and just thing be done.

Mr. NELSON. I offer a suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire for the sake of closing up this matter. After the word "Carolina" I propose to insert the words "from the effect of Government works on the river;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of War is directed to report whether, in his opinion, any work is necessary and advisable for affording protection to rice plantations along the Savannah River, in the State of South Carolina, from the effect of Government works on the river; and if so, in what way such protection should be given, etc.

Mr. CHANDLER. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me if the Senator from South Carolina will not say a word.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, it is very hard not to have a little something to say to the Senator about his soothing proposition, but I will be soothed into silence for once.

Mr. NELSON. I move that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair).

Without objection, the amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13705) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, and still further insisting on its disagreement to certain amendments and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate still further insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to know what are the subjects of disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. HALE. This is not a new conference. It is only agreeing to the conference which I explained the other day. The Senate has already acted on the conference report and now the House asks for a new conference. The same subjects are in disagreement now that were at that time, with the exception of one. There has been no change in the situation.

Mr. MORGAN. What is that exception?

Mr. HALE. The House refused to adopt the report of the conference and instructed their conferees to strike out the amendment touching assistant secretaries in the bureaus.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Naval Observatory item, I will say to the Senator, is still in disagreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. HALE, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. TILLMAN were appointed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 21, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "forty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That C. P. Goodyear, his heirs and assigns, shall be paid for 50 feet excess of width over the contract width of 24 feet depth at mean high tide on the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., obtained, as shown by the report of H. L. Marinden, the officer detailed to make survey of such work, made to the Secretary of War on the 4th day of December, 1899, in the same proportion as he was paid for 100 feet widths of such depth, namely, $20,000; and that for the 50 feet excess of width over contract width of 25 feet depth at mean high tide, shown by said report, he or they shall be paid in the same proportion as he was paid for 100 feet width of 25 feet depth, namely, $25,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Brunswick Harbor, outer bar, Georgia: Continuing improvement, $40,000: Provided, That C. P. Goodyear, his heirs and assigns, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "completing improvement, one hundred and twenty-five thousand seven hundred" and insert "continuing improvement, ninety-three thousand seven hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Brunswick Harbor, inner harbor, Georgia: Continuing improvement, $93,750, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 40, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, of which sum $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to maintain the present depth of water in Academy Creek to old Altamaha Canal, the same being a part of the inner harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 21 on page 23.

PROPOSED REDUCTION OF REVENUE.

Mr. ALDRICH. I present a privileged report, the report of the committee of conference on House bill 12394.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island presents a conference report, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the House bill, and agree to the same amended so as to read as follows:

That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"That there shall be paid, in lieu of the tax of $1 now imposed by law, a tax of $1.60 on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors, brewed or manufactured and sold, or stored in warehouse, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquors may be called, for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons; and at a like rate for any other quantity or for the fractional parts of a barrel authorized and defined by law. And section 3339 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended accordingly: Provided, That in lieu of or in addition to the present requirements of law in that respect, all stamps used for denoting the tax upon fermented liquors or other taxes may, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, be canceled by perforations to be made in such manner and form as the commissioner may by regulations prescribe."

SEC. 2. That section 2 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That special taxes shall be, and hereby are, imposed annually as follows, that is to say:

"1. Bankers using or employing a capital not exceeding the sum of $25,000 shall pay $50; when using or employing a capital exceeding $25,000, for every additional $1,000 in excess of $25,000, $2, and in estimating capital surplus shall be included. The amount of such annual tax shall in all cases be computed on the basis of the capital and surplus for the preceding fiscal year. In the case of bankers who were not in business in the preceding fiscal year, the tax shall be computed on the capital at the time of commencing business. Every person, firm, or company, and every incorporated or other bank, having a place of business where credits are opened by the deposit or collection of money or currency, subject to be paid or remitted upon draft, check, or order, or where money is advanced or loaned on stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes, or where stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes are received for discount or sale shall be a banker under this act: Provided, That any savings bank having no capital stock, and whose business is confined to receiving deposits and loaning or investing the same for the benefit of its depositors, and which does no other business of banking, shall not be subject to this tax.

"2. Brokers shall pay $50. Every person, firm, or company whose business it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, bonds, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank notes, promissory notes, or other securities for themselves or others, shall be regarded as a broker: Provided, That any person having paid the special tax as a banker shall not be required to pay the special tax as a broker.

"3. Pawnbrokers shall pay $20. Every person, firm, or company whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of money loaned thereon, shall be deemed a pawnbroker.

"4. Custom-house brokers shall pay $10. Every person, firm, or company whose occupation it is, as the agent of others, to arrange entries and other custom-house papers, or transact business at any port of entry relating to the importation or exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be regarded as a custom-house broker.

"5. Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls in cities having more than 25,000 population, as shown by the last preceding United States census, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater: Provided, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease.

"6. The proprietor or proprietors of circuses shall pay $100. Every building, space, tent, or area where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports or theatrical performances are exhibited shall be regarded as a circus: Provided, That no special tax paid in one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be imposed for exhibitions within any one State, Territory, or District.

"7. Proprietors or agents of all other public exhibitions or shows for money not enumerated in this section shall pay $10: Provided, That a special tax paid in one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall not exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be required for exhibitions within any one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

"8. Proprietors of bowling alleys and billiard rooms shall pay $5 for each alley or table. Every building or place where bowls are thrown or where games of billiards or pool are played, and that are open to the public with or without price, shall be regarded as a bowling alley or a billiard room, respectively."

SEC. 3. That the internal-revenue tax on cigars weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand shall be $3 per thousand; and the tax on cigars weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand shall be 18 cents per pound, and on cigarettes weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand and of a wholesale value or price of not more than $2 per thousand shall be 18 cents per pound: and the tax on cigarettes weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand and of a wholesale value or price of more than $2 per thousand shall be 36 cents per pound; and all such cigars and cigarettes weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand shall for purposes of taxation be held and considered as weighing 3 pounds.

SEC. 4. That there shall be allowed a discount of 20 per cent on all sales by collectors to manufacturers of tobacco and snuff upon the stamps provided for the payment of internal-revenue taxes upon manufactured tobacco and snuff: Provided, That in addition to the packages of smoking tobacco now authorized by law there shall be packages of 2 ounces, 3 ounces, and 4 ounces: And provided further, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco and snuff, and cigars, held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such discount or reduction of tax shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of such discount or reduction of tax, but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been presented within sixty days following the date of the reduction; and no claim shall be allowed or drawback paid for a less amount than $10. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect.

SEC. 5. That section 6 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the words "medicines, preparations, matters, and things," in the last paragraph of said section, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "wines," so that the section as amended shall read as follows:

"ADHESIVE STAMPS.

"SEC. 6. That on and after the 1st day of July, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect of the several bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock and of indebtedness, and other documents, instruments, matters, and things mentioned and described in Schedule A of this act, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which such instruments, matters, or things, or any of them, shall be written or printed by any person or persons, or party who shall make, sign, or issue the same, or for whose use or benefit the same shall be made, signed, or issued, the several taxes or sums of money set down in figures against the same, respectively, or otherwise specified or set forth in the said schedule.

"And there shall also be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect to the wines mentioned and described in Schedule B of this act, manufactured, sold, or removed for sale, the several taxes or sums of money set down in words or figures against the same, respectively, or otherwise specified or set forth in Schedule B of this act."

SEC. 6. That section 9 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the proviso, so that the section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That in any and all cases where an adhesive stamp shall be used for denoting any tax imposed by this act, except as hereinafter provided, the person using or affixing the same shall write or stamp thereupon the initials of his name and the date upon which the same shall be attached or used, so that the same may not again be used. And if any person shall fraudulently make use of an adhesive stamp to denote any tax imposed by this act without so effectually canceling and obliterating such stamp, except as before mentioned, he, she, or they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court."

SEC. 7. That section 13 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the words "Schedule A of," and also by inserting in the first proviso, after the words "bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock or of indebtedness," the words "or any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act;" so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That any person or persons who shall register, issue, sell, or transfer, or who shall cause to be issued, registered, sold, or transferred, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in this act, without the same being duly stamped, or having thereupon an adhesive stamp for denoting the tax chargeable thereon, and canceled in the manner required by law, with intent to evade the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $50, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court; and such instrument, document, or paper, not being stamped according to law, shall be deemed invalid and of no effect: Provided, That hereafter, in all cases where the party has not affixed to any instrument the stamp required by law thereon at the time of issuing, selling, or transferring the said bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock or of indebtedness, or any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act, and he or they, or any party having an interest therein, shall be subsequently desirous of affixing such stamp to said instrument, or, if said instrument be lost, to a copy thereof, he or they shall appear before the collector of internal revenue of the proper district, who shall, upon the payment of the price of the proper stamp required by law, and of a penalty of $10, and, where the whole amount of the tax denoted by the stamp required shall exceed the sum of $50, on payment also of interest, at the rate of 6 per cent, on said tax from the day on which such stamp ought to have been affixed, affix the proper stamp to such bond, debenture, certificate of stock or of indebtedness or copy, or instrument, document or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act, and note upon the margin thereof the date of his so doing and the fact that such penalty has been paid; and the same shall thereupon be deemed and held to be as valid to all intents and purposes as if stamped when made or issued: And provided further, That where it shall appear to said collector, upon oath or otherwise, to his satisfaction, that any such instrument has not been duly stamped, at the time of making or issuing the same, by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any willful design to defraud the United States of the stamp, or to evade or delay the payment thereof, then and in such case, if such instrument, or, if the original be lost, a copy thereof, duly certified by the officer having charge of any records in which such original is required to be recorded, or otherwise duly proven to the satisfaction of the collector, shall, within twelve calendar months after the making or issuing thereof, be brought to the said collector of internal revenue to be stamped, and the stamp tax chargeable thereon shall be paid, it shall be lawful for the said collector to remit the penalty aforesaid and to cause such instrument to be duly stamped. And when the original instrument, or a certified or duly proven copy thereof, as aforesaid, duly stamped so as to entitle the same to be recorded, shall be presented to the clerk, register, recorder, or other officer having charge of the original record, it shall be lawful for such officer, upon the payment of the fee legally chargeable for the recording thereof, to make a new record thereof, or to note upon the original record the fact that the error or omission in the stamping of said original instrument has been corrected pursuant to law; and the original instrument or such certified copy, or the record thereof, may be used in all courts and places in the same manner and with like effect as if the instrument had been originally stamped: And provided further, That in all cases where the party has not affixed the stamp required by law upon any such instrument issued, registered, sold, or transferred at a time when and at a place where no collection district was established, it shall be lawful for him or them, or any party having an interest therein, to affix the proper stamp thereto, or, if the original be lost, to a copy thereof. But no right acquired in good faith before the stamping of such instrument, or copy thereof, as herein provided, if such record be required by law, shall in any manner be affected by such stamping as aforesaid."

SEC. 8. That Schedule A of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SCHEDULE A.

"STAMP TAXES.

"1. Bonds, debentures, or certificates of indebtedness issued after the 1st day of July, A. D., 1898, by any association, company, or corporation, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents, and on each original issue, whether on organization or reorganization, of certificates of stock by any such association, company, or corporation, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents, and on all sales, or agreements to sell, or memoranda of sales or deliveries or transfers of shares or certificates of stock in any association, company, or corporation, whether made upon or shown by the books of the association, company, or corporation, or by any assignment in blank, or by any delivery, or by any paper or agreement or memorandum or other evidence of transfer or sale whether entitling the holder in any manner to the benefit of such stock, or to secure the future payment of money or for the future transfer of any stock, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents: Provided, That in case of sale where the evidence of transfer is shown only by the books of the company the stamp shall be placed upon such books; and where the change of ownership is by transfer certificate the stamp shall be placed upon the certificate; and in cases of an agreement to sell or where the transfer is by delivery of the certificate assigned in blank there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale, to which the stamp shall be affixed; and every bill or memorandum of sale or agreement to sell before mentioned shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers. And any person or persons liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person or persons, who shall make any such sale, or who shall in pursuance of any such sale deliver any such stock, or evidence of the sale of any such stock or bill or memorandum thereof, as herein required, without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, with intent to evade the foregoing provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

"2. Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell any products or merchandise at any exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, either for present or future delivery, for each $100 in value of said sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell, 1 cent, and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 1 cent: Provided, That on every sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell as aforesaid there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, to which there shall be affixed a lawful stamp or stamps in value equal to the amount of the tax on such sale. And every such bill, memorandum, or other evidence of sale or agreement to sell shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers; and any person or persons liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or any one who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person or persons, who shall make any such sale, or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, or who shall, in pursuance of any such sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, deliver any such products or merchandise without a bill, memorandum, or other evidence thereof as herein required, or who shall deliver such bill, memorandum, or other evidence of sale, or agreement to sell, without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, with intent to evade the foregoing provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That no bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, in case of products or merchandise actually delivered to, and while in vessel, boat, or car, and actually in course of transportation, shall be subject to this tax, provided such bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell shall be accompanied by bills of lading or vouchers showing that the said products are actually in course of transportation as aforesaid.

"3. From and after the 1st day of April, 1901, every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who or which shall in his, its, or their own behalf, or as agent, engage in the business of making or offering to make contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions respecting the purchase or sale, or purchase and sale, of any grain, provisions, raw or unmanufactured cotton, stock, bonds, or other securities wherein both parties thereto, or such person, association, copartnership, or corporation above named, contemplate or intend that such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall be or may be closed, adjusted, or settled according or with reference to the public market quotations of prices made on any board of trade or exchange upon which the commodities or securities referred to in said contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions are dealt in, and without a bona fide transaction on such board of trade or exchange, or wherein both parties, or such person, association, copartnership, or corporation above named, shall contemplate or intend that such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall be or may be deemed closed or terminated when the public market quotations of prices made on such board of trade or exchange for the articles or securities named in such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall reach a certain figure, and every person, association, copartnership, and corporation who or which shall in his or its own behalf, or as agent, conduct what is commonly known as a 'bucket shop' shall pay a stamp tax of 2 cents on each $100 in value or fraction thereof of the merchandise covered or pretended to be covered, and also a tax of 2 cents on each $100 on the face value or fraction thereof of all stocks, bonds, or other securities covered or pretended to be covered by each and all of such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions: Provided, however, That the payment of any tax imposed by this paragraph shall not be held or construed to exempt any such person, association, copartnership, or corporation from any penalty or punishment provided by the laws of any State for carrying on such business, or the making of such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions within such State, or in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such business or the making of any such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions contrary to the laws of such State, or in any place prohibited by municipal law, and on or before the 1st day of April, 1901, every such person, association, copartnership, or corporation, as aforesaid, shall, for each office or place of business and for each branch office or place of business, wherever established, pay a special tax of $12.50, and on or before the 1st day of July, 1901, and annually thereafter, for every such office or branch office, a special tax of $50, and such taxes shall be in addition to all other special taxes imposed by this act.

"Every person, association, copartnership, or corporation proposing to engage in or continue the business aforesaid shall, before commencing such business, file with the collector or proper deputy collector of the district in which it is proposed to carry on such business a notice in writing, under oath, and in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, stating the name of the person, association, copartnership, or corporation intending to engage in such business, the names of the members of any such association or copartnership, and the names of the officers of any such corporation, together with the residences of all the individuals whose names are thus required and the place (including street number) where such business is to be carried on; and it shall be the duty of the collector of internal revenue to keep in his office a book in which shall be recorded a complete copy of all such notices, and such book shall be open to public inspection.

"Every person, association, copartnership, or corporation conducting or transacting the business aforesaid shall keep or cause to be kept just and true books of account, wherein shall be plainly and legibly recorded on the day of the making of every such contract, agreement, trade, or transaction a complete and exact specification thereof, including the date thereof, the other party thereto, and the quantity, price, and the gross amount in value of each article or commodity covered or pretended to be covered by each such contract, agreement, trade, or transaction, and such books shall at all reasonable times and hours be subject to the inspection of the collector, deputy collector, and the inspector of internal revenue or any duly authorized agent of the Internal Revenue Department, and every such person, association, copartnership, or corporation shall deliver to the other party to each such contract, agreement, trade, or transaction, at the time of making the same, a written memorandum also containing the complete and exact specification thereof, above referred to, to which the proper stamp shall be, before delivery, affixed.

"Every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who shall, in his or their own behalf, or as agent, engage in or continue in the business hereinbefore defined without having filed the notice herein required, or who shall fail or refuse to keep any such book or make any return, report, or affidavit required as aforesaid, or shall make a false, fraudulent, or partial return, report, or affidavit, or shall fail or refuse to deliver a written memorandum, as hereinbefore required, or shall in any other respect violate any of the provisions of this paragraph, shall, besides being liable for the amount of the tax or taxes herein prescribed, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense, pay a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than five thousand dollars, or be imprisoned not less than three months nor more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court. All provisions of law now in force relating to the collection recovery, and enforcement of taxes, fines, and penalties imposed under the law concerning internal revenue and not inconsistent with the provisions of this paragraph shall extend and apply to the recovery and enforcement of the taxes, fines, and penalties imposed by this paragraph.

"4. Bill of exchange (inland), draft, or order for the payment of any sum of money, otherwise than at sight or on demand, and for each renewal of the same, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents; and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents.

"5. Bill of exchange (foreign) or letter of credit (including orders by telegraph or otherwise for the payment of money issued by express or other companies or any person or persons), drawn in but payable out of the United States, if drawn singly or otherwise than in a set of three or more, according to the custom of merchants and bankers, shall pay for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents, and for each $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents. If drawn in sets of two or more: For every bill of each set, where the sum made payable shall not exceed $100, or the equivalent thereof, in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard of value fixed by the United States, 1 cent; and for each $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 1 cent. Excepting that bills of exchange drawn against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries shall not be subject to this tax, provided that such bills of exchange shall be accompanied by proper invoices, and receipts, bills of lading, or vouchers, showing that goods of a value at least equal to the amount for which said bill of exchange may be drawn shall have been exported.

"6. Freight: It shall be the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, carrier, or corporation, or person whose occupation is to act as such, except persons, companies, or corporations engaged in carrying on a local or other express business, to issue to the shipper or consignor, or his agent, or person from whom any goods are accepted for transportation, a bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt and forwarding for each shipment received for carriage and transportation, whether in bulk or in boxes, bales, packages, bundles, or not so inclosed or included; and there shall be duly attached and canceled, as is in this act provided, to each of said bills of lading, manifest, or other memorandum, and to each duplicate thereof, a stamp of the value of 1 cent: Provided, That but one bill of lading shall be required on bundles or packages of newspapers when inclosed in one general bundle at the time of shipment. Any failure to issue such bill of lading, manifest, or other memorandum, as herein provided, shall subject said railroad or steamboat company, carrier, or corporation, or person, to a penalty of $50 for each offense, and no such bill of lading, manifest, or other memorandum shall be used in evidence unless it shall be duly stamped as aforesaid.

"7. Bond: For indemnifying any person or persons, firm, or corporation who shall have become bound or engaged as surety for the payment of any sum of money, or for the due execution or performance of the duties of any office or position, and to account for money received by virtue thereof, 50 cents.

"8. Certificate of profits, or any certificate or memorandum showing an interest in the property or accumulations of any association, company, or corporation, and on all transfers thereof, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents.

"9. Contract: Broker's note, or memorandum of sale of any goods or merchandise, stocks, bonds, exchange, notes of hand, real estate, or property of any kind or description issued by brokers, or persons acting as such, for each note or memorandum of sale, not otherwise provided for in this act, 10 cents.

"10. Conveyance: Deed, instrument, or writing, whereby any lands, tenements, or other realty shall be sold, granted, assigned, transferred, or otherwise conveyed to or vested in the purchaser or purchasers, or any other person or persons, by his, her, or their direction, when the consideration or value exceeds $2,500 and does not exceed $3,000, 25 cents, and for each additional $500 or fractional part thereof in excess of $3,000, 25 cents.

"11. Entry of any goods, wares, or merchandise at any custom-house, either for consumption or warehousing, not exceeding $100 in value, 25 cents. Exceeding $100 and not exceeding $500 in value, 50 cents. Exceeding $500 in value, $1.

"12. Entry for the withdrawal of any goods or merchandise from customs bonded warehouse, 50 cents.

"13. Passage tickets: Ticket, order, contract, or certificate for passage by any vessel from any port in the United States to a foreign port, costing $50, 50 cents; and for each $50 or any part thereof in addition thereto, 50 cents."

SEC. 9. That Schedule B of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SCHEDULE B.

"Sparkling or other wines, when bottled for sale, upon each bottle containing 1 pint or less, 1 cent. Upon each bottle containing more than 1 pint, 2 cents."

SEC. 10. That section 29 of said act is hereby amended by adding at the end of said section the following: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to bequests or legacies for uses of a religious, literary, charitable, or educational character, or for the encouragement of art, or to legacies or bequests to societies for the prevention of cruelty to children, including all bequests or legacies of such character on which the tax imposed had not been paid or collected on the 1st day of March, 1901: And provided further, That the provisions of this act and of the act hereby amended shall not be held to apply to any estate where the testator or intestate died before June 13, 1898;" so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"LEGACIES AND DISTRIBUTIVE SHARES OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

"SEC. 29. That any person or persons having in charge or trust, as administrators, executors, or trustees, any legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property, where the whole amount of such personal property as aforesaid shall exceed the sum of $10,000 in actual value, passing, after the passage of this act, from any person possessed of such property, either by will or by the intestate laws of any State or Territory, or any personal property or interest therein, transferred by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor or bargainer, to any person or persons, or to any body or bodies, politic or corporate, in trust or otherwise, shall be, and hereby are, made subject to a duty or tax, to be paid to the United States, as follows—that is to say: Where the whole amount of said personal property shall exceed in value ten thousand and shall not exceed in value the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars the tax shall be:

"First. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the lineal issue or lineal ancestor, brother, or sister to the person who died possessed of such property, as aforesaid, at the rate of 75 cents for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest in such property.

"Second. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the descendant of a brother or sister of the person who died possessed, as aforesaid, at the rate of $1.50 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest.

"Third. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the brother or sister of the father or mother, or a descendant of a brother or sister of the father or mother, of the person who died possessed, as aforesaid, at the rate of $3 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest.

"Fourth. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother, or a descendant of the brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother, of the person who died possessed, as aforesaid, at the rate of $4 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest.

"Fifth. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be in any other degree of collateral consanguinity than is hereinbefore stated, or shall be a stranger in blood to the person who died possessed, as aforesaid, or shall be a body politic or corporate, at the rate of $5 dollars for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest: Provided, That all legacies or property passing by will, or by the laws of any State or Territory, to husband or wife of the person died possessed, as aforesaid, shall be exempt from tax or duty.

"Where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $25,000, but shall not exceed the sum or value of $100,000, the rates of duty or tax above set forth shall be multiplied by 1½; and where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $100,000, but shall not exceed the sum of $500,000, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by 2; and where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $500,000, but shall not exceed the sum of $1,000,000, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by 2½; and where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $1,000,000, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by 3: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to bequests or legacies for uses of a religious, literary, charitable, or educational character, or for the encouragement of art, or to legacies or bequests to societies for the prevention of cruelty to children, including all bequests or legacies of such character on which the tax imposed had not been paid or collected on the 1st day of March, 1901: And provided further, That the provisions of this act and of the act hereby amended shall not be held to apply to any estate where the testator or intestate died before June 13, 1898."

SEC. 11. That section 30 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 30. That the tax or duty aforesaid shall be due and payable in one year after the death of the testator and shall be a lien and charge upon the property of every person who may die as aforesaid for twenty years, or until the same shall, within that period, be fully paid to and discharged by the United States; and every executor, administrator, or trustee having in charge or trust any legacy or distributive share, as aforesaid, shall give notice thereof, in writing, to the collector or deputy collector of the district where the deceased grantor or bargainer last resided within thirty days after he shall have taken charge of such trust, and every executor, administrator, or trustee, before payment and distribution to the legatees, or any parties entitled to beneficial interest therein, shall pay to the collector or deputy collector of the district of which the deceased person was a resident, or in which the property was located in case of nonresidents, the amount of the duty or tax assessed upon such legacy or distributive share, and shall also make and render to the said collector or deputy collector a schedule, list, or statement, in duplicate, of the amount of such legacy or distributive share, together with the amount of duty which has accrued, or shall accrue, thereon, verified by his oath or affirmation, to be administered and certified thereon by some magistrate or officer having lawful power to administer such oaths, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which schedule, list, or statement shall contain the names of each and every person entitled to any beneficial interest therein, together with the clear value of such interest, the duplicate of which schedule, list, or statement shall be by him immediately delivered, and the tax thereon paid to such collector; and upon such payment and delivery of such schedule, list, or statement, said collector or deputy collector shall grant to such person paying such duty or tax a receipt or receipts for the same in duplicate, which shall be prepared as hereinafter provided.

"Such receipt or receipts, duly signed and delivered by such collector or deputy collector, shall be sufficient evidence to entitle such executor, administrator, or trustee to be credited and allowed such payment by every tribunal which, by the laws of any State or Territory, is, or may be, empowered to decide upon and settle the accounts of executors and administrators. And in case such executor, administrator, or trustee shall refuse or neglect to pay the aforesaid duty or tax to the collector or deputy collector, as aforesaid, within the time hereinbefore provided, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver to said collector or deputy collector the duplicate of the schedule, list, or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, under oath, as aforesaid, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver the schedule, list, or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, under oath, as aforesaid, or shall deliver to said collector or deputy collector a false schedule or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, or give the names and relationship of the persons entitled to beneficial interests therein untruly, or shall not truly and correctly set forth and state therein the clear value of such beneficial interest, or where no administration upon such property or personal estate shall have been granted or allowed under existing laws, the collector or deputy collector shall make out such lists and valuation as in other cases of neglect or refusal, and shall assess the duty thereon; and the collector shall commence appropriate proceedings before any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, against such person or persons as may have the actual or constructive custody or possession of such property or personal estate, or any part thereof, and shall subject such property or personal estate, or any portion of the same, to be sold upon the judgment or decree of such court, and from the proceeds of such sale the amount of such tax or duty, together with all costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by such court, shall be first paid, and the balance, if any, deposited according to the order of such court, to be paid under its direction to such person or persons as shall establish title to the same.

"The deed or deeds, or any proper conveyance of such property or personal estate, or any portion thereof, so sold under such judgment or decree, executed by the officer lawfully charged with carrying the same into effect, shall vest in the purchaser thereof all the title of the delinquent to the property or personal estate sold under and by virtue of such judgment or decree, and shall release every other portion of such property or personal estate from the lien or charge thereon created by this act. And every person or persons who shall have in his possession, charge, or custody any record, file, or paper containing, or supposed to contain, any information concerning such property or personal estate, as aforesaid, passing from any person who may die, as aforesaid, shall exhibit the same at the request of the collector or deputy collector of the district, and to any law officer of the United States, in the performance of his duty under this act, his deputy or agent, who may desire to examine the same. And if any such person, having in his possession, charge, or custody any such records, files, or papers shall refuse or neglect to exhibit the same on request, as aforesaid, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500: Provided, That in all legal controversies where such deed or title shall be the subject of judicial investigation, the recital in said deed shall be prima facie evidence of its truth and that the requirements of the law had been complied with by the officers of the Government: And provided further, That in case of willful neglect, refusal, or false statement by such executor, administrator, or trustee, as aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $1,000, to be recovered with costs of suit. Any tax paid under the provisions of sections 29 and 30 shall be deducted from the particular legacy or distributive share on account of which the same is charged."

SEC. 12. That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, is authorized to appoint a competent person, at an annual salary of $3,000, whose special duty it shall be to conduct such investigations as may be necessary to secure the efficient enforcement of the tax imposed upon legacies and distributive shares of personal property by this act, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may also from time to time assign one or more special agents to aid in such investigations.

SEC. 13. That section 35 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 35. That for the purposes of this act, the words 'mixed flour' shall be taken and construed to mean the food product resulting from the grinding or mixing together of wheat, or wheat flour, as the principal constituent in quantity, with any other grain, or the product of any other grain, or other material, except such material, not exceeding 5 per cent in quantity, and not the product of any grain, as is commonly used for baking purposes: Provided, That when the product resulting from the grinding or mixing together of wheat or wheat flour with any other grain, or the product of any other grain of which wheat or wheat flour is not the principal constituent as specified in the foregoing definition, is intended for sale, or is sold, or offered for sale as wheat flour, such product shall be held to be mixed flour within the meaning of this act."

SEC. 14. That section 18 of said act is hereby repealed.

SEC. 15. That the provisions of this act shall take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1901, except where otherwise expressly provided.

And the House agree to the same.

NELSON W. ALDRICH,
WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SERENO E. PAYNE,
JOHN DALZELL,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD a detailed statement showing the effect of the conference action with reference to the House proposition and the Senate amendments.

NOTE.—Such of the above amounts as are in round numbers are estimated.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the report may be adopted.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance a question in regard to the reduction on tobacco and beer. As I heard the reading, the reduction in the conference report is 20 per cent on manufactured tobacco, and we go back to the House reduction of 25 cents a barrel on beer.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state that the effect of the report as presented with reference to beer and tobacco leaves them in the same relative position with reference to the rates in force prior to the act of 1898; that is, the tax upon beer prior to 1898, was $1. The conference report makes the tax $1.60, which is 60 per cent increase. The tax upon tobacco was 6 cents prior to 1898. It is fixed by the report at 9.60, or 60 per cent above what it was then. The same rate of increase has taken place in both cases.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator mean to say that the per cent of reduction on tobacco and beer is now the same?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the net result, to leave them in the same relative position.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee—I could not catch it in the reading—what was done in regard to proprietary medicines.

Mr. ALDRICH. The tax was taken off entirely. The House action in that respect was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. And the tax upon the capital of banks?

Mr. ALDRICH. That was restored as it was in the House provision.

Mr. VEST. It was restored. The tax on bank checks has been taken off?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13850) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 10, and 11.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 5, 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$30,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from is disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from the matter inserted by said amendment the word "Belgium;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "Turkey," in line 1 of said amendment, the following: ", who shall be an American student of the language of Turkey, and shall be allowed and required, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to devote his time to the acquisition of such language;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$71,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out in line 83 of said amendment the words "Lourenço Marquez, Africa," and insert between lines 143 and 144 of said amendment the words "Lourenço Marquez, Africa;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in lines 15 and 16 of said amendment insert the following: "$455,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 23, line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty thousand" and insert "twelve thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Hillsboro Bay, Florida: Continuing improvement, $112,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Pensacola, Fla.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $50,000: the same to be used toward securing a channel depth of 30 feet from the Gulf of Mexico to the dock line at the east end of the city of Pensacola.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 12, to insert:

For the construction of a seagoing suction dredge, to be used in improving the harbors at Pensacola, Carrabelle, and Apalachicola, Fla., $150,000, and for the operation of said dredge, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 24, to insert:

Improving Biscayne Bay, Florida, by obtaining a uniform depth of 18 feet of water in a harbor or basin on the east side of Biscayne Bay and a depth of 18 feet in a channel from said basin by way of the line north of Norris Cut to the sea, in accordance with the project submitted in House Document No. 662, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, $150,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary for prosecuting the above-described improvement in accordance with said project, not to exceed in the aggregate $466,667, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated: And provided further, That out of the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, construct a dredge, to cost not exceeding $150,000, for use on said project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Mobile, Ala.: Continuing improvement, with the view of ultimately securing a channel 23 feet deep and 100 feet wide at bottom, with appropriate side slopes, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 2, to insert:

Improving harbor at Mobile, Ala., by providing a channel 30 feet deep across the bar below Fort Morgan, in accordance with the project submitted in House Document No. 219, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $68,813.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "four hundred and twelve thousand five hundred;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

So much of which as may be necessary may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be applied to the completion of a dredge heretofore authorized for improving the outlet to the Mississippi River.

On page 27, line 1, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two million nine hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "one million nine hundred and sixty-six thousand six hundred and sixty-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River, with a view to obtaining a navigable depth of 35 feet, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 329, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, $412,500; so much of which as may be necessary may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be applied to the completion of a dredge heretofore authorized for improving the outlet to the Mississippi River: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute the project recommended in said report, or said materials may be purchased and work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,966,667, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated, and the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, modify the plans described in the said report, and the dredge Beta may be used in the South or Southwest pass if dredging is required in either of said passes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 5, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to purchase from the heirs or legal representatives of the said James B. Eads the dredges and other plant, including real estate, now used by them for the maintenance of the channel at the South Pass of the Mississippi River, or such portion of said plant as he may deem desirable; and in case the Secretary of War and the heirs or legal representatives of the estate of James B. Eads, deceased, are unable to agree upon the price to be paid for said dredges and plant, including real estate, or so much thereof as the Secretary of War may deem necessary to purchase, then such price shall be assessed by a board of three appraisers to be appointed as follows: One appraiser to be appointed by the Secretary of War, one by the heirs or legal representatives of James B. Eads, deceased, and in case these two fail to agree, they shall jointly choose a third appraiser, and the three so appointed shall, by a majority vote, duly appraise the price to be paid for said dredges and plant, including real estate, and in case such appraisal is approved by the Secretary of War, the same shall be deemed to be the price which the Secretary of War is authorized to pay for said dredges and plant, including real estate, or so much thereof as the Secretary of War may deem necessary to purchase: Provided, That in no event shall more than $200,000 be paid for all the dredges, plant, and real estate owned or possessed by the heirs or legal representatives of James B. Eads, deceased, at or about the South Pass. And the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, for the purchase of the whole or a part of said plant, or for otherwise providing a proper plant for the maintenance of said Pass. The Secretary of War is hereby directed to take charge of said channel, including the jetties, and all auxiliary works connected therewith, and thereafter to maintain with the utmost efficiency said South Pass Channel; and for that purpose he is hereby authorized to draw his warrants from time to time on the Treasurer of the United States, until otherwise provided for by law, for such sums of money as may be necessary, not to exceed in the aggregate for any one year $100,000. And section 3 of the act approved June 6, 1900, entitled "An act making provision for emergencies in river and harbor works, for certain surveys, and for the diversion of certain appropriations or modifications of provisions heretofore made," is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-five thousand" and insert "fifty-six thousand two hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving mouth and passes of Calcasieu River, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $56,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 14, before the word "repair," to insert "for;" and in line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Sabine Pass, Texas and Louisiana: For maintenance, and for repair of the jetties, $150,000: Provided, That $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to improve the main ship channel in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 70, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 25, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "three hundred and seventy-five;" on page 30, line 2, after the word "to," to strike out "repair, restore, and complete" and insert "prosecute the work of repairing, restoring, and completing;" and in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one million" and insert "six hundred and sixty-six thousand six hundred and sixty-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Galveston Harbor, Texas, by restoration of the jetties and maintenance of the entrance to said harbor, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 134, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $375,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the work of repairing, restoring, and completing the jetties as recommended in the said report, not to exceed $666,667, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided, That appropriations heretofore made and unexpended for Galveston Harbor are hereby made available for the above purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 18, to insert:

For widening and deepening Galveston Channel from a point opposite Twentieth street to a point opposite Fifty-first street to a depth of 30 feet and a width of 1,200 feet, including the present channel: Continuing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 264, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $112,500: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such material and work as may be necessary to complete said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $150,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall cause the expenditure of the amount appropriated at such points as he shall direct.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to offer an amendment. In line 3, page 31, I move to strike out the word "complete" and insert the word "prosecute."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 1, after the word "paid," to insert:

Provided, That no payment shall be made for any section of 1,000 feet until the same contract depth has been found to exist in all previously completed sections of 1,000 feet.

In line 5, before the word "the," to strike out "upon said modification being made" and insert "before such modification shall take effect;" in line 9, after the word "work," to insert "as originally contracted for;" so as to make the clause read:

Deepening the channel from Galveston Harbor to Texas City, Tex.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, with the consent of the contractors now engaged in said work, or any contractors who may hereafter undertake the same, to modify the contract heretofore entered into for the performance of said work so that payments of 5 per cent of the whole contract price shall be made from time to time to said contractors for each 1,000 linear feet along the length of said channel, whenever it shall satisfactorily appear to the Secretary of War, through Army engineers, that the same has been deepened to the depth of 25 feet and a width of 100 feet at the bottom, until the sum of $200,000 has been paid, after which no payments shall be made until the whole channel has been completed to the required width and depth, at which time the balance of the contract price shall be paid: Provided, That no payment shall be made for any section of 1,000 feet until the same contract depth has been found to exist in all previously completed sections of 1,000 feet. And before such modification shall take effect the contractors for said work shall give bond to the United States, with sufficient surety or sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of War, conditioned upon the complete and faithful performance of said work as originally contracted for within two years from the date of said modification, in the sum of $200,000. The Secretary of War is authorized to draw his warrant or requisition from time to time upon the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the amounts which shall be found due the contractors as provided herein, which warrants or requisitions shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred and fifty" and to insert "two hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Aransas Pass, Texas: Continuing improvement of the jetty partially built by Aransas Pass Harbor Company, not including the outer 1,000 feet thereof, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five thousand" and insert "fifty-six thousand two hundred and fifty;" in line 17, after the word "the," to strike out "completion" and insert "prosecution;" and in line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred and forty two" and insert "two hundred and twenty-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Conneaut Harbor, Ohio: For maintenance, $10,000; continuing improvement, $56,250: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary for the prosecution of said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $228,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 23 on page 33.

Mr. NELSON. After the word "for," in line 22, page 33, I move to insert the words "continuing improvement and;" so as to read:

Improving Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio: For continuing improvement and maintenance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 34, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "one hundred and twelve thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read;

Improving harbor at Fairport, Ohio: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $112,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and twenty-five thousand" and insert "ninety-three thousand seven hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Cleveland, Ohio: For maintenance and continuing improvement in accordance with the report printed in the report of the Chief of Engineers for 1899, on page 3057 et seq., $93,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred thousand" and insert "four hundred and fifty thousand;" in line 25, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two million two hundred thousand" and insert "one million four hundred and sixty-six thousand six hundred and sixty-seven;" and on page 35, line 1, after the word "appropriated," to insert:

Provided further, That the east breakwater shall not be extended eastward beyond the prolongation of Case avenue until further legislation by Congress authorizing such extension;"

So as to make the clause read:

Improving said harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 118, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, by providing a safer and better entrance at the main entrance to the breakwater in said harbor and by the construction of a new breakwater, $450,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be required for prosecuting said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,466,667, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided further, That the east breakwater shall not be extended eastward beyond the prolongation of Case avenue until further legislation by Congress authorizing such extension.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred thousand" and insert "seventy-five thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Sandusky Harbor, Ohio, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 120, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, and for maintenance, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 20, to insert:

Improving inner harbor at Michigan City, Ind.: For maintenance, $48,000.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment. After the word "Indiana" I move to insert the words "continuing improvement and," and after the word "dollars" I move to insert the proviso which I send to the desk:

The SECRETARY. On page 35, line 21, after the word "Indiana," it is proposed to insert the words "continuing improvement and," and after the word "dollars," in line 22, to insert:

Provided, That a sum not exceeding $20,000 of said appropriation may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for the construction of a turn basin in said harbor.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving inner harbor at Michigan City, Ind.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $48,000: Provided, That a sum not exceeding $20,000 of said appropriation may be used in the discretion of the Secretary of War for the construction of a turn basin in said harbor.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

SETTLERS ON RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Senate bill 4306, merely that the amendments of the House may be concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4306) for the relief of settlers under the public-land laws to lands within the indemnity limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, on page 1, line 12, after the word "laws," to strike out "subsequent to August 15, 1887, and prior to July 1, 1898;" on page 2, line 2, after the word "time," to strike out the words "when the land was included within an existing Executive withdrawal on account of said grant or at a time;" in line 4, after the word "when," to strike out "it" and insert "the land;" and to strike out the following proviso at the end of the bill:

Provided, That this act shall only apply to land which the said company would be entitled to as indemnity land within the terms of said grant, and where the railroad has been completed.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of July 1, 1898, appearing in Thirtieth Statutes at Large, at pages 620, 621, and 622, providing a plan for the adjustment by the Land Department of conflicting claims to lands within the limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, are hereby extended and made applicable to all instances where lands in odd-numbered sections within the indemnity limits of the grant to said company were patented to settlers under public-land laws of applications presented to or proceedings initiated in the local land office at a time the land was embraced in a pending indemnity selection made by said company in conformity with the regulations of the Land Department, which indemnity selection has not since been waived or abandoned.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

CARSON-NEWMAN COLLEGE, TENNESSEE.

Mr. SPOONER. Some days ago the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 1860) for the relief of the trustees of Carson-Newman College, at Mossycreek, Tenn., and I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed. I ask leave to withdraw that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws the motion to reconsider, and the bill stands passed.

REFUNDING OF EXCESSIVE POSTAGE.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask consent of the Senator in charge of the pending bill to allow me to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11161) to refund excessive postage paid on certain newspapers.

Mr. NELSON. I will yield if it will not lead to any debate.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a short House bill and it will not lead to any debate.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to the following persons the following amounts, being the sums, respectively, found by the Court of Claims as the difference between the postage at third-class rates, which they were required to pay and did pay on newspapers published by them, respectively, during the years 1893 and 1894, and the postage at second-class rates with which such papers were legally chargeable, as follows: To the Modern Woodmen of America, publisher of the Modern Woodman, of Springfield, Ill., $5,423.62; to David I. Lillard, publisher of The Anchor and Shield, of Paris, Ill., $1,980.09; to Frank G. Simmons, publisher of the Nebraska Workman, of Seward, Nebr., $1,090.91, all as found and set forth by the Court of Claims in its findings of fact in House Documents Nos. 590, 294, and 592, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

USE OF TIMBER.

Mr. CLARK. With the consent of the Senator from Minnesota, I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 6048) to amend chapter 559 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved March 3, 1891.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the bill called up by the Senator from Wyoming, but I wish to make a statement. Unless the river and harbor bill gets into conference soon it will be impossible, in conference, to get through with the amendments. While I will not object to the bill of the Senator from Wyoming, as one has already been called up and passed, I think we ought to get through with the river and harbor bill before unanimous consent is given to pass other bills. There will be plenty of time after the bill goes to conference.

Mr. CLARK. I think if the Senator will listen to the reading of the bill I have called up he will see the necessity for its present consideration.

Mr. BERRY. I shall not object to this one.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the provisions of chapter 559 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved March 3, 1891, limiting the use of timber taken from public lands to residents of the State in which such timber is found, for use within said State, shall not apply to the south slope of Pryor Mountains, in the State of Montana, lying south of the Crow Reservation, west of the Big Horn River, and east of Sage Creek; but within the above-described boundaries the provisions of said chapter shall apply equally to the residents of the States of Wyoming and Montana, and to the use of timber taken from the above-described tract in either of the above-named States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARIS EXPOSITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, in pursuance of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1898 (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 30, pp. 645, 646), the report of Mr. Ferdinand W. Peck, commissioner-general of the United States to the International Exposition held at Paris, France, during the year 1900.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 23, 1901.

AQUILLA DAUGHERTY.

Mr. STEWART. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14028) for the relief of Aquilla Daugherty, to report it without amendment, and to submit a report thereon.

Mr. MASON. That is an emergency matter, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. BERRY. As it is absolutely necessary to pass the river and harbor bill, so as to get it into conference as early as possible, I have just given notice that I must object to the consideration of other bills for the present.

Mr. MASON. Very well; then I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 36, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Waukegan, Ill.: Continuing improvement, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 343, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, $75,000: Provided, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 8 on page 36.

Mr. NELSON. In line 4, page 36, I move to strike out the word "complete" and to insert "prosecute."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 36, line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract for such materials and work as may be necessary for the completion of the alternative project, involving a new cut to Lake Michigan, submitted in House Document No. 192, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, to be paid for as appropriation may be made from time to time, to be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $150,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Saugatuck Harbor, Michigan: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $15,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract for such materials, etc.

Mr. NELSON. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "completion," in line 25, and inserting the word "prosecution."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 21, on page 48, the last paragraph read being as follows:

Improving Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass.: For the purpose of further examination and report upon the project for improving the Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass., a board of three officers of the Engineer Corps, to be designated by the Secretary of War, shall personally make examination of the improvement proposed by the engineer in charge, and report thereon, with reference to the probable cost of said proposed improvement, to the commercial advantages, if any, to be derived from such improvement, and such other information as the board may deem essential; and $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of said board and for any surveys ordered by said board.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words here and leave on the record my protest against this scheme.

It is an old acquaintance. A very considerable sum of money was spent some years ago by a skillful engineer in surveying the river from Hartford up perhaps to Holyoke. I am not quite sure whether it went there, but certainly it went as far as Springfield. It certainly included the very interesting manufacturing village of Windsor Locks, where large manufactures receive their water power from a canal leaving the river somewhere above the village and coming down through it and leaving this power at the mills.

The scheme as we last had it contemplated building a large dam across the river just above the upper edge of our beautiful city, where it would certainly flood a beautiful park that we have laid out at a very considerable expense.

We do not propose to lose that park without a protest. Neither do our friends, the manufacturers at Windsor Locks, propose to have their power injured or destroyed for the sake of what I really think are fanciful improvements, intended, I suppose, to help barges or steamers to get up to Springfield.

I am not going into the statistics and all that matter now, but we have them, and we have the opinions of railroad men and engineers. I only give notice to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has just come into the Chamber (and I am glad he has come; I am sorry to have spoken when he was not here), that I shall fight this from the top of its head to the sole of its foot next winter if I am here.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 49, line 1, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five thousand" and insert "fifty-six thousand two hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ninety thousand" and insert "sixty-seven thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving the Tennessee River from Chattanooga to Riverton: Continuing improvement, $67,500; and the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to prepare an estimate of cost of improving said river at the Colbert Shoals by locks and dams.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 18, to insert:

Improving Big Hatchie River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement from its mouth to Rialto, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 21, after the word "Nashville," to strike out "For the completion of the lock and dam at Harpeth Shoals and for maintenance, $180,000" and insert "Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $210,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cumberland River, Tennessee, below Nashville: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $210,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 1, after the word "Nashville," to strike out "For the completion of lock and dam No. 1 and for maintenance, $105,000" and insert "Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $153,750;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cumberland River, Tennessee, above Nashville: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $153,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 11, to insert:

Improving Big Sandy River, West Virginia and Kentucky, including Tug and Louisa forks, in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 235, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $112,500: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute the project recommended in said report, or said material may be purchased and work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $666,667, exclusive of the amount herein or heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 3, to insert:

Improving Big Sandy River, West Virginia and Kentucky: Completing improvement of the two locks and dams between Louisa and the mouth of the river, authorized by the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, $50,000, the said sum to be in addition to the amount authorized by said act to be expended on the said locks and dams.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 16, to strike out:

Improving Licking River, Kentucky: Improving the Three-mile Ripple and adjoining shoals, in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 645, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, $100,000, and a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the construction of a lock and dam in said river as described in said report at a point to be selected between 5 and 6 miles from its mouth, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $207,000: Provided, That the site for said lock and dam shall not be selected or a contract entered into for its construction until after a definite location is chosen for the lock and dam at or near Cullums Ripple in the Ohio River herein provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 17, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" and in line 23, after the word "River," to insert $25,000 for completing the levee at Shawneetown, Ill.;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Ohio River from its head to its mouth: Continuing improvement, $300,000, of which amount $21,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in the construction of an ice pier at Maysville, Ky.; $45,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in completing the survey heretofore provided for to the mouth of the Big Miami River; $25,000 for completing the levee at Shawneetown, Ill.; $41,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the improvement of the Falls of the Ohio near Louisville, and $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in improvements at or near Davis Island Dam, if in the judgment of the Secretary of War the same should be made in the interests of navigation or the maintenance of Government works heretofore constructed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 20, after the word "thereof," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Attorney-General is authorized and directed to furnish, upon the request of the Secretary of War, an opinion upon the question whether the owners of these bridges, or any of them, can be required, under existing laws, to make the necessary changes at their own expense; and if not, what steps will be necessary to secure such changes, which opinion shall accompany the report of the Secretary of War to Congress.

So as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to prepare a list of the bridges upon the Ohio River which are an impediment to safe and convenient navigation, and the nature and extent of the modifications required therein, and report the same to Congress, together with information as to whether necessary changes in said bridges can be secured under existing law; and if not, what steps are necessary in order to secure proper changes or modifications in said bridges, and an estimate of the cost thereof: Provided, That the Attorney-General is authorized and directed to furnish, upon the request of the Secretary of War, an opinion upon the question whether the owners of these bridges, or any of them, can be required, under existing laws, to make the necessary changes at their own expense; and if not, what steps will be necessary to secure such changes, which opinion shall accompany the report of the Secretary of War to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 2, to insert:

Improving Ohio River: Continuing construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, $243,750: Provided, That of this amount $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in completing Lock and Dam No. 6: Provided further, That—

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Ohio River: Continuing construction of Locks and Dams Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, $243,750: Provided, That of this amount $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in completing Lock and Dam No. 6: Provided further, That the provision in river and harbor act of June 3, 1896, authorizing contracts to be made for the construction of Dams Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 in the Ohio River (as amended by the sundry civil act of June 4, 1897), and the provision in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, authorizing contracts to be made for the construction of Dams Nos. 13 and 18, are hereby so amended as to authorize the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to expend the amounts appropriated for these works by contract or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government, and the said

Secretary may exercise the same discretion in the improvements at Dams Nos. 8, 11, and 14, and at or near Cullums Ripple, herein provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 24, to insert:

For local surveys and purchase of site for Lock and Dam No. 7, $33,000, and any part thereof which may not be required for such purpose shall be available for construction of said lock and dam.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 4, after the word "improvement," to strike out "at or near Cullums Ripple" and insert "by construction of a lock and dam between Cullums Ripple and Medoc Bar;" in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred thousand" and insert "seventy-five thousand;" in line 12, after the word "to," to strike out "complete" and insert "prosecute the work on," and in line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "six hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-four;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Ohio River: Continuing improvement by construction of a lock and dam between Cullums Ripple and Medoc Bar, below Cincinnati, Ohio, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 265, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, $75,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute the work on the said lock and dam, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $633,334, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred thousand" and insert "three hundred and seventy-five thousand;" and in line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one million two hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "eight hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Detroit River, Michigan, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 712, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, and designated as "Plan A," $375,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $833,333, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 1, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three hundred and thirty thousand" and insert "two hundred and forty-seven thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving St. Clair Flats Canal, in Lake St. Clair, Michigan, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 234, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $247,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 6, after the word "maintenance," to strike out:

Forty thousand dollars: Provided, That one-half of said amount may be expended above and one-half below the county line between Saginaw and Bay counties.

And insert:

One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, of which so much as may be necessary may be used for the purchase or construction of a dredging plant.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Saginaw River, Michigan: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $125,000, of which so much as may be necessary may be used for the purchase or construction of a dredging plant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred thousand" and insert "three hundred and seventy-five thousand;" and in line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four million" and insert "two million six hundred and sixty-six thousand six hundred and sixty-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Middle and West Neebish channels, St. Marys River, Michigan, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 128, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $375,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $2,666,667, exclusive of the amounts herein appropriated and heretofore appropriated for the improvement of Hay Lake Channel, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 18, after the word "and," to strike out "twenty-five thousand dollars" and insert "fifty thousand dollars, of which $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the purchase or construction of a dredging plant;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Grand River, Michigan: Continuing improvement, $150,000, of which $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the purchase or construction of a dredging plant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 419, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, $30,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Menominee River, Michigan and Wisconsin: For maintenance, $7,500; for improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 419, first session Fifty-sixth Congress, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, after line 18, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to ascertain and determine the advisability of removing the dam at or near the mouth of Minnesota River, in the State of Minnesota, and, in case he determines that the removal of said dam is advisable, he is authorized to remove the same; and the sum of $2,500 is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued at the end of line 4, on page 88.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be inserted at the end of line 4, page 88.

The SECRETARY. On page 88, after the word "cut-off," in line 4, it is proposed to insert:

Or in making a survey from the mouth of the river to Mount Carmel, Ill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 88, line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five thousand" and insert "fifty-six thousand two hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Calumet River, Illinois and Indiana: Continuing improvement, $56,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five thousand" and insert "fifty-six thousand two hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Illinois River, Illinois: Continuing improvement, $56,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

The sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for making such surveys, examinations, and investigations as may be required to determine the feasibility of, and to prepare and report plans and estimates of cost of, a navigable waterway, 14 feet in depth, from Lockport, Ill., by way of the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers, to the mouth of said Illinois River, and from the mouth of the Illinois River, by way of the Mississippi River, to St Louis, Mo.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 7, page 90.

Mr. VEST. I wish the Secretary would read the first part of the provision he has just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That $25,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended by the Mississippi River Commission in making the surveys, examinations, and investigations herein required from the mouth of the Illinois River to St. Louis: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall appoint a board of three engineers to make the surveys, examinations, and investigations hereinbefore required from Lockport, Ill., through the Des Plaines River and Illinois River, to the mouth of said Illinois River, and that all such surveys, examinations, and investigations shall be made to determine the feasibility of, and to prepare and report plans and estimates of cost of, a navigable waterway, 14 feet in depth, from Lockport, Ill., to St. Louis, Mo.; the said Mississippi River Commission shall make said report covering such proposed improvement from the mouth of the Illinois River to St. Louis, and the said board of engineers shall make such report from Lockport, Ill., to the mouth of the Illinois River.

Mr. VEST. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota who is in charge of the bill to the fact that the Committee on Commerce have interpolated—I am a member of that committee, but I overlooked it until this moment—the control of the river from the mouth of the Illinois to St. Louis under the Mississippi River Commission. They have never had any jurisdiction over that part of the river. Their jurisdiction extends from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River. I do not know for what purpose we have injected into this part of the bill the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission sporadically over this part of the river. It ought to be the Board of Engineers. The Mississippi River Commission have never had anything to do with that part of the river.

Mr. BERRY. To what page does the Senator from Missouri refer?

Mr. VEST. I have not the bill before me.

Mr. CULLOM. Page 89.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that this amendment was incorporated by the committee.

Mr. VEST. I know it was; and it ought not to have been incorporated in this shape, because we are now taking that part of the river above the mouth of the Ohio, from the Illinois River to St. Louis, and putting it under the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission, which never has had anything to do with that part of the river. A board of engineers controls that.

Mr. CULLOM. It is very easy to strike out the Mississippi River Commission——

Mr. VEST. That is what ought to be done. I never noticed it until the Secretary read it.

Mr. CULLOM. And say it shall be done by a board of engineers, appointed for the investigation of the whole line.

Mr. VEST. Strike out "the Mississippi River Commission" from the mouth of the Illinois to St. Louis and insert "the Board of Engineers."

Mr. NELSON. I agree to the amendment.

Mr. VEST. Or "the Engineer Bureau."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 16, page 89, strike out the words "Mississippi River Commission" and insert "Board of Engineers."

Mr. VEST. I suggest "engineers in charge of the river."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Missouri please state his amendment again?

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that we insert the words "the Secretary of War."

Mr. VEST. Very good; that is the same thing.

Mr. BERRY. That is right.

Mr. NELSON. I move to insert "the Secretary of War" instead of "the Mississippi River Commission."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 16, page 89, strike out "Mississippi River Commission" and insert "Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I suggest that farther down, in line 23, for instance, where it says, "to the mouth of the said Illinois River," the board should have jurisdiction clear on to St. Louis.

Mr. NELSON. It is the Secretary of War.

Mr. BERRY. The Secretary of War already has jurisdiction from Cairo to St. Louis. It is not under the commission.

Mr. NELSON. It is left under the charge of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CULLOM. My only desire is to make it consistent all the way through.

Mr. VEST. All of the river from the mouth of the river or from Cairo—which is the same thing—above Cairo is under the Board of Engineers.

Mr. CULLOM. I know.

Mr. VEST. Of course the Secretary of War has control of the Board of Engineers. From Cairo to the Head of the Passes the Mississippi River Commission has jurisdiction.

Mr. CULLOM. Then the Senator will find on page 90——

Mr. NELSON. There is another amendment which should be made.

Mr. CULLOM. The Mississippi River Commission is referred to again on page 90.

Mr. VEST. That should be stricken out if it is above Cairo.

Mr. NELSON. Let that amendment be made.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, page 90, it is proposed to strike out "said Mississippi River Commission" and insert "Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 90, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three hundred thousand" and insert "two hundred and twenty-two thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi River: Continuing improvement, $222,500. The funds herein appropriated and the unexpended balance of former appropriations for this work shall be expended for the necessary renewal and repair of the reservoirs that have already been completed, and for the purchase of the lands or easements therein which are necessarily subject to overflow by reason of the legitimate operation of the said completed reservoirs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 20, after the word "Falls," to insert "Sandy Lake;" so as to read:

Provided, That so much of said funds as may be required may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in making full and accurate surveys of the flowage lines of Winnibigoshish, Leech Lake, Pokegama Falls, Sandy Lake, and Pine River reservoirs, and in permanently marking such lines on the ground.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, after line 2, to insert:

That all lands in the State of Minnesota described in and withdrawn from sale by the proclamations of the President of the United States for the reason that said lands would be required for or subject to flowage in the construction of dams, reservoirs, and other works proposed to be erected for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and certain of its tributaries, be, and the same are hereby, declared to be, and to have been at all times heretofore, subject to the provisions of a certain act of Congress entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, as fully, effectually, and to the same extent as though said lands had not been described in said proclamations, or withdrawn from sale thereby, but had remained with the body of public lands subject to private entry and sale: Provided, however, That any and all parts of said lands acquired by any railroad company under said act of Congress shall at all times be subject to the right of flowage which at any time may become necessary in the construction or maintenance of dams, reservoirs, or other works which may be constructed or erected by or under the authority of the United States for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries: Provided further, That the railroad companies availing themselves of this act shall, in addition to filing the maps now required by law to be filed, also file maps of definite location of their lines of railroad over said water-reserve lands in the office of the Secretary of War; and no location shall be permitted which takes for right of way or stations lands needed for the use of the present reservoir system, or in the construction of dams or other works, or any proposed or probable extension of the same, or which will obstruct or increase the cost of the present or prospective reservoir system: Provided further, That the plan for the location and construction of any such railway, or any part thereof, shall be first submitted to the Secretary of War and approved by him and by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army.

Mr. NELSON. This is a long amendment, and I ask that it be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 92, line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one million three hundred thousand" and insert "one million twelve thousand five hundred;" on page 93, line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two million six hundred thousand" and insert "one million seven hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-four;" in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred and sixty-six thousand six hundred and sixty-seven" and insert "four hundred and ninety-two thousand five hundred;" in line 7, after the word "Ohio," to strike out "to" and insert "up to and including;" in line 8, after the word "River," to insert:

Of which amount $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in preventing erosion of the banks at or near Sawyers Bend, so as to improve the channel and preserve the protection works at said point.

In line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred and ninety-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three" and insert "five hundred and twenty;" and in line 14, after the word "St. Paul," to strike out:

And the amounts for which additional contracts are authorized to be entered into shall be expended in like proportion.

And insert:

And of the amounts for which additional contracts or work are authorized $808,889 shall be expended from the mouth of the Ohio to the mouth of the Missouri, and $924,444 from the mouth of the Missouri to St. Paul. The sum of $31,000, being the unexpended balance of the amount heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River above the Eads Bridge, shall be applied to the improvement of the harbor of St. Louis below said Eads Bridge, commencing at a point on the Illinois side of the river opposite Soulard street in the city of St. Louis and extending to a point on the same side of the river opposite to the United States arsenal in said city, the work to be done for the purpose of removing the sand bar at that locality and obtaining a sufficient depth of water between the eastern and western banks of the river.

So as to read:

Improving the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to St. Paul, Minn.: Continuing improvement, $1,012,500: Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the systematic improvement of the Mississippi River between the points mentioned, or the said materials may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,733,334: And provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated, $492,500 shall be expended from the mouth of the Ohio up to and including the mouth of the Missouri River, of which amount $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in preventing erosion of the banks at or near Sawyers Bend, so as to improve the channel and preserve the protection works at said point, and $520,000 from the mouth of the Missouri River to St. Paul, and of the amounts for which additional contracts or work are authorized $808,889 shall be expended from the mouth of the Ohio to the mouth of the Missouri, and $924,444 from the mouth of the Missouri to St. Paul. The sum of $31,000, being the unexpended balance of the amount heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River above the Eads Bridge, shall be applied to the improvement of the harbor of St. Louis below said Eads Bridge, commencing at a point on the Illinois side of the river opposite Soulard street in the city of St. Louis and extending to a point on the same side of the river opposite to the United States arsenal in said city, the work to be done for the purpose of removing the sand bar at that locality and obtaining a sufficient depth of water between the eastern and western banks of the river.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to move a small amendment here. I move to strike out the word "four," in line 3, page 93, and insert "three;" so as to make it correspond. It should be "thirty-three" instead of "thirty-four" dollars.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading was continued to the end of line 1, page 95.

Mr. VEST. I move to insert after the word "channel," in the Hannibal appropriation, the words "and harbor." I have not before me the bill; but the Secretary can insert the words.

Mr. NELSON. That is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1, page 95, insert "and harbor;" so as to read:

For dredging the channel and harbor and removing sand bars at Hannibal, Mo.

Mr. VEST. It does not increase the appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 95, line 1, after the word "Missouri," to insert:

Twenty-five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the improvement of the harbor of Muscatine, Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two million five hundred thousand" and insert "one million eight hundred and seventy-five thousand;" on page 97, line 1, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five million" and insert "three million three hundred and thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three;" and in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Mississippi River from Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including salaries, clerical, official, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission: Continuing improvement, $1,875,000. * * * Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the plans of the Mississippi River Commission as aforesaid, or said materials may be purchased and work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $3,333,333, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated. * * * Provided further, That of the sums hereby appropriated and authorized to be expended * * * $35,000 in continuing improvement at Caruthersville, Mo.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and ten thousand" and insert "eighty-two thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For work in accordance with the plans and specifications of the Mississippi River Commission: At the harbor of New Orleans, La., continuing improvement, $82,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, after line 4, to insert:

Reservoirs at the head waters of the Missouri River: For construction along Piney Creek, Wyoming, of three reservoirs for the purpose of holding back the flood waters of said stream, with a view of minimizing the formation of bars and shoals and other flood-formed obstructions to navigation and to aid in the maintenance of an increased depth and uniform flow of water for navigation during the dry season, in accordance with the recommendations submitted in House Document No. 441, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such work and materials as may be necessary for the completion of such reservoirs, to be paid for as appropriations may, from time to time, be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $165,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to the amendment. In line 13, page 98, I move to strike out "four" and insert "one." The reference to the document is wrong.

The SECRETARY. In line 13, page 98, before the word "hundred," strike out "four" and insert "one;" so as to read: "House Document No. 141."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, after line 20, to insert:

For construction along Grey Bull River, Wyoming, of a reservoir for the purpose of holding back the flood waters of said stream, with a view of minimizing the formation of bars and shoals and other flood-formed obstructions to navigation and to aid in the maintenance of an increased depth and uniform flow of water for navigation during the dry season, in accordance with estimates of cost of construction of such reservoir made by the Geological Survey, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such work and materials as may be necessary for the completion of such reservoir, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $25,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That these reservoirs shall be emptied, as nearly as may be possible, each year, between June 30 and September 30, the discharge of stored water to be under the direction of the State engineer, or other State officer especially designated for the purpose by the State wherein such reservoirs are located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, after line 15, to insert:

For building dams and constructing reservoirs on the Sioux River, in South Dakota, to control the flow of said stream and impound the flood waters to secure a permanent stage of water in the Missouri River, $52,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty thousand" and insert "one hundred and twelve thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Missouri River at and above Sioux City: Continuing improvement and maintenance, including snagging, $112,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three hundred thousand" and insert "two hundred and sixty-two thousand five hundred;" in line 4, after the word "designate," to insert:

Provided, That the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in continuing the improvements and revetment to prevent erosure of the banks and a change in the channel of the river at St. Joseph, Mo.

And in line 16, after the word "may," to insert "in the discretion of the Secretary of War;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Missouri River below Sioux City: Continuing improvement, $262,500, which shall be expended in the improvement of such portions of said river as the Secretary of War may designate: Provided, That the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in continuing the improvements and revetment to prevent erosure of the banks and a change in the channel of the river at St. Joseph, Mo.; and such dikes, or other construction as may be necessary to protect public or private property, may be located in said stream and upon the banks thereof by abutting owners and municipalities, provided they do not interfere with the proper navigation of said river, and provided further, that the same are approved by the Government engineer having the improvement of said river in charge: Provided, That the equipment now owned by the Government on the Missouri River may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used to aid in such construction, and the expenses of operation during the next fiscal year may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid from the appropriation herein made; and such portions of said appropriation as he may deem necessary may be expended for the improvement of tributary streams of said river heretofore under improvement under the direction of the Missouri River Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 13, on page 102, the last paragraphs read being the following:

So much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved July 5, 1884, as provides for the creation of a commission to be called the Missouri River Commission, and prescribes the manner of appointment, the compensation, the powers, the duties, the expenditures, and the reports thereof, be, and the same is hereby, repealed from and after June 30, 1901.

And said commission shall prepare and submit through the Chief of the Engineer Corps of the Army to the Secretary of War, to be by him transmitted to Congress, a full and detailed report of all their proceedings and actions since the date of their last report, and of all such plans and systems of works as may now be devised and in progress and carried out by them, and of all such additional plans and systems of works as may be devised and matured by them, with full and detailed estimates of the cost thereof, and statements of all expenditures made by them, and shall on said 30th day of June, 1901, transfer to and place under the control of the Secretary of War, or such engineer officers as he may designate, all such vessels, barges, machinery, and instruments, and such plant or other property as may then be provided, devised, or in use on said river, or on the Gasconade and Osage rivers, in the State of Missouri, from appropriations heretofore made for such rivers, or other sources, in their possession or under their control.

And the Secretary of War shall, after said 30th day of June, 1901, superintend and control all property theretofore under the control of said commission, and all works theretofore under their supervision, and shall expend for the purposes for which they were appropriated all appropriations made herein, and all unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the improvement of said rivers which shall remain on hand on the said 30th day of June, 1901, and all appropriations which may hereafter be made for such rivers, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. VEST. I want to make a few remarks, Mr. President, in regard to repealing the provision of law which created and maintained the Missouri River Commission. As a member of the Senate Committee on Commerce, I made no opposition to the action of the House, although I am the author of the act which created the Missouri River Commission.

I wish to state in justice to that commission, of which Lieutenant-Colonel Stickney is the president, that its work has been performed faithfully and honestly, and what I say now is intended to obviate or remove any impression that the action of Congress in abolishing the commission is intended as the slightest criticism upon what they have done.

I do not agree with the reasons given by the Committee of the House on Rivers and Harbors for their action in striking out the provision of law creating and maintaining this commission, but I make no opposition to the action of the House of Representatives for the reason I shall state.

The Missouri River Commission properly and rightfully recommended in their first report, more than eight years ago, a systematic improvement of the Missouri River by reaches of 10 miles each, commencing at the mouth and going up the stream. They said, very properly, what one not even an expert would know to be true, that isolated and sporadic improvement at localities upon the river amounted to nothing, and the only way in which the river could be improved scientifically and properly was by reaches so that one reach could depend upon and be supported by another. I have always contended for that system. I never had the slightest doubt that the Missouri River Commission was right.

The report of the committee of the House states that there is no navigation upon this river. Five hundred wrecks are in the Missouri River now, or the remains of them, and no insurance can be had upon either boats or cargoes on account of the condition of that stream. The neglect of the General Government to make sufficient appropriations for the systematic improvement of the river is the cause of its condition to-day. Yet this is made the reason for abolishing the commission entirely, with reflections upon the commission which I believe to be unjust. It is true the report says they mean no reflection upon the commission, and yet it goes on to say that the system now being pursued by the commission can not, in the opinion of the committee, be supported.

Mr. President, I have concurred in the report abolishing the commission for the reason that I believe it hopeless to expect from the General Government a sufficient amount of money for the improvement of this stream, and I have also concurred because whenever the Senate has made sufficient appropriation for the systematic improvement of the river by reaches, in accordance with the recommendations of the commission, the other branch of Congress has invariably diverted those appropriations to local improvements, and those local improvements in each successive spring have been washed away, and then the fault of not having the river in a sufficiently improved condition for navigation so as to invite boats to run upon it has been used as an argument against the Missouri River Commission. If we had followed the advice of that commission the Missouri River would to-day have a number of boats upon it and would be an important auxiliary in lowering the rates upon the railroads which parallel that stream.

Not believing that Congress would hereafter adopt any different system from that which has been adopted for the last eight years, and believing we would continue to have the same imperfect and unimproved condition of the river that we have to-day, I have concurred in this action abolishing the commission. But I deemed it my duty to say what I have in order to remove any suspicion that the engineer officers upon the commission have failed in the slightest degree to do their duty.

FRANK B. CASE.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11598) for the relief of Frank B. Case, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate; and agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
WILLIAM E. CHANDLER,
B. R. TILLMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

V. H. METCALF,
JAMES E. WATSON,
ADOLPH MEYER,

The report was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Insert in line 8, page 1, after the word "assistants," the following: "Appointed by the United States district court."

Strike out the word "a," after the word "including," in line 8, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the word "the."

Strike out the word "an," next preceding the word "interpreter," in line 8, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the word "the."

Strike out, commencing at the end of line 8, page 1, the following: "Appointed by the United States district court as provided in section 34 of said act."

Strike out all of section 5, on page 3.

And the Senate agree to the same.

J. B. FORAKER,
J. H. GALLINGER,
S. R. MALLORY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. A. COOPER,
R. R. HITT,
W. L. JONES,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and accede to the request of the House for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. BUTLER were appointed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 102, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "For completion of the lock and dam at Brenneckes Shoals, $20,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Osage River, Missouri: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $15,000. For completion of the lock and dam at Brenneckes Shoals, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three thousand six hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Napa River, California: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 103, to strike out:

The Secretary of War, in carrying out the provisions of any act of Congress providing for the restraining or impounding of mining débris in California, may, in his discretion, with the appropriations heretofore made by Congress and the State of California, prosecute the work required therefor by contract or otherwise, and by the purchase of a site or sites, and may accept payments on account thereof as the work progresses under the provisions of the acts of the legislature of said State for such purposes, notwithstanding the restriction contained in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, to the effect that the whole amount required for completion of such works of impounding shall be available before such work is commenced.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 103, after line 13, to insert:

For carrying out the provisions of the act of Congress providing for the restraining or impounding of mining débris in California, in accordance with the project printed in House Document No. 431, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, $150,000 in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated. And the Secretary of War, within the limit of the appropriations heretofore and now made by Congress and by the State of California, is authorized to make a contract for such work and materials as may be necessary to carry out and complete the project, or may, in his discretion, purchase the materials and cause the work to be done otherwise than by contract, and may, out of said appropriations, purchase a site or sites in accordance with said project: Provided, That before entering on said work or making said contracts the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that the State of California has appropriated for the prosecution of said project the sum of $400,000: And provided further, That contracts for the purchase of sites or for work and material shall provide specifically that only one-half the compensation agreed to be paid shall be paid by the United States, and that the contractor or contractors shall look to the State of California for the remainder of the agreed compensation: And provided further, That if the work be done by the United States without contract, one-half the cost thereof shall be paid by the State of California, as the work progresses, upon estimates to be submitted from time to time by the Chief of Engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, line 17, after the word "California," to insert "Completing improvement;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Redwood Creek, California: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 87, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, $8,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, line 20, to insert:

Colorado River, Nevada: The Secretary of War shall cause a survey of the Colorado River to be made with a view to deepening and rendering navigable the channel between El Dorado Canyon and Rioville, Nev., and shall submit an estimate therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three," and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving mouth of Columbia River: Continuing improvement, $300,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be required to prosecute the approved and modified project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,000,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert "for improvement, $10,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Columbia River between the mouth of the Willamette River and the city of Vancouver, Wash.: For maintenance, $8,000; for improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy" and insert "thirty;" in the same line, before the word "thousand" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" and in line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Willamette River above Portland, and Yamhill River, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $30,000, of which $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in revetting the bank of the Willamette River near Independence, Oreg., and $5,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in revetting the bank of the Willamette River above Corvallis, Oreg.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "fifteen;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Of which sum $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in removing the log jam in Nooksack River.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Puget Sound and its tributary waters, Washington: Continuing improvement, $15,000, of which sum $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in removing the log jam in Nooksack River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, line 4, after the word "improvement," to strike out "$3,000" and insert "and removing snags down to and including Grays Harbor, $5,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Chehalis River, Washington: Continuing improvement and removing snags down to and including Grays Harbor, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, line 12, after the word "Washington," to strike out "For maintenance, $500" and insert "Completing improvement, $10,600;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Lewis River, Washington: Completing improvement, $10,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, after line 17, to insert:

Snake River, Alaska: Richard Chilcott, a citizen of the United States, is hereby authorized and empowered to dredge and open the mouth of Snake River, at Nome City, in the district of Alaska, to enable small vessels and lighters to enter therein at any stage of the tide and during all conditions of weather, to construct wharves for commercial purposes, and to charge tolls during a period not to exceed ten years for the use of such improvements according to plans and specifications and schedule of tolls to be approved by and under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 108, after line 11, to strike out:

SEC. 2. For preliminary examinations, surveys (except where otherwise herein especially provided for), contingencies, expenses connected with inspection of bridges, the service of notice required in such cases, the examination of bridge sites and reports thereon, and for incidental repairs for which there is no special appropriation for rivers and harbors, $200,000: Provided, That no preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this or some prior act or resolution shall be made: And provided further, That after the regular or formal report on any examination, survey, project, or work under way or proposed is submitted, no supplemental or additional report or estimate for the same fiscal year shall be made unless ordered by a concurrent resolution of Congress. The Government shall not be deemed to have entered upon any project for the improvement of any waterway or harbor mentioned in this act until funds for the commencement of the proposed work shall have been actually appropriated by law.

And insert:

SEC. 2. For preliminary examinations, surveys (except where otherwise herein especially provided for), contingencies, and incidental repairs, of rivers and harbors, for which there is no special appropriation, for expenses connected with the inspection of bridges, the service of notice required in such cases, the examination of bridge sites and reports thereon, $300,000: Provided, That no preliminary examination, survey, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this or some prior act or regulation shall be made: And provided further, That after the regular or formal reports required by law on any examination, survey, project, or work under way or authorized have been submitted, no supplemental or additional report or estimate shall by made unless ordered by a concurrent resolution of Congress, or requested by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate or the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives. The Government shall not be deemed to have entered upon any project for the improvement of any waterway or harbor mentioned in this act until funds for the commencement of the proposed work shall have been actually appropriated by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 114, after line 17, to strike out:

Harbor of St. Augustine, Fla.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 114, after line 19, to strike out:

New River, Virginia and West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 114, after line 24, to strike out:

Clear River, Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, after line 2, to strike out:

SEC. 8. That the act of Congress approved June 12, 1876, entitled "An act authorizing the residents and property owners of Neville Township, county of Allegheny and State of Pennsylvania, to close the channel of the Ohio River on the south side of Neville Island by the construction of an embankment or causeway from the head of said island to the southern shore of said river," is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, after line 24, to insert:

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to extend the time of completion of any bridge, the construction of which is authorized under any existing law of Congress, whenever application to him shall be made before the expiration of the time limited, and the reason for such extension shall be deemed by him to be sufficient.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 116, after line 5, to insert:

SEC. 10. That the provisions of section 13 of an act making appropriation for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, approved March 3, 1899, or of any act of the Congress of the United States approved by the President, so far as the same apply to fine or short sawdust coming out of any mill or lumbering manufactory operated by water upon the St. Croix River, the Machi River, the Narraguagus River, the Union River, the Penobscot River, the Denneys River, the Chandler River, and the Tunk River, in the State of Maine, are hereby suspended and shall not be held as applying to such short or fine sawdust coming from such mills or lumbering manufactories upon said rivers during the lifetime of such mills now existing; but whenever such mills shall be rebuilt or new mills shall be built upon said rivers, the provisions of said section 13 and other laws aforesaid shall be in full force and effect upon such new or rebuilt mills.

Mr. NELSON. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "Chandler River," in line 15, the words "the Pleasant River."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first word at the beginning of line 14 will be changed from "Machi" to "Machias." The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (10) 11, page 117, line 2, after the word "cases," to strike out "except as herein especially directed," and in line 14, after the word "provided," to strike out:

In all cases preliminary examinations, as well as surveys, shall be examined or reviewed by the said board provided for in section 3, who shall make reports thereon, to wit.

And insert:

In all cases preliminary examinations and surveys provided for in this act shall be examined and reviewed by the board provided for in section 3 of this act, to wit.

So as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause preliminary examinations or surveys to be made at the localities named in this section as hereinafter provided. In all cases a preliminary examination shall first be made, which shall embrace information concerning the commercial importance, present and prospective, of the river and harbor mentioned, and a report as to the advisability of its improvement. Whenever such preliminary examination has been made, in case such improvement is not deemed advisable no further action shall be taken thereon without the direction of Congress; but in case the report has been or shall be to the effect that such river or harbor is worthy of improvement, the Secretary of War is hereby directed, at his discretion, to cause surveys to be made and the cost of improving such river or harbor to be estimated and to be reported to Congress: Provided, In all cases preliminary examinations and surveys provided for in this act shall be examined and reviewed by the board provided for in section 3 of this act, to wit:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Delaware," on page 118, after line 10, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 118, after line 12, to insert:

Leipsic River from its mouth to the drawbridge at the town of Leipsic.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Florida," on page 119, after line 1, to insert:

Cypress Top, mouth of the Choctawhatchee River, with a view to securing a depth of 5 feet.

Mr. NELSON. This amendment should be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 119, after line 8, to insert:

St. Andrews Bay, with a view to securing a depth of 20 feet across the bar and up to the town of St. Andrews.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, under the subhead "Georgia," on page 119, line 13, after the word "County," to strike out:

The Secretary of War is directed to cause a survey and an estimate of the cost of improving Skiddaway Narrows, connecting Isle of Hope River with Burnside River, for a channel 75 feet wide and 6 feet deep at mean low water, and make report of the same to the next session of Congress.

And insert:

With a view to securing a channel between Isle of Hope River and Burnside River, 75 feet wide and 6 feet deep at mean low water.

So as to make the clause read:

Skiddaway Narrows, Chatham County: With a view to securing a channel between Isle of Hope River and Burnside River 75 feet wide and 6 feet deep at mean low water.

Mr. NELSON. This paragraph, both the House provision and the Senate committee amendment, should be stricken out. It is provided for elsewhere.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this clause has not been inserted elsewhere in the bill?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; and that is why it should come out here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stricken out, if there be no objection.

Mr. NELSON. The whole of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole of it.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, under the subhead "Illinois," on page 120, line 4, before the word "Elizabethtown," to strike out "Mound City;" so as to make the clause read:

Ohio River, channels at or near Elizabethtown.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 120, after line 5, to insert:

Harbor at Mound City, on the Illinois side of the Ohio River, with a view to ascertaining whether or not work at that point is necessary for the preservation and improvement of said harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 120, after line 9, to insert:

Ohio River from Mound City, Ill., to Cairo, Ill., with a view to ascertaining what improvement, if any, is desirable for the protection of the banks and levees on the Illinois side.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 120, after line 13, to insert:

Chicago River, with a view of determining the need, advisability, and cost of constructing one or more turning basins in the north and south branches.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Kentucky," on page 120, after line 21, to insert:

Green and Barren rivers, with a view to obtaining a 6-foot navigable depth in said streams at pool stage of water.

The amendment was agreed to.

York Harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Maryland," on page 122, after line 12, to insert:

Baltimore Channel, Baltimore, Md., with a view to increasing the depth to 35 feet and its width to 1,000 feet or other adequate width.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment from the committee, to follow the amendment which has just been adopted. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 15, on page 122, it is proposed to insert:

The Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, with a view to ascertaining the cost of its enlargement for a ship canal and improvement in depth, width, and capacity for navigation by vessels of the greatest draft, and the annual cost of maintaining and operating said canal when constructed. Also the route connecting said two bays, known as the Sassafras route, together with its cost and the annual cost of maintaining and operating a like ship canal by such route. Also for a ship canal connecting Baltimore with the Atlantic Ocean by the route known as the Choptank route, with the cost thereof and the annual cost of maintaining and operating such ship canal when constructed. And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to report to Congress which of the said routes will afford greatest protection in time of war and greatest facilities to commerce by cheapening the cost of transportation and shortening the distance from the city of Baltimore to the Atlantic Ocean.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, under the subhead "Massachusetts," on page 122, after line 18, to insert:

Little Harbor, Woods Holl.

Mr. NELSON. There is a mistake in the amendment which has just been stated. The name "Holl" should be "Hole;" so as to read "Woods Hole." I move that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 122, after line 19, to insert:

Big Black River from the Alabama and Vicksburg Railroad bridge to the mouth of the river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Missouri," on page 125, after line 2, to strike out:

The Mississippi River Commission shall examine and report upon the feasibility of the establishment of a system of reservoirs to be located in the St. Francis Basin, which reservoirs shall be large enough to cut some 10 feet off the top of the greatest floods at the junction of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, or to reduce the extreme flood level to about the equivalent of a 42-foot stage on the gauge at Cairo.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "New Jersey," on page 125, after line 14, to insert:

Rancocas River, with a view to obtaining a 6-foot channel from its mouth to Moores Landing, on the Lumberton Branch.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 125, after line 17, to insert:

Raritan Bay, with a view to obtain a depth of 22 feet of water, 400 feet wide at mean low tide, from South Amboy to tail of Great Beds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "New York," on page 126, after line 5, to insert:

East River, at the narrowest part on the eastern side, at Ravenswood, Long Island, New York, at and near Rainey's cofferdam, for a distance of 1,200 to 1,500 feet, with a view to widening and deepening the channel at that part of the river to 600 feet of width and at least 15 feet of depth; also for deepening the channel to 26 feet at mean low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "North Carolina," on page 127, after line 1, to insert:

Northeast River from Wilmington to the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad bridge at Castle Haynes, with a view to securing a depth sufficient to admit the navigation of the same by vessels entering the port of Wilmington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, line 9, after the word "necessary," to insert:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to cause this waterway to be improved by dredging at any time in order to permit the navigation of said Indian Island Slough, and for that purpose he is authorized to divert a sufficient sum therefor out of the appropriation of $25,000 heretofore appropriated in this act for improving Pamlico and Tar rivers, North Carolina.

So as to make the clause read:

Indian Island Slough, from Pamlico River to mouth of South River, with a view of obtaining a depth of 7, 8, and 9 feet, respectively, and 100 feet wide, or as wide as may be necessary. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to cause this waterway to be improved by dredging at any time in order to permit the navigation of said Indian Island Slough, and for that purpose he is authorized to divert a sufficient sum therefor out of the appropriation of $25,000 heretofore appropriated in this act for improving Pamlico and Tar rivers, North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 17, to insert:

Perquimans River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 18, to insert:

Shallowbag Bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 19, to insert:

Carrot Island Slough, beginning at a point opposite Middle Marshes and thence through Carrot Island Slough and Lewis Thoroughfare to the main channel in Newport River, with a view of obtaining a navigable depth of 7, 8, 9, and 10 feet at mean low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 24, to insert:

Point Harbor, at the south end of Currituck County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Oregon," on page 128, line 9, after the word "Bay," to strike out:

Outer bar: The Secretary of War is directed to cause a survey and an estimate of the cost of securing channels across said bar of 15 and 20 feet in depth, respectively.

And insert:

With a view to securing channels across said bar of 15 and 20 feet in depth.

So as to make the clause read:

Tillamook Bay, with a view to securing channels across said bar of 15 and 20 feet in depth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 13 on page 129, after the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Under the head of "Oregon," on page 129, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

Scappoose Bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, under the subhead "Pennsylvania," on page 129, after line 16, to insert:

The Beaver River, in Beaver County, Pa., from the Ohio River to the northern end of Beaver Falls Borough, a distance of about 4 miles, with a view to provide for slack-water navigation of said Beaver River connecting with that of the Ohio River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "South Carolina," on page 130, after line 12, to insert:

Charleston Harbor, South Carolina, with a view to extending the jetties so as to provide a harbor of refuge and a channel into the harbor of not less than 30 feet at low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 130, after line 23, to insert:

Wateree and Santee rivers, from Camden to the mouth of the Santee, with a view of providing a navigable depth of 6 feet at dead low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Tennessee," on page 131, after line 4, to insert:

Hiawassee River, from the mouth of the Ocoee River to the ferry at head of Jenkins Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Texas," on page 131, after line 12, to strike out:

Ship channel from the mouth of the Sabine and Neches rivers to Sabine Pass, on the west side of said lake at or near the margin of said lake thereof, and a report shall be made of the probable cost of excavating a channel from the mouth of said rivers to said Sabine Pass of a depth of 9, 12, 18, and 25 feet, and a report shall also be made as to the practicability and feasibility of connecting the channel proposed above with the channel or canal now known as the Port Arthur Canal, extending from Sabine Pass to Port Arthur, and what it will cost to excavate the proposed channel to and connect with the said Port Arthur channel, and shall examine and report upon other matters touching the construction, excavating, and desirability of the channel herein proposed, as may be deemed worthy or material, and shall report such other facts in connection with the construction of said canal as the engineers may deem proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 132, after line 3, to insert:

Ship channel from the mouth of the Sabine and Neches rivers to Sabine Pass, on the west side of said lake at or near the margin of said lake thereof, with a view to excavating a channel from the mouth of said rivers to said Sabine Pass of a depth of 9, 12, 18, and 25 feet, and as to the practicability and feasibility of connecting the channel proposed above with the channel or canal now known as the Port Arthur Canal, extending from Sabine Pass to Port Arthur, and as to other matters touching the construction, excavating, and desirability of the channel herein proposed which may be deemed worthy or material, and as to such other facts in connection with the construction of said canal as the Secretary of War may deem proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Virginia," on page 133, after line 1, to insert:

Nandua Harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 133, after line 5, to insert:

The mouth of York River, with a view to deepening and improving the channel known as Sandbox or Thoroughfare.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 133, after line 7, to strike out:

WASHINGTON.

Nooksack River, with a view to constructing a dam to divert the flow of the river into Bellingham Bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 134, to insert:

TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

The following harbors: Hilo, Kailua, and Hookena harbors, on the island of Hawaii; Lahaina and Kahului harbors, on the island of Maui; Honolulu Harbor, on the island of Oahu; and Waimea, on Kauai.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. NELSON. I have another amendment to offer, on page 60, line 14, after the word "Wilmington," to strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, line 14, after the word "Wilmington," it is proposed to strike out:

Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $10,000.

And to insert:

In accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 180, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, $250,000, to be expended in obtaining a navigable channel from Wilmington to Fayetteville, having a depth of 8 feet at mean low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. On page 127, after line 25, under the head of "North Carolina," I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 127, after line 25, it is proposed to insert:

Neuse River, from Goldsboro to Newbern, with a view to securing a depth of 3 feet.

Mr. BUTLER. I will state that that simply provides for a survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, line 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

Improving St. Jones River, Delaware, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 156, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McENERY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, page 66, after the word "Louisiana," it is proposed to insert "and in addition thereto there is appropriated the further sum of $20,000."

Mr. VEST. Where is that to come in?

The SECRETARY. On page 66, line 11, after the word "Louisiana."

Mr. VEST. Let the amendment be again stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that that had better be inserted as a separate paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Louisiana," in line 11 on page 66, it is proposed to insert "and in addition thereto there is appropriated the further sum of $20,000;" so that the clause as amended would read:

The unexpended balance of the amounts heretofore appropriated for removing the aquatic plant known as the water hyacinth from the navigable waters of the States of Florida and Louisiana, and in addition thereto there is appropriated the further sum of $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the bill may be printed with the Senate amendments in it, and that they be numbered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the bill be printed with the Senate amendments, and that the amendments be numbered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 323) granting homesteaders on the abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation in Wyoming the right to enter one-quarter section of public land on said reservation as pasture or grazing land.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13850) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill

(H. R. 13843) to amend section 7 of an act to establish circuit courts of appeal, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1891, as amended by act approved February 18, 1895, and further amended by act approved June 6, 1900; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2799) to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898;

A bill (S. 4306) for the relief of settlers under the public-land laws to lands within the indemnity limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company;

A bill (H. R. 149) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William C. Woodbridge for compensation for the use by the United States of his invention relating to projectiles, for which letters patent were ordered to issue to him March 25, 1852;

A bill (H. R. 1860) for the relief of the trustees of Carson Newman College, at Mossy Creek, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. 12840) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 13907) to revive and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Georgia Pine Railroad of Georgia to construct a bridge across the Flint River, a navigable stream, in Decatur County, Ga.;"

A bill (H. R. 13992) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Carthage, Tenn.; and

A bill (H. R. 14144) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River at Monticello, Miss.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALDRICH. In the absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is detained in his committee room on public business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. There is no occasion, it seems to me, to displace the pending order. I suggest that it be informally laid aside.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not know there was any pending order.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly there is. I ask unanimous consent that the pending order may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the pending order referred to by the Senator?

Mr. HOAR. The judges' salary bill, which is on the Calendar as unfinished business. I ask unanimous consent——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the special order, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3450) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is the proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the special order, being the bill fixing the salaries of certain judges.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought the sundry civil appropriation bill had been called up. I object to the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts being considered now.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I asked unanimous consent that the special order be informally laid aside for the present, so that the appropriation bill might be proceeded with, and the special order not be displaced. I think it is my duty to preserve the rights of that bill. Very likely we may not reach it; but instead of displacing it by a formal motion, I ask that the bill be informally laid aside in the usual way.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to that. I did not understand the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts regards the bill to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States courts, under the ruling of the Chair, the formal unfinished business?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it is so stated on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed it is so stated on the Calendar. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside while the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14018) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ALDRICH. Before yielding, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

SENATOR FROM MONTANA.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to give notice that on Saturday evening at 8 o'clock I shall ask leave to submit some remarks upon Senate resolution 284, Calendar No. 1038, a resolution that William A. Clark was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the legislature of the State of Montana.

Mr. PETTUS. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire simply gave a notice.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

ADMINISTRATION OF MILITARY JUSTICE.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7571) to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the matter inserted by said Senate amendment; and also after the word "witness," in line 7, page 2, strike out the following:

"At the rate of 5 cents a mile from his place of residence to the place of trial and $1.50 for each day required for such travel shall be tendered him, and that after testifying he shall be paid at the same rate for returning and $1.50 per day while in attendance on the court-martial," and insert in lieu thereof: "And his mileage at the rates provided for witnesses in the United States district court for said State, Territory, or District shall be duly paid or tendered said witness."

THOMAS H. CARTER,
F. E. WARREN,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

R. WAYNE PARKER,
JOHN J. ESCH,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

DISPOSITION OF REAL ESTATE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of bill (S. 6061) to authorize the supreme court of the District of Columbia to decree the sale or lease of real estate in certain cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him, which will be read in full for the information of the Senate, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases when one or more persons is or are entitled to an estate for life or years, or to an estate tail, fee simple, conditional, base, or qualified fee, or any particular limited or conditional estate in lands, and any person or persons is or are entitled to a remainder or remainders, vested or contingent, or an executory devise or devises, or any other interest vested or contingent in the same land, on application of any of the parties in interest a court of equity may, if all the parties in being are parties to the proceeding, decree a sale or lease thereof, if it shall appear to be advantageous to the parties concerned, and shall direct the investment of the proceeds of sale or the limitations of the reversion and rent, as the case may be, so as to inure in like manner as by the original grant to the use of the same parties who would be entitled to the land sold or leased; and all such decrees, if all persons or parties who would be entitled if the contingency had happened at the date of the decree, shall bind all persons, whether in being or not, who claim or may claim any interest in said land under any of the parties to said decree, or under any person from whom any of the parties to such decree claim, or from or under or by the original deed or will by which such particular, limited, or conditional estates, with remainders or executory devises, were created.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to know by what committee that bill is reported?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PETTUS. I object to the bill, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTIN. I am sure if the Senator understood the bill he would not object. It is copied from the Maryland statute——

Mr. PETTUS. I understand the bill perfectly. It cuts off the estate of a man who is not born. That is what the bill does, and I object to it.

Mr. MARTIN. I will state to the Senator that it is a copy of the Maryland statute, and that similar statutes are in force in almost every State of the Union. There are quite a number of titles in the District of Columbia that are now involved in trouble because of the omission in the statutes to make such provision as is made in every State of the Union. The bill has been carefully examined, and I am sure it does no injustice to any right whatever. It protects the rights of the unborn remainder-man.

Mr. PETTUS. It takes the land and converts it into money. That is the way it preserves the estate.

Mr. CHANDLER. The estate is converted into money, but where does the money go?

Mr. MARTIN. The money goes into court, and the court takes charge of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of the bill is objected to, and it is not before the Senate.

CHARLES M. KENNERLY.

Mr. TURLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5220) for the relief of Charles M. Kennerly.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Charles M. Kennerly, of Henry County, Tenn., $600, in full for property taken or seized by United States officers, belonging to Charles M. Kennerly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 5715) granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. VEST. Is it a corporation of the District?

Mr. HOAR. It is. An amendment to that end is to be inserted by direction of the committee.

Mr. VEST. Of this District?

Mr. HOAR. It is.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in the list of those constituting the General Federation of Women's Clubs, page 1, section 1, line 2, to strike out "Mrs. Charlotte Emerson Brown, New Jersey (deceased);" in line 8 to strike out "Henry" and insert "Ellen," so as to read "Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin, Illinois;" and in line 14 to strike out "Mary E. Mumford."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 18, before the word "by," to insert "of the District of Columbia;" so as to read:

Are hereby created a body corporate and politic, of the District of Columbia, by the name, style, and title of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and by that name, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 3, line 14, after the word "pleasure," to strike out "provided the same shall not conflict with any law of the United States or any State in which said corporation may do business;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That said corporation shall have a constitution, and may adopt and make by-laws for the admission and qualifications of members, the management of its property, and the regulation of its affairs, and shall have the power to amend said constitution and by-laws at pleasure. Said corporation shall have its headquarters at Washington, in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 4 in the following words:

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act contained shall authorize said corporation to exercise the corporate powers hereby conferred or to do its business in such a manner as to conflict with the laws of any of the several States in which said corporation may be engaged.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 4 the following:

SEC. 4. That the said corporation shall annually report proceedings to the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. HOAR. The committee authorize me to withdraw the amendment providing for sending reports to the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTUS. This is a corporation to live forever, and I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that its capital should be limited.

Mr. HOAR. It is limited so as not to exceed $200,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES KELLY.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7760) for the relief of James Kelly.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That James Kelly shall be held and considered to have been mustered into the military service of the United States as a member of Company E, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers, on the 15th day of December, 1862, as a substitute for and in the place of Joseph V. Swearingen, and to have been honorably discharged as a member of said company and regiment on the 1st day of August, 1864, and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the records of said company and regiment accordingly, and to issue to the said Kelly a certificate of honorable discharge as of the said 1st day of August, 1864: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM RYAN AND JOHN S. TAYLOR.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3819) for the relief of the widows and children of William Ryan and John S. Taylor, deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object if it is a brief bill and leads to no debate. Otherwise, I shall be obliged to object and call for the regular order.

Mr. KEAN. It appropriates no money.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It refers to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claims of the widows and children of William Ryan and John S. Taylor, deceased, for compensation for the death of said decedents, on or about the 1st day of September, 1896, while they were employed by the United States in connection with the construction of a battery at Finns Point, New Jersey.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire now to call up for consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate, and unanimous consent has been given that its first reading may be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

Mr. TILLMAN. May I have the indulgence of the Senator from Iowa for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say to the Senate now that if we can proceed with the appropriation bill for an hour or an hour and a half I shall not ask a night session for its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to appeal to the Senator from Iowa to allow a bill, which is very necessary in some parts of the country and which will not take three minutes, to be taken up as other bills have been. It is a bill simply to allow deputy clerks to administer oaths.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts has already passed one special bill.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is in charge of the bill. I am merely making the request as chairman of the Judiciary Committee. It is interesting wherever there is a deputy clerk, and it will not take two minutes. It is only three lines long.

Mr. ALLISON. On the appeal of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Georgia as well, I will yield to the passage of the bill to be called up by the Senator from Georgia, and also to a bill which the Senator from South Carolina desires to have passed. Then I shall ask that the consideration of the appropriation bill be proceeded with.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me appeal to the Senator from Iowa to allow a bill of just about ten lines to be passed.

Mr. ALLISON. There will be ample time to pass all these bills. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not press his request now. I could not fail to yield to the appeal of the Senator from Massachusetts, who I understand is to be absent.

Mr. FORAKER. I will not consume any more time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will Senators allow the Chair as a Senator to suggest that when the appropriation bills are all in conference there will be quite a number of hours, ordinarily twenty-four hours, when these bills can be taken up?

Mr. ALLISON. There will be hours each day from now until the close of the session when there will be ample opportunity for these brief bills to be considered.

Mr. TILLMAN. Under these circumstances I will give way.

Mr. ALLISON. Thank you, sir. I will see that the Senator has an opportunity to call up his bill.

Mr. HOAR. For the convenience of the Senate generally, I wish to have the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations announce what is his desire as to a night session, or as to the length of the session this afternoon. It will be to the convenience of all Senators to know now, if the Senator can tell us.

Mr. ALLISON. If we can in any reasonable time reach the sundry civil bill, I shall ask to have it considered for an hour or an hour and a half, and then I will move that the Senate adjourn.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13803) to amend section 19 of chapter 252, Twenty-ninth Statutes at Large, approved May 28, 1896.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE MOUNTAIN APACHE RESERVATION.

Mr. THURSTON. I desire to call up for consideration the conference report on House bill 10899.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the report indicated by the Senator from Nebraska, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Conference report on the bill (H. R. 10899) to restore to the public domain a small tract of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report has been printed in the RECORD, and the question is on agreeing to it.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 13843) to amend section 7 of "An act to establish circuit courts of appeal and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by act approved February 18, 1895, and further amended by act approved June 6, 1900, was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. TELLER, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14018) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say to Senators that should any controverted question arise upon amendments I will allow the amendments to be passed over until to-morrow.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 22, to insert:

For post-office at Butte, Mont.: For completion of building under present limit, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 3, after line 11, to insert:

For rental of quarters at Cleveland, Ohio: For rental of temporary quarters for six months ending June 30, 1902, for the accommodation of Government officials, and for moving furniture, fixtures, safes, and other Government property, and other contingent expenses incidental to such removal, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 24, to insert:

For buildings on Ellis Island, and work in connection with said island necessary to properly complete the immigrant station, $175,000, to be paid from the immigrant fund, which sum is hereby transferred to the appropriation for immigrant station at Ellis Island, New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 3, after the word "post-office," to insert "and court-house;" so as to make the clause read:

For post-office and court-house at Joplin, Mo.: For completion of building under present limit, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert "for boarding vessel, $50,000; in all, $62,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Quarantine stations: For quarantine station, Reedy Island, Delaware River: For reclamation of ground and additional quarters, $12,000; for boarding vessel, $50,000; in all, $62,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 1, after the word "station," to strike out "For boarding vessel, $40,000," and insert "The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to furnish for duty as a boarding vessel at Port Townsend quarantine station a suitable vessel for said service from the list of purchased vessels now in the Navy Department;" so as to make the clause read:

For Port Townsend quarantine station: The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to furnish for duty as a boarding vessel at Port Townsend quarantine station a suitable vessel for said service from the list of purchased vessels now in the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 22, to insert:

Tender for the engineer of the Seventh light-house district: For constructing, equipping, and outfitting, complete for service, a new steam tender for construction and repair service in the Seventh light-house district, $85,000. And the Light-House Board is authorized to employ temporarily at Washington not exceeding three draftsmen, to be paid at current rates, to prepare the plans for the tenders for which appropriations are made by this act; such draftsmen to be paid from and equitably charged to the appropriations for building said vessels; such employment to cease and determine on or before the date when, the plans for such vessels being finished, proposals for building said vessels are invited by advertisement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 13, to insert:

Steamer for Mobile Ship Channel: For the construction of a small steel steamer to attend lights and for other service in Mobile Ship Channel and other places in the Eighth light-house district, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 17, to insert:

Tender for the inspector Ninth light-house district: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the construction of a steam tender for buoyage, supply, and inspection, heretofore authorized for the Ninth light-house district, at a total cost not exceeding $115,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 23, to insert:

Tender for the engineer Ninth light-house district: The total cost of said tender, under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor, shall not exceed $115,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 6, to insert:

Fort Winfield Scott fog signal, California: To establish on Fort Winfield Scott, Fort Point, California, a fog signal, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 9, to insert:

Point Dume, California: For the establishment of a light and fog-signal station provided for by the act approved February 20, 1901, $63,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 13, to insert:

Tender for the Tenth light-house district: For constructing, equipping, and outfitting, complete for service, a new steam tender for buoyage, supply, and inspection in the Tenth light-house district, $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 22, to insert:

Relief light vessel for the Twelfth and Thirteenth light-house districts (Pacific coast): For constructing, equipping, and outfitting, complete for service, a first-class steam light vessel, with steam fog signal; and the Light-House Board is authorized to employ temporarily at Washington three draftsmen, to be paid at current rates, to prepare the plans for the light-house vessel for which appropriation may be made; such draftsmen to be paid from the appropriation for building said vessel; such employment to cease and determine on or before the date when, the plans for such vessel being finished, proposals for building said vessel are invited by advertisement, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead of "Light-House Establishment," on page 18, after line 16, to insert:

Maintenance of lights on channels of Great Lakes: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury, under the supervision of the Light-House Board, by contract or otherwise, to maintain lights necessary for the safe navigation of those channels in the connecting waterways of the Great Lakes which have been constructed or artifically improved by the Government of the United States, where the same can not properly be lighted from the American side, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 10, after the word "hundred," to strike out "and fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the establishment of additional light-house and fog-signal stations in Alaskan waters at an additional cost of $250,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Light-house and fog-signal stations in Alaskan waters: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to continue to establish, under the direction and supervision of the Light House Board, light-house and fog-signal stations in Alaskan waters, $100,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the establishment of additional light-house and fog-signal stations in Alaskan waters at an additional cost of $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Revenue-Cutter Service," on page 24, after line 13, to insert:

For the construction, or purchase, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, of a vessel to be used and equipped as a revenue cutter of the third class for service on the St. Marys River, Michigan, for the purpose of protecting the revenue and enforcing the rules of navigation on said river, $37,500; and the total cost of said vessel, either by purchase or under a contract, which is hereby authorized therefor, shall not exceed $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 22, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase or build a suitable vessel to be used as a revenue cutter of the third class at Boston, Mass., as provided in the act approved February 4, 1901, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Engraving and printing," on page 30, line 7, before the word "And," to strike out "In all, for field expenses, $250,000;" and in line 14, after the word "reimbursed," to insert "in all, for field expenses, $250,000;" so as to make the clause read:

And hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to purchase, from the appropriation for the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, provisions, clothing, and small stores for the enlisted men, and food supplies for field parties working in remote localities, such provisions, clothing, small stores, and food supplies to be sold to the employees of said Survey and the appropriation reimbursed; in all, for field expenses, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 4, before the word "aids," to strike out "twenty-three" and insert "eight;" and in line 6, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twenty-seven thousand two" and insert "sixteen thousand four;" so as to make the clause read:

For 8 aids, at $720 each; in all, $116,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Under Smithsonian Institution," on page 36, line 21, after the word "dollars," to insert:

That the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution is directed to report to Congress on the first day of the next regular session an entire account of all appropriations heretofore expended by the Astrophysical Observatory, what results have been reached, and what is the present condition of the work of said observatory.

So as to make the clause read:

Astrophysical Observatory: For maintenance of Astrophysical Observatory, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including salaries of assistants, the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, apparatus, printing and publishing results of researches, not exceeding 1,500 copies, repairs and alterations of buildings, and miscellaneous expenses, $12,000. That the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution is directed to report to Congress on the first day of the next regular session an entire account of all appropriations heretofore expended by the Astrophysical Observatory, what results have been reached, and what is the present condition of the work of said observatory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 9, after the word "thousand," to strike out "and forty" and insert "four hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of workshops and temporary storage quarters for the National Museum, $4,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Fish Commission," on page 48, after line 7, to insert:

Green Lake (Maine) Station: For the construction of additional ponds and procurement of increased water supply; for building railway and boathouse for steamer Senator, and for repairs to that vessel; for extension of wharf, repair of main flume, and construction of road from station to county road, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 11, page 49.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 49, line 11, I move to strike out "six" and insert "eight," before "thousand;" so as to make the paragraph read:

For the purchase of additional land and water rights and construction of additional ponds at the San Marcos, Tex., station, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 49, after line 14, to insert:

For the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Utah, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 19, to insert:

For the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Idaho, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 50, to insert:

For constructing and equipping a lobster hatchery upon the coast of Maine, including the purchase of land and water rights, authorized by the act approved February 4, 1901, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Miscellaneous objects under the Treasury Department," page 52, line 4, to strike out "one hundred and ninety-two thousand one hundred and five" and insert "two hundred and twenty-three thousand nine hundred and fifty-five;" and in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-seven thousand five hundred and thirty-five" and insert "seventy-eight thousand three hundred and eighty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For payment of the public debt of the Republic of Hawaii lawfully existing at the date of the passage of said resolution, $3,255,429.69; for payment of interest accruing thereon after June 15, 1900, the date on which the act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii went into effect, until paid, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $223,955.48; for payment of commissions and all other expenses incurred in carrying into effect the terms of said resolution, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $20,000; in all, $3,478,385.17, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-five thousand" and insert "eighty-six thousand two hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Pay of assistant custodians and janitors: For pay of assistant custodians and janitors, including all personal services in connection with the care of all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department outside of the District of Columbia, $1,086,200; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 21, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish food, fuel, and clothing to the native inhabitants on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, Alaska, $19,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 22, after the word "compensation," to strike out "and $1,000 per annum shall be paid to the Commissioner-General of Immigration as additional compensation;" so as to make the clause read:

Enforcement of the Chinese exclusion act: To prevent unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, and for expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, and for enforcing the provisions of the act approved May 5, 1892, entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States," $200,000, of which sum $1,000 per annum shall be paid to the collector of customs at Port Townsend as additional compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-four thousand two hundred and fifty" and insert "thirty-seven thousand five hundred and thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the Capitol: For work at Capitol, and for general repairs thereof, including wages of mechanics and laborers, and not exceeding $50 for the purchase of technical and necessary books, $37,530.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 15, to strike out:

For re-covering with copper the roof of the central portion of the Capitol, $18,200, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 18, to insert:

For reconstructing and fireproofing the roof of the central portion of the Capitol building, including the restoration in fireproof construction of the ceilings of the Supreme Court room and Statuary Hall; for material and labor and necessary expenses incident thereto, $153,500, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 7, to insert:

For necessary repairs and improvements of the steam heating and ventilating apparatus in the Senate wing of the Capitol, including the Supreme Court, legislative bell service, and elevators, under the supervision of the Architect of the Capitol, $2,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 12, to insert:

For repairs to the elevator in the Maltby Building, including new steel guides, car platform, and cage and safety devices, and for labor and material, $1,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 24, after the word "Representatives," to strike out "and;" in the same line, after the word "rooms," to insert "and the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms;" and on page 66, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty-eight" and insert "sixty-one;" so as to make the clause read:

For refurnishing the Hall of the House of Representatives, the Speaker's rooms, and the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and for furniture for the new committee rooms in the old library portion of the building, $61,000, to be immediately available and to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 10, to insert:

The Clerk of the House of Representatives, on written notice from any member of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-sixth Congress that he desires to purchase any one of the desks now used in the House, shall withhold such desk from public sale, and shall deliver the same to such member on his payment of an amount equal to the average price received at public sale for the remaining desks, and all money so received shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, and allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares.

So as to make the clause read:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp lands and swamp-land indemnity: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, $125,000: Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, and allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Protection and administration of forest reserves," on page 68, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That forestry agents, superintendents, and supervisors, and other persons employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior wholly with reference to their fitness and without regard for their political affiliations, and allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 24, after the word "game," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That any person residing within the limits of any forest reservation in Colorado, Montana, or Wyoming, or any person who did reside therein at the time of its creation, or whose live stock had ranged within the area covered by such reservation prior to its creation and still ranges within its limits, shall be permitted to graze live stock continuously within the limits of such reservation upon the condition that he will at all times use his best efforts to prevent the starting and spread of forest fires in the locality in which his stock ranges.

Mr. McCOMAS. Before that amendment is agreed to, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the language of the amendment. It gives, by act of Congress, to individuals whose live stock has ranged within the area covered by such reservation, permission to graze live stock continuously within the limits of such reservation, etc.

Why not make that simply permissive from year to year? It is a very important right to give to people such an estate in the public lands. The committee does not intend that, I presume, but the language here does so all the same.

Mr. TELLER. I do not hear what the Senator from Maryland says, and I should like to hear him, because this is a very important subject.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will repeat what I tried to say. There is in the language of this amendment an estate for life given to that class of persons who reside in a certain forest reservation, or those who did reside there at the time of the creation of a certain forest reservation. The language as to them is:

Shall be permitted to graze live stock continuously within the limits of such reservation upon the condition that he will at all times use his best efforts to prevent the starting and spread of forest fires, etc.

Of course that is a condition which merely indicates a purpose that the man who might graze cattle there might perhaps be useful in case of forest fires; but it might happen that he would be the cause of starting the fires. After the words "graze live stock" the word "continuously," it seems to me, should be stricken out.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will wait until he knows something about the question——

Mr. McCOMAS. I know something about the meaning of the word "continuously."

Mr. TELLER. Very well; but the Senator does not know why that language was put in the bill.

Mr. McCOMAS. No.

Mr. TELLER. The Department has made the regulation that these cattle might be grazed on the reservation for nine months and be taken off in winter. This is to permit them to graze there continuously. I want to say to the Senator that it creates no estate whatever. It is simply a statute that might be repealed to-morrow or the next day or any other day. We are only ceding to the people there what the United States has given to its settlers all over the country since we have had any public-land laws.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then the Senator means that these people are to be permitted to graze cattle there twelve months instead of nine months?

Mr. TELLER. That is all it means.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator could accomplish his purpose by using the phrase "throughout the year."

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to the Senator's amendment to insert the words "throughout the year." That is the intention.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not put in a proviso that this section shall not give any vested or permanent rights?

Mr. TELLER. It does not give any such rights whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not put such a proviso in, though?

Mr. TELLER. It is not worth while for us to tie it up in that way.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask the chairman of the committee to agree to insert, after the name "Montana," the name "Idaho."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho accepted by the committee?

Mr. TELLER. I understood that that was to be done in committee, if the Senator from Idaho wanted it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idado [Mr. SHOUP].

The SECRETARY. On page 68, line 25, after the word "Montana," it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by inserting "Idaho."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I want to know whether the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] has been adopted?

Mr. McCOMAS. I understand that it was accepted by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment may be adopted; I have no objection.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then I move the amendment.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to have the provision read as it now stands, so that we may understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment as it is proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment on page 69 by striking out the word "continuously," before the word "within," in line 4, and inserting the words "throughout the year;" so that the amendment, if adopted, would read:

Provided further, That any person residing within the limits of any forest reservation in Colorado, Montana, Idaho, or Wyoming, or any person who did reside therein at the time of its creation, or whose live stock had ranged within the area covered by such reservation prior to its creation and still ranges within its limits, shall be permitted to graze live stock throughout the year within the limits of such reservation upon the condition that he will at all times use his best efforts to prevent the starting and spread of forest fires in the locality in which his stock ranges.

Mr. RAWLINS. I would ask the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill if he will not accept an amendment so as to include Utah? I think the same reason would apply to Utah as to the other States included in the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. The same reason exactly.

Mr. HEITFELD. Why not make it universal?

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] that I think the word "continuously," in line 4, should not be stricken out, but the words "throughout the year" inserted after the word "continuously." That will show that it is to continue through the year.

Mr. McCOMAS. That will answer the same purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I suggest that after the word "continuously," in line 4, on page 69, there be inserted the words "throughout the year." I move that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah moved an amendment to insert in line 25, after the word "Idaho," the word "Utah." The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me at this point to offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection the amendment will be received, and ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know what was done with the amendment in regard to forest reservations? I wish that to go over. I may want to discuss that question somewhat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has already been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from South Dakota desires to discuss that amendment, it may be passed over until to-morrow.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to have it passed over until to-morrow. I may not then want to discuss it, but I want time to examine it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection the vote by which the amendment as amended was agreed to will be regarded as reconsidered, and the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Surveying the public lands," on page 70, line 24, after the word "lines," to insert "to be immediately available and to continue available until expended;" on page 71, line 12, after the word "agriculture," to insert "lines of reservations;" on page 72, line 19, after the word "select," to insert "at such compensation and such per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $3, while engaged in field examinations, as he may prescribe;" and on page 73, line 2, after the word "making," to insert "by such competent surveyors such;" so as to make the clause read:

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, $325,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines, to be immediately available and to continue available until expended: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given, first, in favor of surveying townships occupied, in whole or in part, by actual setters and of lands granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, and the acts approved July 3 and July 10, 1890, and, second, to surveying under such other acts as provide for land grants to the several States, except railroad land grants and such indemnity lands as the several States may be entitled to in lieu of lands granted them for educational and other purposes which may have been sold or included in some reservation or otherwise disposed of, and other surveys shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture, lines of reservations, and lands within boundaries of forest reservations, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow, for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines, and in cases of exceptional difficulties in the surveys, where the work can not be contracted for at these rates, compensation for surveys and resurveys may be allowed by the said Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, at rates not exceeding $18 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $15 for township, and $12 for section lines: Provided further, That in the States of California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, Wyoming, the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, and the district of Alaska, there may be allowed, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $25 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $23 for township, and $20 for section lines. The provisions of section 2411, Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing allowance for surveys in California and Oregon are hereby extended to all of the above-named States and Territories and district. And of the sum hereby appropriated there may be expended such an amount as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may deem necessary for examination of public surveys in the several surveying districts, by such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select, or by such competent surveyors as he may authorize the surveyor-general to select, at such compensation and such per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $3, while engaged in field examinations, as he may prescribe, in order to test the accuracy of the work in the field, and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors, and for examinations of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, and inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, and for making by such competent surveyors such fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 22, to insert:

For pay of a custodian of Fort Sherman abandoned military reservation, Idaho, $480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 74, to insert:

For survey of and marking, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the unsurveyed portions of the northern and western boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park, estimated at 60 miles, at not exceeding $50 per mile, $3,000, and for the examination of said survey in the field, $300; in all, $3,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 28, 1901.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills is hereby authorized to appoint one additional clerk to said committee for the remainder of the session, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $6 per day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if any additional clerk has yet been appointed?

Mr. BAKER. This is customary at the close of the session. Two years ago the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills had four additional clerks, while this will only make three.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

APPEALS IN CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13843) to amend section 7 of "An act to establish circuit courts of appeal and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by act approved February 18, 1895, and further amended by act approved June 6, 1900.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeal and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by act approved February 18, 1895, and again amended by act approved June 6, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That where, upon a hearing in equity in a district court or in a circuit court, or by a judge of a district court or of a circuit court in vacation, an injunction shall be granted or a receiver shall be appointed, or an injunction or receivership shall be continued, refused, or dissolved, or an application to dissolve an injunction or receivership shall be refused by an interlocutory order or decree, an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree granting an injunction or appointing a receiver, or continuing, refusing, dissolving, or refusing to dissolve an injunction or receivership, to the circuit court of appeal: Provided, That the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree, and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed, unless otherwise ordered by that court or by the appellate court, during the pendency of such appeal: And provided further, That the court below may, in its discretion, require, as a condition of the appeal, an additional bond."

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

With the following amendment recommended by the committee:

Insert after the word "decree," in line 6, page 2, the following:

"Whether an appeal in such cases from the final decree would be to the circuit court of appeals or to the Supreme Court."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if the bill has been considered by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It has been considered by the Judiciary Committee and comes before the House with practically a unanimous report. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] reserved the right to object; but no minority report has been filed. It is a lawyers' bill for the purpose of granting a right of appeal to either the plaintiff or the defendant in both injunction and receivership proceedings.

Mr. SULZER. I observe that the gentleman from Missouri is present, and gladly give way to him.

Mr. DE ARMOND. If I can have a few minutes on the bill, I shall have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri five minutes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] is one amending the law to provide for an appeal from orders or decrees refusing to grant an injunction or appoint a receiver.

The existing law does not provide for an appeal where there is a refusal by a judge in vacation or the court in term time to appoint a receiver or grant an injunction. In my judgment no right of appeal ought to be given from a decree refusing to appoint a receiver or grant an injunction for two reasons:

First. There is no limit upon the right to apply for a receiver or an injunction. There may be a refusal to-day and a new application to-morrow. So that the right of appeal is unnecessary to preserve anything to the party who has applied and whose application has been rejected. That is one point.

Second. If an appeal be allowed from an order or a decree made in term or in vacation, refusing to grant an injunction or to appoint a receiver, the effect in many instances, perhaps in most instances, will be the same as if the order appointing the receiver or granting the injunction had been made. In other words, with unlimited right to make fresh application or to renew the application at will, if this bill be passed it will enable the applicant to have in effect, without the responsibility and liability which attaches to the affirmative act, all that he would get, in many instances, from the appointment of the receiver or the granting of the injunction. The opposing party whose property or rights are involved often will be seriously affected by the pendency of an appeal from an order or decree refusing to appoint a receiver or grant an injunction, while, upon the other hand, the mutuality is lacking, because the party applying for a receiver or an injunction, as already stated, if refused to-day, can apply again to-morrow, and just as often as he pleases. For these reasons, stated briefly, I believed the bill ought not to pass. I think the law is better as it is than it would be if this bill were passed.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's logic is good so far as it goes. If the application for the appointment of a receiver should be denied upon the merits—that is, upon the facts presented—then the party could strengthen his case, amend his papers, and apply again, although there might not be opportunity for some little time.

But here is a case which ought to be provided for, and can not be provided for in any other way than by the passage of this bill. To illustrate—and I would like to hear what the gentleman may have to say in reply to this suggestion—to illustrate, I go to the court or judge with a set of papers, asking for the appointment of a receiver. The judge looks over the papers and denies my application, not upon the facts set forth, but upon some legal proposition—some question of law. Now, I might apply again and again and again, but I can not change the facts. The judge or the court—to whichever I may make application—denies my application upon legal propositions. Now, I am without remedy unless I can have an appeal and have the question of law passed upon by the appellate court and my legal right to a receiver or an injunction determined.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. DE ARMOND. In reference to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, I would say, first, that this bill does not make the discrimination which he makes in what he has just suggested; and, next, that applications for the appointment of receivers or for injunctions are usually, almost invariably, granted or refused upon the judgment of the court or the judge in chambers upon the facts presented. The power to appoint a receiver and the power to grant an injunction are both undoubted. Ordinarily an application fails or is sustained according to the judgment of the judge in vacation or of the court in term time as to the sufficiency or insufficiency of the allegation of fact contained in the application.

Mr. SULZER. Is it not a fact that the object of this bill is to give the United States district and circuit judges additional power regarding injunctions and receiverships?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, I do not know whether it would have especially that effect, but it would have the effect of permitting a person to appeal when an appeal is not necessary for his protection but prejudicial to his adversary, where, though he give bond, the liability can be only nominal and theoretical. This bill will give the effect of an order or decree, though such order or decree be denied, and an affirmance by the higher court will entail no responsibility for substantial damages, however great in fact the damages may be. At least that is my opinion, and for these reasons I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, this bill has received the indorsement of the National Bar Association. It merely seeks to place the plaintiff and the defendant upon an equality in matters of appeal. There is no additional power granted the circuit or district courts, and the same method of procedure in appeals will obtain in this particular as obtains at present in other cases. Proper safeguards are provided in the measure requiring additional bonds, and there is nothing further involved than the privilege of appeal to either party upon meeting the requirements of the court in the matter of the bond.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] whether the liability upon a bond given upon an appeal from a refusal to appoint a receiver or to grant an injunction would not be theoretic and nominal rather than substantial?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I can conceive no difference in the liability on the bond as between the plaintiff and the defendant.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Let me suggest this: Suppose the court refuses an injunction; the party applying for it appeals and gives bond, and the action of the court is sustained by the higher court. Now, what is the measure of liability? It will not do to go into court suing upon the bond and say, "That is not a substantial ground of damage," although it may be substantial in fact. It will not do to plead that the adverse party has suffered to the same extent or has suffered to a considerable extent on account of the appeal. The only liability will be the liability for the costs involved in the appeal. That is my judgment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The original act did not grant the privilege of appeal to the plaintiff. By amendment a few years subsequent to the enactment of that law there was accorded to either party an equity of appeal. A still further amendment to this act undertook to give the same privilege in proceedings under receiverships as in injunctions; but—evidently by an inadvertence—the original act was examined, and not the act as subsequently amended, and the right of appeal to the plaintiff, not only in receiverships but in injunction proceedings as well, was withdrawn from the law. This bill seeks to remedy both those defects. As I say, it has been drawn under the recommendation of the National Bar Association, and meets practically the unanimous support of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The committee recommends two amendments, one of which does not appear in the printed bill, but which I shall ask the House to pass, providing that the bill, instead of going into effect upon its passage, shall not take effect until July 1, 1901, thus foreclosing the privilege of appeal in any judgment in such cases as may have been made within the last few months prior to the act taking effect. That is to say, this right of appeal will not exist till after July 1, 1901.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. What will be the effect of this bill in a case where injunctions have heretofore been refused or receivers have been denied?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The bill will not go into effect until the 1st day of July, 1901.

Mr. LACEY. That does not answer the question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think it will not affect them unless the case has been continued or is pending after the 1st of July, 1901.

Mr. LACEY. You can take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in two years. Now, this act goes into effect on the 1st of July. Is this broad enough that in a case where an injunction has been refused at any time within two years from the 1st of July it can be appealed?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think not.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana this question: This bill provides for appeals from interlocutory orders, does it not?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Suppose an interlocutory order granting an injunction, a preliminary order granting an injunction, is obtained. You know that that is done. The court will grant a preliminary order and will subsequently have a hearing, and then may either continue the injunction or deny it. Now, does this bill provide for a case where an appeal is taken in such cases as that? Suppose a case of this kind: I get a preliminary order of injunction from the court, a temporary injunction; an order is then issued to the other side to show cause why it should not be made permanent. A hearing is had, and the court decides that its award of injunction, a temporary injunction, was improperly made, and decides not to make it permanent. Now, an appeal is taken from that order, and bond is given. Does that continue the injunction? Has that been provided for in this bill?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Ought there not to be a provision in this bill providing that such a bond as that shall not continue an injunction?

Mr. RAY of New York. This bill does not continue an injunction when denied and an appeal is taken. It does not interfere with the effect of the decision at all. This bill leaves the law as it is except to provide for a review on appeal. It provides that in case the judge or court refuses an injunction or a receiver the party who applies may appeal in order that he may have the question of his legal right to the remedy asked passed upon by the appellate court; and unless this bill becomes a law, it is a practical denial of justice to some litigants who seek to obtain injunctions, etc., because if the judge happens to take an erroneous view of the law, then they are denied justice and can not have the legal proposition reviewed.

Now, it is always fair and just that when the court below, the single judge, passes upon a question of law, which decision must be final and decisive unless reversed, that the defendent party have a hearing in the appellate court upon that question of law. It is familiar to all lawyers that the appellate court does not consider the question of evidence and of fact and reverse or affirm because it does not exactly agree with the lower court on the facts. It usually regards the facts found by the court below as conclusive on it. But when a party applies to the court for a receiver or an injunction and the judge passes upon the matter if, as a question of law, the facts being undisputed, he ought to have the right to have the decision reviewed in the appellate court if it be against him.

Mr. MORRIS. Granted.

Mr. RAY of New York. That being the forum, that settles that question of law.

Mr. MORRIS. I agree with the gentleman from New York upon that; but would ask, when an order has been entered by the court refusing to make permanent the injuction, the temporary injunction—in other words dissolving the temporary injunction—and an appeal has been taken from that order and bond given, would that have the effect of continuing the temporary injunction until the appeal could be heard?

Mr. RAY of New York. It would not, because until the appellate court had decided that there ought to be an injunction, the injunction would not be in force, the judge below in refusing to continue it not making provision that it should be in force until the determination of the court of appeals on the giving of bond to pay all damages that might occur. The court or judge, refusing to make the order permanent, might possibly continue it until the determination of this appellate court.

Mr. MORRIS. Then there is no right of stay on the order of the court dissolving the temporary injunction?

Mr. RAY of New York. If I understand you, this is your point: If the plaintiff applies for an injunction and a receivership, and obtains that order——

Mr. MULLER. A temporary injunction.

Mr. RAY of New York. A temporary injunction——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey calls up a conference report.

MILITARY JUSTICE.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the House conferees be read instead of the report.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be reported by its title first.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7571) to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes.

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7571) to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said Senate amendment, and also after the word "witness" in line 7, page 2, strike out the following:

"At the rate of 5 cents a mile from his place of residence to the place of trial and $1.50 for each day required for such travel, shall be tendered him, and that after testifying he shall be paid at the same rate for returning and $1.50 per day while in attendance on the court-martial."

And insert in lieu thereof:

"And his mileage at the rates provided for witnesses in the United States district court for said State, Territory, or District shall be duly paid or tendered said witness."

RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
JOHN J. ESCH,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOS. H. CARTER,
F. E. WARREN,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Statement as to the conference report on H. R. 7571, being "A bill to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes."

The House bill provided that witnesses on courts-martial should be paid fees therein named, which are those ordinarily allowed witnesses in the United States district courts. The Senate amendment added a proviso for higher fees in certain States and Territories where they are allowed by special statute.

The conference report strikes out both the Senate amendment and the fixed rates of the House bill, and provides for payment to a witness of the same fees as he would receive in the district court of the same district. This was the intention of both Houses.

Respectfully submitted.

RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
JOHN J. ESCH,
JAMES HAY,
House Conferees.

FEBRUARY 26, 1901.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reading of the report will be dispensed with. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I desire the gentleman from New Jersey briefly to state to the House the amendment which the Senate put in the bill.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The House provided that witnesses at courts-martial should be paid 5 cents a mile and a dollar and fifty cents a day. Those are the ordinary fees in the United States district court. The Senate, knowing that certain of the Western Territories pay higher fees, provided higher fees for those Territories.

As there might be changes in these fees from time to time, we thought it better not to stick to those details, but simply strike them out and provide that the witnesses at courts-martial should be paid the same fees and mileage as paid to witnesses of the district courts of the same district. That was in the statement signed by the conferees, if the gentleman had heard it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The question was taken, and the report was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I submit the conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to reserve all points of order on the report.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of amendment numbered 2, lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, page 1, of said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof: "The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the cost of establishing and maintaining, as a part of the postal service, the delivery of mail in cities, towns, and villages which are not free-delivery offices, and shall report to Congress as to the feasibility and best method thereof; and the Senate agree to the same."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of amendment numbered 3, lines 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, page 1, and lines 1, 2, and 3, page 2, of said amendment, and insert in lieu thereof: "The Postmaster-General is directed, if he has sufficient available information to enable him to do so, to report to Congress concerning the advisability of connecting a telegraph and telephone system with the postal service and the probable cost of the same;" and the Senate agree to the same.

GEO. W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

E. O. WOLCOTT,

MARION BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in the accompanying conference report on each of the Senate amendments, namely:

Amendment numbered 2: The House receded, with the following amendment: Strike out all of said amendment and insert the following: "The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the cost of establishing and maintaining as a part of the postal service the delivery of mail in cities, towns, and villages which are not free-delivery offices, and shall report to Congress as to the feasibility and best method thereof."

Amendment numbered 3: The House receded, with the following amendment: Strike out all of amendment numbered 3 and insert the following: "The Postmaster-General is directed, if he has sufficient available information to enable him to do so, to report to Congress concerning the advisability of connecting a telegraph and telephone system with the postal service and the probable cost of the same."

E. F. LOUD,
GEO. W. SMITH,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. LOUD. We have but two amendments upon which there has been an agreement finally reached which are legislation placed upon an appropriation bill by the Senate, and ultimately the House conferees had to give away on these two propositions, with such a modification of the same that I do not believe them to be dangerous. I do, however, believe that legislation of this character should not be placed upon an appropriation bill if either House should object to them. They could not have been placed upon this appropriation bill in the House. The amendment numbered 2 provides for the experiment in cities, towns, and villages that have not now free delivery to deliver mail through depositories or compartment boxes.

The House conferees think that even the modification that is made in here by agreement should not have been adopted, because if it means anything it does commit us to the adoption of free delivery in every city, town, and village in the United States that has not now free delivery. Of course, some gentlemen say, Why not? I assume that rural free delivery outside of cities, towns, and villages will cost the postal department $25,000,000 a year. I assume that delivery in the cities, towns, and villages will cost us at least $25,000,000 a year more. But, I say, the amendment has been so modified by striking out these boxes, which it seems somebody desired Congress to adopt, and yet it will be left to Congress to determine in the future whether we desire to embark in this character of delivery or not.

Amendment No. 3 committed Congress to the adoption of the postal-telegraph and postal-telephone system. Personally I have always been bitterly opposed and am to-day to the Government embarking in any more business enterprises than it has now. I think the example of the English Government in its experiment with the postal-telegraph system ought to be sufficient to cause Congress to halt before it even makes an intimation that it will embark in the postal-telegraph system. The English Government by reason of its form of government is much more competent to advantageously manage a postal-telegraph system than a government like ours. Since 1870 it has taken on the postal-telegraph system, returning a profit the first two years to the Government, but has now gotten so far in the line of deficit that it amounts to more than $3,000,000 each year. They have had a deficit since they took that system up of £7,235,000, in round numbers.

When I first came to Congress the postal-telegraph system seemed nearly ready to be adopted. We have heard nothing of it, I am glad to say, for four or five years. Unfortunately, the other body having, as they say, but a few hours to determine the many great questions, and rather than be compelled to listen to long speeches which might provoke an extra session, thought it was advisable to take the modified form of the amendment which we here provide. The form of the amendment is this:

> The Postmaster-General is directed, if he has sufficient available information to enable him to do so, to report to Congress concerning the advisability of connecting a telegraph and telephone system with the postal service and the probable cost thereof.

Now, the only objection to that is that the Postmaster-General may, in an unguarded moment, submit a cost of telegraphic and telephonic service which will be so far out of the way that it may possibly mislead Congress, because I assume that the Postmaster-General, without a very full investigation, could not determine within one or two hundred millions of dollars what the postal and telegraph system may cost. But we have faith in the Postmaster-General. We hope, and in that hope alone we trust, that he may report to Congress all that he can intelligently report—that he has no means of knowing anything about it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from California a question.

Mr. LOUD. What is it?

Mr. SULZER. Is this the final report of the conferees?

Mr. LOUD. It is.

Mr. SULZER. Is there any appropriation in the bill at the present time that provides for a continuance of the pneumatic-tube mail service in the city of New York?

Mr. LOUD. There is not. The Senate did not adopt that provision. The House did not provide for any pneumatic-tube service and neither did the Senate. Whatever may have been the desire, the conferees could not put anything of that kind into the bill.

Mr. SULZER. If this bill, then, becomes a law the pneumatic-tube service in New York City during the next fiscal year will have to be discontinued?

Mr. LOUD. I hope the officers of the Post-Office Department will so construe a plain law and not act in defiance of the mandate of Congress. The original contract was entered into without any warrant of law whatever.

Mr. SULZER. Then, sir, in this connection, as a Representative from the great city of New York, I desire to most emphatically protest against this unjust discrimination to that city, and I would like to have a few moments to state what the people of New York City think about it. It is an outrage.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the protest will be duly entered. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, as to the details of this report, just now made, of course it is impossible for the average member to have any knowledge. Two or three things suggested by the chairman of the committee deserve more than a passing notice, even at this late day of the session. One is his criticism of the practice, very prevalent, of putting general legislation upon appropriation bills.

Another is his criticism, somewhat modified, of the practice, so nearly universal, of the House conferees conceding to the Senate the right, or at least the power, to do the legislating for the Congress of the United States.

This putting of general legislation upon appropriation bills has grown out of two or three distinct, particular things. One, if I may be permitted to suggest it, is that in these latter days but little opportunity is given for the consideration, independently, in this body of matters of general legislation. A large number of them can not be considered at all; others can be considered only when O. K.'d by the supreme power in the House. The natural result is that persons desiring general legislation seek to avail themselves of the avenues of the general appropriation bills for the passage of such measures as they can get upon them. Then, after the bill is passed through the House, the work of legislation really begins. Then it is determined what the Senate will have as the law, and later on it is determined how soon or how late, with how much or how little delay, the conferees of the House will accede to the Senate demands. And then, later on, in the ordinary formula, comes the registering in the House, with some protest here and there against the Senatorial will; and the measure goes to the President for approval or rejection.

The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], in speaking of the purposes of the postal-telegraph and postal-telephone inquiry, has suggested that our Government is not so well adapted as the British Government to the inauguration and carrying forward of this system of postal telegraphy and postal telephony. If he regrets this fact, he ought to take some comfort out of the other fact that we are approaching as rapidly as possible, over the Constitution and every precedent, to conform our actions and mold and shape our Government after the English formula. If now we are not prepared to do these things as well as the English do, we are progressing Englishward with tremendous strides.

But without going into the details of this measure—and I am not going to discuss them—I have been of the belief that our Government could establish postal telegraphs and postal telephones; that the rates of service for the people would be made very much less, the service itself very much more valuable.

I shall be glad if the inquiry into these matters be made, and I hope the inquiry may be searching and the report intelligent and comprehensive. I believe that even if we should reverse the present process and move back toward the Republic of the fathers, or move forward in the way of the Republic of the fathers toward the mighty Republic of the future, instead of shaping our form of government as nearly as possible after the English model, still we might provide for the people by Government telephones and telegraphs and other utilities to meet the growing interests which our population and business demand.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply to that part of the chairman's remarks relating to Great Britain and its postal telegraph system. In Great Britain, as I understand, the Government rate for telegrams is just 1 cent a word, and the Government of Great Britain and practically every government of Europe has made the telegraph and the telephone a part of the postal system. To-day in the Dominion of Canada they are trying to arrange and create a surplus revenue sufficient to add the postal telegraph to the Dominion postal service.

They have added it in Australia; they have added it in New Zealand. The other day a correspondent of the New York Journal, who has recently been traveling in New Zealand, in a letter to his paper used this language:

> One of the pleasantest features of a railway ride in this country is witnessing the children flocking to the train in going to and returning from school. They get on the train as if they owned it, and no one asks them for tickets. They ride free of charge. Stations are provided at frequent intervals, and each one is a post-office and a savings bank as well as railway and express office, as the government conducts all these classes of business. Think of the saving in office expenses by the system, and you will be able to comprehend why the railroad fares and parcels post are so much cheaper here than in America. In spite of the great expense of the construction and equipment of railroads in this land of high wages and short hours, the railway passenger rate is only about three-fourths of the average price in the States, while the parcels post and telegraph rates are far cheaper.

And, sir, Frank Carpenter, the correspondent of the Evening Star of this city, writes to his paper along the same line, and it is shown that the telegraph rate in Australia and New Zealand is only 1 cent a word.

Now, suppose that Great Britain does have a deficit of $5,000,000 after saving the people $30,000,000 in telegraphing, it still leaves to the credit of the system $25,000,000. The telegraph system, the telephone system, the savings-bank system constitute some of the democratic features of the English Government. It seems that some of our friends run after the monarchical features and run away from the democratic and the people's features of the English Government.

Mr. LOUD. Does the gentleman assume that the telegraphic rates in England are cheap?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOUD. Well, what are they?

Mr. BELL. The telegraphic rates in England, according to statistics gathered by Senator Hill a few years ago, show the average rate to be 1 cent per word all over the island.

Mr. LOUD. The average rate is a shilling for 20 words, including the address and the signature; and it will generally be found that you have more words in your address and signature than in the body of your telegram.

Mr. BELL. Well, that report was made in the Senate; and that body a few years ago came very near adopting a similar system, or a system limiting the rate of telegraphing to 1 cent a word, and Australia and other governments have same rate.

Senator Hill, formerly the president of Brown University, an eminent scholar and a very rich man, came to the Senate from the State of Colorado; and so nearly did he succeed in passing the bill to which I have referred that the telegraph combinations poured the State of Colorado full of money in an effort to punish him for serving the people, and defeated for reelection one of the brightest men that ever graced the Senate of the United States and one of the most polished and educated gentlemen that ever occupied a place in either House of Congress.

If this is such a bad thing for the people, why is it that the people constantly clamor for it? Why do they clamor for its continuance in New Zealand, Great Britain, and other countries where the people control every branch of the government? Why are they clamoring for it in the Dominion of Canada, if it is so detrimental to the public interest of the mother country?

I have pointed out some of the benefits that the people are to enjoy from this system. For the sake of avoiding a little surplus of five or six million dollars, we are not to be driven from the adoption of a telegraphic rate of about one-fourth of what is charged by the private companies.

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I concur substantially in what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] has so well said. In my judgment it would be for the best interests of the great majority of the people of the United States if they had control, in connection with the post-offices and as a part of the Postal Department, of the telegraph and the telephone. I believe it would be in the interest of and a great saving to the people. I believe it would put an end to two great selfish monopolies, and would give the people of this country cheaper telephone rates and lower telegraph rates. I am unalterably opposed to all private monopolies. But more about this when I can get more time. Now, sir, in the few minutes allowed me by the gentleman from California I want to enter my most emphatic protest regarding the unjust discrimination contained in this bill against the great city of New York.

For several years the post-office authorities of the city of New York have used the pneumatic-tube service. That service has been a great success, has facilitated the carrying and the distribution of the mails, and has given great satisfaction to the people. It has been a great convenience to the merchants, and every association of business men, the boards of trade, the chamber of commerce, and in fact all the various chambers of industry, have petitioned Congress to continue the pneumatic-tube service. I have filed many of the petitions and resolutions. This bill has eliminated this desirable service, and the merchants and citizens of the city of New York are to be deprived of the service and compelled to waste and lose from five to twelve hours in every twenty-four in receiving and transmitting their mail. I protest against this outrage—this failure to live up to implied obligations.

The city of New York has the greatest post-office in this country—a post-office which pays, over and above expenses, a revenue to the Government every year of over $5,000,000. We have asked, and asked in vain, for a new post-office building in that city. We should have it. But this Congress will do nothing for New York City. The present old post-office building there is a disgrace and a menace to the health and lives of the people employed in the building. We must have a new post-office. We will get one, I trust, in the next Congress. But this pneumatic-tube service should not be discontinued. It should be now continued by an appropriation in this bill. I regret exceedingly that the Post-Office Committees of the House and the Senate, after adopting this service, propose now at this late day to discontinue it. It is wrong and a very shortsighted economical policy.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Does my friend know the cost to the Government for every mile of pneumatic-tube service laid down in New York City?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; I know. The figures are given in the report of the Post-Office Department; and with those figures before it, that Department recommended in the strongest terms the continuance of this service. In the hope of getting this relief I shall vote down this conference report.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CANNON. I shall occupy a few minutes—two or three or five.

Mr. SULZER. Take your own time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a remark in the shape of a protest against a system which is probably commenced in this bill. The bill provides that—

> The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to investigate the cost of establishing and maintaining as a part of the postal service the delivery of mails in cities, towns, and villages which are not free-delivery offices, and shall report to Congress the feasibility and best methods thereof.

Now, this provision starts a movement to have the free-delivery service in every city, town, and village in the United States. I do not believe it should have been started, even by inquiry.

Mr. KING. Does not my friend think we had better vote the report down?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from California in presenting this conference report protests against the provision; and I believe that if the House should see proper to reject this report, he could go again into conference and in sixty minutes could return with this provision stricken out. It is legislation; the Senate proposes it, and therefore if the House insists the Senate must recede under the universal rule.

Now, then, we have, in round numbers, 80,000 post-offices in the United States. I undertake to say at a rough estimate that there are at least 50,000 of these in cities, towns, or villages—and that is wonderfully broad, you can see—where the free-delivery service can not now be under law, where it could be made under law if provision was made for the service as contemplated, or at least to be inquired about in this provision. Now, what will that cost?—and I will give it under instead of over. Fifty thousand free-delivery offices, little boroughs, two to each one; and that is under instead of over. They have now, say, one at $1,000 a year, or they soon will have—$50,000,000. If I say two, it would be $100,000,000; and it would be more than two. Now, you know we have got to have officeholders enough to do the business of the Federal Government; but the officeholders of a great government like ours are numerous and strong enough to dominate frequently the political situation. And it is an open secret that the salaries of Federal officials—I do not mean the people occupying the great places, but the average salary of the average official—is one-third to one-half more than that of those who pay the taxes to pay the salaries.

Mr. KING. Put it at double.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says, "Put it at double." I think I could have done that, but I wanted to be conservative. You remember also that we have established, and it is substantially written in law, thirty days' leave of absence on full pay; soon to be written into law, now already in part, thirty days more sick leave. Who pays it? Seventy-six million of people who live by the sweat of their faces, and who get but very little over half the pay of the officials. Of course the people who want to hold these places are for it, and all who want to dispense the patronage will be for it; and I believe here and now that we had better call a halt before there is even an assault upon the beginning touching this matter, because when it once starts there will never be a stop put to it. It is like Mickey Free's father. You recollect he told Malloy that he had saved his last 40 shillings because his "riverince" had told him his father was caught between the door and the jamb. Says he: "If my father was caught between the door and the jamb, there is nothing between hell and Connaught that would kape him." [Laughter.] Start this thing and there is nothing that will keep it out.

Now, let me show it to you. Free rural delivery is in. I do not believe there is a man within the sound of my voice but what would, if he is honest, he would say—he must say—I am sorry. But it is started. Nothing can stop it. It is to add inside of the next decade, in my judgment, $50,000,000 to the postal expenditures. Why, they started at $400 for this carrier and he furnishes a buggy. It will be and ought to be a thousand, because it is more expensive, don't you see, than the city carrier.

Mr. SULZER. In a little while they will want automobiles.

Mr. CANNON. I merely want to refer to it. We have got it. I think now, if ever, is the time to give a quietus to this proposition, and so far as I am concerned, I stand ready to vote down this conference report upon that one provision, namely, universal free delivery carrier service in all the little boroughs, cities, and towns in the United States. If we do that, of course the Senate will have to recede, and not have any delay as to time. There is a motion to adopt the conference report. Now, then, if that motion is voted down——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will suspend until gentlemen take their seats.

Mr. BUTLER. A point of order. If the gentleman from Illinois would not turn his back to us we would appreciate very much what he says and would be pleased very much to hear what he has to say.

The SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think I am subject to just criticism. But it is pretty hard to talk in the House this morning, and I talked immediately to those in front because it seemed I had their attention.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman if this does not refer to house delivery and depositing mail in boxes? The gentleman spoke of rural free delivery?

Mr. CANNON. Merely by way of an illustration.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But this is urban and village delivery.

Mr. CANNON. And will give free village delivery. We are all in favor of free rural delivery. That has come, and nothing short of the power of Almighty God can put it out. I only spoke of that by way of illustration. This is a new thing, and I do not believe that the taxpayers of the United States are willing to commence a system of free delivery in every little village and borough in the United States, at a cost of a hundred million dollars a year, and, therefore, in that condition of affairs, so far as I am concerned, I will vote against the adoption of this conference report, knowing if it is not adopted that I do no violence to the feelings of the gentleman from California as expressed touching this matter.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-five minutes.

Mr. LOUD. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the conferees on this report that is contained on the Senate amendment. I believe in this item of the Senate amendment providing for an appropriation of $20,000 to make an experiment in delivery in towns, cities, and villages where they have not either boxes or compartments. We refused to accede to that, and also to committing us to the telegraph and telephone system as part of the system of the postal service. We disagreed, came back to the House, disagreed again, and the Senate has insisted on its amendment.

Now, what is the proposition before this House? I want to read to this House and let you see the small matter that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has made a great clamor about. Now, let me read it, and let every member of the House hear; and I am satisfied when it is read to you that there will be no objection to its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, here is the provision:

> The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the cost of establishing and maintaining, as part of the postal service, the delivery of mails in cities, towns, and villages which are not free-delivery offices, and shall report to Congress as to the feasibility and best methods thereof.

Now, under that amendment the Postmaster-General is directed in the interim to investigate, to acquire information, to get the facts, so that this House can act intelligently as to whether it is good or bad.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Is it not good policy, when we have come to the conclusion that we believe and are satisfied that the service ought not to be inaugurated in any event, to throttle it in its conception?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, in reply to that I say that it is the duty of this House to get full and complete information on all questions that may come before it. This does not carry one cent or one item of appropriation—not a dime, not a nickel, not a cent. This is to get at the facts in small towns and villages that have not now free delivery. It is to get information and statistics, to get the probable cost, and let the Postmaster-General make a full and complete report to this House.

If it is wrong, the House can throttle it; if it is right, the House can adopt it. Is there objection from any source to getting information without the expenditure of one dime or one cent? I want to say, in behalf of the House conferees, it was difficult to get the Senate conferees to even make the concession not to make an appropriation for the experiment of $20,000.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. Under the free-delivery system there is a double price paid for drop letters mailed in the town. What is the intention of this provision in that respect? Will the double-price rule apply to letters delivered under this system?

Mr. SWANSON. There is no intention of starting it, no method devised, not a cent of money appropriated. It simply directs the Postmaster-General to make an investigation and report to Congress on the feasibility or nonfeasibility of it and the cost of it. Nothing is done. This does not commit the Government to it, but is simply trying to acquire information as to the facts and the cost for the future judgment of this House in the matter.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman referred to the demand which is coming from the people of cities and villages and others who are to be benefited by the introduction of this system.

I will ask whether there has been a single demand from a single citizen, in any city, in any town, or any village in the United States; or whether it is not, as a matter of fact, a scheme that has been introduced through the Senate provision into this bill, originally on behalf of the patentee of a particular kind of a post-office compartment box? Whether the actuating motive of getting this into the bill is not for the benefit of the patentee of this box, and not at the request of any citizen?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know whether that is true or not, but I want to say that I never received any request from any village or town, because I have no town but that can receive free rural delivery. The Senate provision provided for boxes and compartments and we insisted that that should go out, and this was all the compromise we could get. It is nothing but an estimate; there is no appropriation, there is no committal of the Government to any such policy. It simply asks for information to be brought to us.

Any man would have a right by unanimous consent to request the Postmaster-General to give this information, and you would not object to it. If a man were to come in here and ask unanimous consent for the Postmaster-General to send him information as to the cost and feasibility and the advisability of this plan, it would go through by unanimous consent and he would send in his report, and that is all this is.

The second provision in regard to the telephone and telegraph system simply requires the Postmaster-General to report if he has sufficient available information to enable him so to do to Congress concerning the advisability and the cost of connecting the telephone and the telegraph system with the postal service of the United States.

There is not a man in this House that could not come in here and introduce a resolution asking information on both of these subjects, have it sent to a committee, and brought back here and passed unanimously. It simply is a request for information, without a dime or a cent or a nickel being appropriated or any committal whatever to the service.

I want to say that it was difficult for us to get these two resolutions cut down to the harmless terms in which they now are. I want to say for one that I can not see why anybody should object to full and complete information on this subject. That is all that this does; it simply directs information to be brought into this House.

Mr. LOUD. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad if this House would follow the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and vote down this conference report if there is any possibility of the Senate receding from these two provisions. Now, on their face they appear to be perfectly harmless, and yet we all know, those of us who have had experience in legislation in this body, that the danger in all this legislation is in the inception.

Mr. SWANSON. The only danger that can occur is the fact that the House may get such information as to enable it to adopt this service. I think that is a reflection on the intelligence and judgment of this House.

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman is entitled to his opinion, but I appeal to the sober sense and judgment and experience of this House as to whether this does not mark the beginning of a policy; and the mere form in which it is put in the bill, directing the investigation and report, to that extent at least, commits this House to the pursuance of that policy.

Now, we have had this experience in other years. I do not propose to say a word against rural free delivery; that is the way it started. I do not propose to say anything about the pneumatic-tube service; that is the way it started. I do not propose to say anything about the free-seed distribution, it was an experiment in the first place; it started as an investigation and experiment, and that is what this means.

As the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has shown, it will mean an expenditure of at least ten or twenty million dollars for additional carrier service, and, worse than all that, it means an addition to the immense army of officeholders which we now have in this country of a hundred thousand men.

Now, as to the other provision of this bill which constitutes a difference between the conferees—investigation into the postal telegraph and postal telephone features. As chairman of a subcommittee on the Post-Office Committee some two or three years ago, this subject came before me and I gave it very thorough investigation. I am satisfied that it would mean to this Government as much as $100,000,000 of expense to merely start the general telephone and general telegraph system in the United States. That means also an additional army of telephoners and telegraphers all over the country, subject to the same political influences and all having the same political power that the other employees of this Government have.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to any further increase in this direction. The gentleman from California has frankly said that the experiment in public telegraph and public telephone under the control of the Government has proved in England to be a failure, and that instead of its being a source of revenue to the Government it is an additional source of expense. Now, we are not ready for this, and especially are we not ready to act upon this suggestion in this appropriation bill. The gentleman says it will furnish us information. That information can be obtained by a resolution of the two Houses, not tacked on as a provision on an appropriation bill, which gives it a sanctity and standing which it ought not to have. Let the gentleman introduce a resolution for that purpose; let it be thoroughly considered in good time in all its phases; and then if we, after cool judgment and deliberation and information, desire it, it can be obtained. But let us as a body stand against yielding, as we have done on like appropriation bills, to the Senate in the way of putting in general legislation, which under our rule of the House we are absolutely prohibited from doing.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 14017. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution providing for the publication of the report of the board of management of the United States Government exhibit at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition; and

H. J. Res. 259. Joint resolution to regulate the distribution of public documents to the Library of Congress for its own use and for international exchange.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 64.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 4,000 extra copies of the atlas of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga battlefields, with such additional positions as have been identified, 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Secretary of War and the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park Commission.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 113.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives 6,000 copies of the Legislative History of the General Staff of the Army of the United States, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the War Department.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUD. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as one of the conferees on this bill I desire to say to the members of the House that the conferees have worked faithfully and earnestly in the conference with the Senate conferees in endeavoring to reach an agreement on the amendments which were submitted to the conference. There are but two, as has been stated, about which there seems to be any question in the minds of any of the members present. Those are the ones relating to free delivery in towns, cities, and villages which are not now entitled to free delivery under the law. As the Senate amended the bill which was passed in the House, your conferees would not agree to that at all. It was provided in that amendment attached in the Senate that—

For the experiment in cities, towns, and villages not now free-delivery offices of the delivery of mail through mail repositories or compartment boxes, including the cost of the boxes, repository, and salary of person to serve such box or repository, $20,000.

We considered that that would fasten upon us in the future the necessity of adopting this system of free delivery in cities, towns, and villages not now entitled to it, and the provision made an appropriation of $25,000 for carrying on that experiment. It may be in the future that free delivery will be extended to all such places; but your conferees did not believe and do not believe that the time has come when we should embark upon such a proposition, and we were wholly unwilling to appropriate any money for experiments in that direction. Hence, we insisted upon disagreeing with the Senate conferees and reported our disagreement to this House. Another conference was had, and in that conference we offered an amendment to the Senate amendment, which, after considerable discussion, was accepted by the Senate conferees. By that amendment we struck out the appropriation provided for in the Senate amendment and relieved it of that phase which would indicate to the committee that we intended to embark upon free delivery at this time or in the near future.

In the report which we have submitted to the House this morning we consider there is no danger whatever. As has been stated, this amendment as agreed to does not commit us in any manner—does not make any appropriation—but calls on the Postmaster-General for his views upon the subject. He is directed to furnish us such information as he may be able to furnish relative to the advisability or feasibility of embarking on that line of free delivery. I certainly hope that the House will not vote down this report of the conference committee on this proposition. It can not hurt us, and all of us know that legislation is made up to a considerable extent of concessions on the one side or the other. It is a matter of compromise, and your conferees having compromised with the Senate conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 2 and 3, we trust the report may be adopted. There is nothing in amendment No. 3 as agreed to by the conference committee which in any manner commits Congress to the adoption of a postal telegraph or telephone system in connection with the postal service. We only call on the Postmaster-General for such information as he may now have on the subject for the benefit or information of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GROSVENOR). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LOUD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER].

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will disagree to the Senate amendment, for the reason that, as I believe, the object is to side track rural free delivery. I think that what this House ought to do is to pass a bill giving free city delivery to all towns of not less than 5,000 population, or whose post-office receipts do not fall below $5,000, and then give free rural delivery to all incorporated towns of less population or receipts.

Mr. SWANSON. The proposition in this report simply asks an investigation and report.

Mr. LATIMER. But, in my judgment, the object of the provision is to establish substations with lock boxes. At those substations some one will have to be employed to distribute the mails in the boxes, and under that system only those who rent the boxes will be accommodated. There will be no postmaster at any such substation to deliver the mail. The mail will simply be deposited in those boxes that have been rented, and those who wish to enjoy the benefits of the system will have to rent boxes. I say that such a proposition is in the teeth of the system of free rural delivery or free city delivery.

Under the system of free rural delivery the carriers can leave the post-office in a small town by one street and return by another and thus accommodate the citizens without one dollar of extra expense to the Government. I hope the House will nonconcur in the Senate amendment and not waste this $20,000 appropriation.

Mr. HAY. Does not one of these amendments make a beginning for the Government ownership of telegraph and telephone lines?

Mr. LATIMER. I do not know anything about that subject. The object of the amendment which I have been discussing is, as I understand, to provide for the establishment of substations at which there will be lock boxes.

Mr. HAY. But there is another amendment in regard to telephones and telegraphs.

Mr. LATIMER. I hope the House will vote down the amendment that attempts to accomplish the object to which I have just stated my objections.

Mr. LOUD. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING].

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that our conferees have gained quite a diplomatic victory over the conferees of the Senate. They have pulled the teeth of the provision that the Senate had placed in this bill. I do not mean by this remark that the House should stop with what our diplomats have succeeded in doing. We ought to praise them for what they have done, and then we ought to go forward and do what is proper in the case by cutting out this thing entirely.

I do not believe that the chairman of the Post-Office Committee really at heart wants this conference report adopted, though as a loyal member of the conference committee he feels obliged to stand up for the report the best way he can. We know his opinions on this question. Why should we go forward and by the adoption of any amendment of this kind lay the foundation for future work in the same direction when we do not want that work begun at all? I believe the chairman of the Post-Office Committee of this House and other members of the committee will be delighted to see the House back them in their real opinions by voting down the conference report. Let the conferees go back to the Senate and tell them that the House will not accept this provision in even the modified shape in which it has now been put.

One other point. The gentleman from Virginia says that this provision will simply give us some information for us to act upon or not, as we may choose. I submit that when the Congress of the United States undertakes to investigate a project the adoption of which would involve the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars, it will not act upon such information as is called for here. It will not act upon the personal opinion of the Postmaster-General of this or any other Administration. It will insist upon some regularly constituted committee of this House or a commission of Congress making inquiry—a complete examination—into all the facts and details and bringing us here something that we can accept as final.

The opinion of one man, I do not care though he be the Postmaster-General of the United States, upon a question of this kind will not for purposes of future legislation be worth the paper on which it is printed. Then why should we call for such a report from the Postmaster-General? Why put upon him such useless work? Why throw such responsibility on him? The only purpose of our conferees in accepting this proposition was to pull the teeth of the more obnoxious measure which the Senate had ingrafted upon this bill. Our conferees have done good work. Now let us back up their work by voting down this report and sending them back into conference in full confidence that they can get better terms than they have already obtained.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

Mr. BROMWELL. A parliamentary inquiry. If the motion to concur should be voted down, will this bill then go back to conference?

The SPEAKER. That will depend upon whether the House asks a conference.

A MEMBER. It will go back to the Senate.

The question being taken upon agreeing to the report submitted by Mr. LOUD, it was rejected, there being—ayes 42, noes 78.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the two amendments, and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following managers on the part of the House: Mr. LOUD, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, and Mr. SWANSON.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriation for the support of the Army, in order to put it into conference.

Mr. KING. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Army appropriation bill, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. KING and Mr. HAY and others. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by several gentlemen; the request is denied. The unfinished business is the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

APPEALS FROM CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana is called out. He is on a special committee and has left the bill in my charge.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for order for a few moments. I want the House to fully understand this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not hear the motion of the gentleman.

Mr. RAY of New York. The bill was explained briefly by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I beg the gentleman's pardon; my attention had been diverted.

Mr. RAY of New York. I assure the House, in the first instance, that all that this bill does or attempts to do is to give an equality of benefits or rights to the plaintiffs and defendants. In the second place, it is demanded by and meets the unanimous approval of the Bar Association of the United States and the bar associations of many of the States. It can do no harm. It will permit an appeal where, upon the questions of law, decisions are made against plaintiffs seeking the remedy. Now, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] desires a little time, and I will ask, Mr. Speaker, how much time remains for the discussion of this bill?

The SPEAKER. Forty minutes.

Mr. RAY of New York. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, if he desires that much.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, this bill was very thoroughly considered in the Committee on the Judiciary, and the committee had no difficulty about recommending its passage. For the purpose of thoroughly understanding the changes that will be made in the existing law by this bill, I would have preferred that the bill or report should have been drawn in a way to show exactly what the language of the previous law was and exactly the wording that had been introduced in the new law different from the old one. But inasmuch as the form of the bill and report give us only the language of the section as it will be when finally amended, that will make it necessary for a perfect understanding of the situation to show how the law formerly stood.

The circuit court of appeals was created in 1890, and the act creating it is found in the statutes which are here before me. That act allowed no appeal from an interlocutory order under receivership or under refusal of an injunction. In 1895 it was amended so as to include refusals and dissolutions of injunctions as well. In 1900 a bill was passed extending this right of appeal to the appointment of a receiver. But that act of 1900 seems to have been drawn with only the act of 1890 in view and without regard to the amendment by the act of 1895, which act of 1895 did allow an appeal in injunction cases whether granted or refused. The act of 1900, therefore, to some extent repeals the act of 1895. Now, the purpose of the present act is to leave the law practically in the condition where it was intended it should be left by all of these acts; or, in other words, the main purpose is to restore the provision which was unintentionally left out by the act of June, 1900.

Mr. GILBERT. Is the appointment of a receiver made a final order, if it is on an interlocutory order, as to whether appeal shall be allowed or refused?

Mr. FLEMING. Yes; and it is only fair and proper and in accordance with all right principles of jurisprudence that when two litigants go into a civil court with a contest over property rights or other rights they have at stake both parties should be given the same privilege, the same access to the courts of appeal.

Now, the question of the bond is something not at all new in this bill. The bond was provided for in the previous law. The stay proceedings were provided for in the previous law. This bill does not affect that part of the proceedings in any way whatever. The language of this bill is precisely the same from line 15 to the close of the bill that it is in the existing law, and the change in the law is made for the purpose of allowing equal rights of appeal to both sides of each issue.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I want to say again that this bill makes no change in the law except as I explained. I want to say further that it restores the law exactly as it was previous to the time when by an inadvertence in making an amendment this part we propose to restore was stricken out. I therefore call for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAY of New York. There was an amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, to change the time when this act shall take effect, in section 2, so that it read:

This act shall be in force from and after June 30, 1901.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 25, page 2, strike out the words "its passage" and insert "June 30, 1901."

Mr. RAY of New York. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 20.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 1493.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The gentleman from Iowa asks for the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering House bill 5499.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me appeal to the gentleman from Iowa to withhold that until I can make an explanation to him.

Mr. HEPBURN. I decline to yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask if this motion is voted down if it will have the same effect as a vote not to consider the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would prevent the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. That would be unfortunate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to postpone the continuing order on the revenue-cutter bill until Saturday, the 2d day of March.

Mr. SULZER. I make a point of order on that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that motion is not in order.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes 60, noes 42.

Mr. MANN. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of the motion will rise. [After counting.] Thirty-one gentlemen rising—a sufficient number.

Mr. HEPBURN. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that it requires 35 to order the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It requires one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. HEPBURN. One-fifth of a quorum.

Mr. SULZER. Let us have the other side, Mr. Speaker. [Cries of "Too late!" "Too late!"]

Mr. SULZER. It is never too late for justice. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York demands the other side. As many as are opposed to taking the yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] On this question the yeas are 31 and the nays are 51—a sufficient number; and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 92, marked "present" 3, not voting 101, as follows:

YEAS—157.

Mr. HEPBURN. Pending the announcement of the vote, I desire to move that all general debate upon the pending bill, No. 5499, be closed after there shall have been two hours of debate in all—that will be after twenty-five minutes of further debate.
Mr. MANN. I raise the point of order on that, that this is not a proper time to make that motion.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. What was the gentleman's motion?
Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not make a motion during a roll call.
Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the Chair will remember that over and over again a motion is made, and pending that motion another motion is made to limit debate. I desire to make my motion before the announcement, and it seems to me that the difference is so inconsequential that it is in order.
The SPEAKER. It is customary pending a motion to go into Committee of the Whole to make a motion to limit debate.
Mr. MANN. It is true that upon a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House a motion can be made to limit debate. That is because the second motion takes precedence of the first motion. The gentleman can make both motions, but the vote must be taken on the motion that has the precedence. Here is a case where a motion has been made and a roll call ordered, and pending the announcement of that roll call it is not in order to make any other motion.
Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, let me ask my friend if it is not possible to agree by unanimous consent upon some time to close debate. There is no desire on the part of the advocates of this measure to use it to block any other measure.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that there is this difference which the gentleman from Iowa perhaps overlooks. When a motion is made to go into Committee of the Whole House, before that motion is put it has been usual to say, "Pending that, I move to close debate." But this is not that situation. The motion has been put and voted upon, and it seems to the Chair that must be announced before another motion can be made.
No one knows yet whether we are going into committee or not until the announcement is made. The House does not know whether this matter is to be considered or not, and it seems to the Chair that after having been taken, his first duty is to announce the result of that vote. On this question the yeas are 157, the nays 92, answering present 2; the ayes have it, and the motion is carried.
Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that the House has declared that it would go into Committee of the Whole, and, pending that, it is not in order to consider any other business. The House has decided to go into the Committee of the Whole. I make the point of order that the only thing for the Speaker to do is to call the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to the chair; that it is not in order to submit any other proposition at this time, and I insist on the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.
Mr. DALZELL. The action of the House, Mr. Speaker, has not been executed. The House is in session, the Speaker is in the chair, and the report from the Committee on Rules is in order at any time.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. The House has directed that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole shall take charge of the House.
Mr. DALZELL. And I undertake, with a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, to arrest that action of the House.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Speaker has no right to arrest the action of the House; the House has directed the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to preside over it. It is not for the Speaker to overrule the action of the House.
Mr. MANN. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that it is precisely as if the Committee on Rules had reported a rule after a motion had been put and carried to adjourn.
Mr. DALZELL. But the House is still in session.
Mr. MANN. So the House would be in session then.
The SPEAKER. The Chair takes this view of it: The Chair has announced that the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is carried. That, it seems to the Chair, removes the House and substitutes the committee. While it is true that reports of the Committee on Rules are of the highest order and take precedence, still we must be in the House in order to consider them, in the opinion of the Chair. There is an easy remedy for it. If it is the pleasure of the committee, it has a right to rise and go back into the House. The Chair is very clear, however, that the House is in Committee of the Whole and would not be in a position to entertain a motion to adjourn even, which is a motion of the highest privilege if made in good faith, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order and calls upon the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to take the chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill No. 5499.
Mr. HEPBURN obtained the floor and said: I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].
Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to be recognized in my own right as the member who made the report on this bill.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point that the last recognition was on that side of the House, and that we are entitled to recognition on this side.
Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.
Mr. SHERMAN. The case is just the reverse.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know of anyone having been recognized on this side——
Mr. HEPBURN. Let me remind the gentleman——
Mr. DALZELL. I move that the committee rise.
The CHAIRMAN. The last recognition upon this bill was to the opponents of the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] moves that the committee now rise.
Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania take the floor for the purpose of making this motion while it is undetermined whether the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama or the gentleman from New York?
Mr. HEPBURN. I understood that I was recognized.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there was a controversy going on between members as to which side was entitled to recognition; and pending that controversy the gentleman from Pennsylvania made the motion that the committee rise, which motion the Chair will recognize. The question is on the motion that the committee do now rise.
Mr. HEPBURN. One moment. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania explain whether any considerable time will be occupied on the proposition which he desires to bring up in the House?
Mr. DALZELL. My judgment is that very little time will be consumed. It can not be more than forty minutes at the outside.
Mr. SULZER. I make the point that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is dilatory. [Laughter.]
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.
The question being taken, there were—ayes 69, noes 114.
Mr. DALZELL. I call for tellers.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point that the call for tellers is clearly dilatory.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would hardly like to sustain that point of order, when tellers may be called for in order to verify the count of the Chair.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have known the Chair to sustain that point several times—not the present occupant of the chair, but others.
Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DALZELL and Mr. HEPBURN were appointed.
The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 132.
So the Committee of the Whole refused to rise.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is recognized.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that while there have been several recognitions on the other side, no one on the Democratic side of the House has been recognized on this bill. I insist that we are entitled to recognition.
The CHAIRMAN. With all due respect to the gentleman from Alabama, the Chair does not recognize that any question between the Democratic side and the Republican side enters into this matter. It was announced just before the close of this debate, when the question was last under consideration, that the opponents of the bill had occupied one hour and the friends of the bill thirty-five minutes; and the last recognition was given to the opponents of the bill. Therefore the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa.
Mr. HEPBURN. I move that all general debate upon the pending bill be closed after two hours.
Mr. MAHON. I raise the point of order that the motion to close general debate can only be made in the House—not in the Committee of the Whole.
Mr. HEPBURN. The Chair will remember that we have a rule prescribing that all the rules of the House shall be in force and shall govern the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole so far as they are applicable. I think it would be difficult to show why this rule in regard to closing general debate should not be applicable to the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole as well as any other.
Mr. MANN. It has been frequently ruled, Mr. Chairman, that general debate in Committee of the Whole can only be closed by order of the House; and there is no ruling, I believe, to the contrary effect.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the situation of the Committee of the Whole on this point of order is very evident, as shown by the position of the gentleman from Iowa himself. Before we went into Committee of the Whole—that is, before the Speaker had called the Chairman to the chair—the gentleman from Iowa moved in the House to limit general debate to two hours, evidently showing that at that time he recognized the fact that we could not limit such debate after we had gone into the Committee of the Whole.

It has been the universal custom, and it is in accordance with the rule, for the Committee of the Whole to limit debate on a paragraph of a bill pending under the five-minute rule. But the universal practice of this House always has been that any motion proposing a limitation of general debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union must be made in the House itself. We are now in the Committee of the Whole, not considering a bill under the five-minute rule, but we are in the stage of general debate; and I contend under these circumstances that until the general debate is concluded—as long as there is any gentleman desiring recognition on the floor of the House to debate the bill—the Committee of the Whole can do nothing in the way of closing debate except by rising and going back into the House. There is no power vested in the Committee of the Whole to limit general debate.

Mr. HEPBURN. Allow me to call the attention of the Chair to clause 8 of Rule XXIII:

> The rules of proceeding in the House shall be observed in the Committee of the Whole House, so far as they are applicable.

Now, if gentlemen can cite some rule or give some reason why this rule is not now applicable, while we are in the present condition, I shall be glad to hear it stated. I know it is customary to make the motion to close general debate while we are in the House, and in pursuance of that custom—not an invariable one—I made that motion. But that fact argues nothing as to what the rule may be when it is invoked—when we see fit to call it into exercise.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman desires, as he says, to invoke the rule. I call the attention of the Chair to section 5 of Rule XXIII, which begins:

> When general debate is closed by order of the House.

There is a clear contemplation in the rule that general debate shall be closed by order of the House. I call the attention of the Chair further to section 6 of Rule XXIII, which provides that:

> The committee may by a vote of the majority of the members present, at any time after the five-minute debate has begun upon a proposed amendment, close debate upon that amendment.

Here are two rules of the House, one providing that the Committee of the Whole may close debate under the five-minute rule upon an amendment or a section of a bill; and another rule of the House providing that the House may order that general debate be closed in Committee of the Whole. The inference is inevitable that it was not the intention of the rule to permit the Committee of the Whole to close general debate in the committee, because it is expressly provided what powers the Committee of the Whole shall have in regard to closing debate, and it is also provided that general debate may be closed in the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON Tennessee. I desire to be heard, if the Chair is in any doubt on this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not any doubt.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The Committee of the Whole has never undertaken to close general debate since I have been a member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Looking to the long practice of the House, so far as it has come under the observation of the present occupant of the chair, it has been uniform to the effect that the Committee of the Whole has no power to limit debate except debate under the five-minute rule upon items of a bill.

Now, the fifth subdivision of Rule XXIII provides that "When general debate is closed by order of the House any member shall be allowed," etc. But there is nowhere any provision for the limitation of general debate in the Committee of the Whole House.

Now, take these two rules together, one providing by inference for closing debate in the Committee of the Whole, the other providing for the limitation of debate under the five-minute rule, it seems to the Chair there can be no doubt that the two construed together has the effect of bringing this result, that the House may decide to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of a bill and make a limit of time during which general debate shall proceed; but when without limitation the House goes into Committee of the Whole, the Chair is of the opinion that there is no power of limitation of general debate beyond the ordinary motions to rise, and other motions of that character. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment the bill now under consideration is one of the best bills which has ever been presented to this House for consideration. It is a measure in the interest of fair play. It seeks to reward faithful public service and do justice to the brave and fearless men employed in our Revenue-Cutter Service. In now doing justice to these heroic men, who for years and years have been serving the Government, we are simply rewarding merit earned long ago and too long deferred.

The Revenue-Cutter Service is almost coeval with the foundation of our Government, and all of our history, in war and in peace, is intertwined with the services these men have rendered the people of this country. In every war they have been true sailors and brave fighters for the flag. The record they have made is the priceless heritage and the proud boast of every true American. In time of peace they perform and have performed duties such as no other public servants of our Government perform. There is no day in the week, no month of the year, that these men in the revenue-cutter employ of the Government do not practically take their lives in their hands when they go to sea.

The Revenue-Cutter Service is not under the civil service, except for the fact that, as a matter of convenience, it is so classified in making the appropriation for its maintenance. No civil employee is compelled to fight for his country except he volunteers; yet every Revenue-Cutter officer is, simply by direction of the President, as provided by law, required to cooperate with the Navy in any duty whatsoever.

Never has a war been fought upon the seas by this country that the Revenue-Cutter Service has not taken an active part, whether it wanted to or not. Can this be said of any other branch of the civil service? When Congress, as a reward to volunteers on sea and land, voted two months' extra pay to each, did the Revenue-Cutter Service receive such extra compensation? The Auditor for the Navy and the Comptroller of the Treasury promptly decided that this service is a part of the regular establishment for the defense of the Government, and as such could in no way come under the classification of volunteers.

Where is there another branch of the Government, other than the Army, the Navy, or the Revenue-Cutter Service, whose employees are drilled daily in the manual of arms, in the handling of machine guns, and in the evolutions of fighting? The same drills and exercises embraced in the daily routine on a vessel of the Navy are carried out on all vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Its men are uniformed the same as those of the Navy, drilled the same, and have almost exactly similar duties to perform. What, then, is the difference? Simply that the officers and men of the Cutter Service are deprived of longevity pay, of the pension list, and of the retired list, those very essential emoluments to any military service.

Not only in times of war, but in times of peace, the Revenue-Cutter Service is called on to cooperate with the Navy. Just prior to the Spanish-American war, revenue cutters and naval vessels acted jointly in the suppression of filibustering along our southern coast. In the Bering Sea patrol for several years revenue cutters and Navy gunboats operated together, and under the same commander. Now, and for six years past, this duty is performed by revenue cutters alone.

The duties of revenue cutters in times of peace appeal to the public more forcibly than in times of war. At the present time, and during this inclement weather, a cordon of cutters is cruising along our Atlantic coast, not to suppress smuggling, as that has been almost entirely stamped out, but in the interest of humanity, to rescue the shipwrecked mariners, to lend aid to vessels in distress, and to destroy those menaces to life and property on the seas, the numerous derelicts, whose specter-like forms are almost daily encountered along the ocean highways.

These are the men who are asking us for relief—who are asking us to pass this bill—men who share equal danger with their more favored brothers in the Army and Navy in times of war, and who, in times of peace, having no sinecure to drop into on shore, are daily performing the most hazardous duties at sea in the interest of humanity. Will you not give to these brave officers the same consideration you give to the Army and the Navy? Yes; and more than that—given even to policemen and firemen in almost every large city in this country.

Under this bill what do these men want? They simply ask to be treated the same as the men in the Navy are treated. These men are now doing, and have always done, more work than the naval officers. There is not a man in the Revenue-Cutter Service of our country who is not compelled to do duty every day; and if you will take the record of the Navy you will find on the Naval Register graduates from Annapolis who have not been on board of a ship and who have not been on sea duty for thirty years.

The graduates from Annapolis, however, according to Admiral Sampson, are "gentlemen." They lead the cotilion here in Washington; they dance the german; they take tea with the ladies; they attend banquets; they wear good clothes; they have been educated for four years at Annapolis, at the expense of the taxpayers, and hence they are "gentlemen." They are consequently entitled to all the rights, to all the privileges, and to all the emoluments of a "gentleman" in the Navy. Their blood is bluer, and they know more than any other ordinary mortal.

But the sailors, the men behind the guns, the men who fight and win the battles, the men who protect the interests of the people in the harbors and on the high seas, in sunshine and in storm, in trial and in triumph—these men, according to the new order of things, are not "gentlemen." They must not hope, they must not aspire; they must simply be content, because a snobbish naval cadet declares they can not go in polite society. They are not graduates of Annapolis, and, forsooth, they should not receive the rights, the privileges, and the emoluments that are given by law to graduates from Annapolis.

Who oppose this bill? A few upstart and parvenu naval cadets. The President of the United States in message after message to Congress recommended and advocated the passage of this bill. The Secretary of the Navy has advocated the passage of the bill in annual report after annual report. Every man who has looked into the matter, who is familiar with the situation and knows the condition of the service is in favor of this bill. Who are opposed to it? Just a few selfish and ungrateful officers of the Navy who do not comprehend the spirit of our democratic institutions.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question on that line?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly; but I have only a few minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Is Sampson?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; he belongs to that insufferable class of snobs. I understand Admiral Sampson is opposed to any one in the Navy being made an officer "who has not had social advantages."

What an asinine spectacle this man Sampson has made of himself. First, trying to steal the glory of that gallant hero of Santiago, Admiral Schley, and now trying to detract from the gallantry and the heroism of the men who have made the American Navy a glorious page in the world's history! I put an editorial from the New York Journal in the RECORD the other day that sums up my estimation of Sampson.

Now, sir, if four years' training at Annapolis can make a "gentleman" out of a clodhopper or a milksop, with all the "social advantages" necessary to make a good naval officer, then I say that four years' drilling, studying, and preparing preliminary to entering the Revenue-Cutter Service, and thirty years' active service at sea thereafter, will make an experienced sailor, fighter, and navigator that the country can depend on in the hour of danger, the afternoon tea dudes, who wear sailor hats but never go to sea, to the contrary notwithstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield the gentleman fifteen minutes more.

Mr. SULZER. I thank the gentleman from Iowa. Now, then, I say thirty years' service in the Revenue-Cutter employment of this Government will make a man so familiar with duties at sea, so familiar with the running of a ship, so familiar with the guns, so familiar with the law of the ocean and of public duty, that he is entitled to stand, and ought, at least, to stand equal under the law with the young man who graduates from Annapolis after being there four years.

Shall we defeat this bill and say to our constituents, "Sampson is right; no one shall have the right to hope, no one shall ever aspire to preferment unless he graduates from Annapolis?" There were gentlemen before Annapolis was established, and there will be gentlemen after it is forgotten. When we consider what an investigation has developed at West Point and the hazing at Annapolis in connection with the statement Admiral Sampson has made, referring to Mr. Morgan, I stand here and declare, as an American citizen, that I would rather see West Point and Annapolis abolished forever than have such brutalities continued and such insults repeated. What true "gentleman of refinement" and "of social advantages" would be guilty of indulging in either?

I am opposed to class distinctions and to class legislation. This bill is as democratic as it is just—it gives industry, bravery, and worthy manhood under the dome of the Union sky a chance. It plants in the breast of every struggling American boy who wants a chance in the Revenue-Cutter Service the star of hope. Some one says this bill will establish a precedent. I am not afraid of precedents. I want to do what is right. I want to do justice, precedent or no precedent. That is the sound position to take. And I affirm that when the people of this country send a young man to West Point or to Annapolis and educate him at Government expense for four years he should be grateful, and when he goes in the service of his country not forget that he is only a public servant.

We have too many autocrats in the Navy—too many martinets in the Army. Some of them so far forget themselves as to demonstrate their ignorance by insulting the people who pay their salaries. Some of these "gentlemen" who know no better should be court-martialed and dismissed from the service of the people, whose intelligence, whose generosity, and whose gratitude they forget and disgrace.

I am not in sympathy with the aristocratic, autocratic, and snobbish ideas of Admiral Sampson. He does not speak for America. I am in sympathy with the hopes, the rights, the ambitions, and the aspirations of every true and honest boy in America. I want him to be a man—not a cad. I want to give every boy a chance, no matter how poor and how humble he may be; and if he has the ability, if he has the hope, the courage, and the ambition, I want that young man to have the avenues of opportunity opened to him at all times, so that he can go forward and reach the very pinnacle of fame in the Army, the Navy, and in all the walks of life. Brains tell in this country; and in the hour of trial stout hearts win the battle.

I am in favor of this bill because I believe it is just, because these brave fellows have earned this reward and this recognition, and because I know the service the men on the revenue cutters of the United States do year in and year out. From the icy waters of Alaska to the coral strands of Florida, these men are always on deck, always on duty, always earning their pay, always in the service of their country. These men in time of peace do a great work saving lives, enforcing the law, and looking after wrecks and derelicts on the high seas. Their work is never done. They have no time for cotilions and afternoon teas.

Mr. Chairman, the Cutter Service was organized in 1790. One of the leading features of its organization was to place its vessels and crews upon the footing, in drills, discipline, and armament, of regular vessels of war. There being then no Navy Department in existence, nor for about eight years thereafter, the service was, as a matter of convenience simply in the discharge of public business, attached to the Treasury Department, where it has remained ever since. The act of Congress of July 1, 1799, authorized the President to "cause the revenue cutters to be employed to defend the seacoast and to repel hostility to vessels and commerce within their jurisdiction."

In 1798 the President, "with a view to producing concert of action of the naval forces of the United States, placed the revenue cutters at the disposal of the Secretary of the Navy," and seven of them were accordingly employed in the West Indies during the quasi French war and afterwards in the suppression of piracy in that quarter.

By act of Congress of March 2, 1799, the President was authorized to direct the Cutter Service to cooperate with the Navy, as well in peace as in war.

In the war of 1812 revenue cutters were employed as dispatch boats and for coast defense. On several occasions they engaged the enemy and fought with great bravery and skill, notably in the case of the cutter Surveyor, which was captured by an overwhelming force from the British frigate Narcissus, after a defense so desperately brave as to cause the British captain to return to Captain Travis, of the Surveyor, his sword, with a letter bearing admiring testimony to his gallant conduct.

In 1815, and for a number of years thereafter, some of the most active and gallant officers of the Navy sought and obtained commissions in the Cutter Service, and found excellent scope for the seamanship and gallantry which distinguished the officers of the Navy at that time. Few officers of the Navy have had imposed upon them more responsible, delicate, and important duties than were devolved upon Lieutenant Paine, who, in command of a revenue cutter, represented the United States in the waters contiguous to the British provinces on our northeastern frontier during the fishery troubles that ensued after the treaty of 1818, and none have discharged such with more credit than he. In 1836 several vessels of the service participated in the Seminole war and maintained a high reputation.

Under the law of 1837 requiring the President to assign public vessels to service on the coast during the winter months for the relief of storm-driven vessels of commerce, ships of war were at first designated, but could not perform the work, and were soon replaced by the fleet of revenue cutters, and the Cutter Service has performed this hazardous work every year since.

In the war with Mexico several cutters served in cooperation with the Navy.

In 1858 the steam cutter Harriet Lane, commanded by Capt. John Faunce, of the Revenue-Cutter Service, served in the squadron of the Paraguay expedition and was pronounced, in a letter from the commodore commanding to Captain Faunce, the most efficient ship in the fleet.

During the civil war the cutter Harriet Lane shared in the attack on Newport News and Hatteras Inlet, the cutter Miami in that on Sewells Point, while the E. A. Stevens, also known as the Naugatuck, was with the ironclads in the attack on Fort Darling with Rogers.

Several revenue cutters performed valuable service in the Chesapeake Bay in cooperation with the Potomac flotilla in preventing the transportation of supplies from North to South, and Capt. Thomas M. Dungan, of the cutter Reliance, was killed in action near the Virginia shore.

It thus appears that the military character of the Cutter Service has been established by law in its employment in warlike operations in every war in which the country has been engaged.

The military character of the Revenue-Cutter Service was officially stated by the Treasury Department in the report of the service in 1881, as follows:

> The Revenue-Cutter Service, while charged by law with the performance of important civil duties, is essentially military in its character. Each vessel is provided with great guns and furnished with as full a complement of small arms for its crew as any ship of war. Its officers are required to be proficient in military drill and possess a thorough knowledge of the uses of both great and small arms. Its crews are required to be instructed from day to day at the great guns and in the use of small arms.
> Commanding officers are required, while boarding vessels arriving in ports of the United States, in case of failure or refusal of any such vessel on being hailed to come to and submit to the proper inspection by an officer of the service, to fire first across her bows as a warning, and in case of persistent refusal to resort to shot or shell to compel obedience. In the performance of this work they are likely at any time to receive injuries and to be subjected to the same dangers in time of peace as the force employed on naval vessels.

By act of March 2, 1799, it is provided that the revenue cutters shall, whenever the President so directs, cooperate with the Navy. It will be observed that the cooperation of the two services prescribed in the act above quoted is not contingent upon a state of war or other particularly perilous conditions. On the contrary, it may take place in time of peace and for specific purposes and when less hazard is involved to the two services than pertains to the discharge of a revenue vessel of its ordinary duties.

But if in legal theory they are civil employees, are they so in fact? Are they less positively a part of the military force in time of war than the Army or Navy? It is true that revenue vessels are not to be ordered into action on purely military service, offensive or defensive, except the President so direct; neither are the vessels of the Navy.

The status of the Revenue-Cutter Service is therefore that of a coast-guard navy, as the Navy proper is an ocean navy. The one polices the coast and the other the ocean.

There is no duty performed by naval vessels in time of peace that can not be and has not been performed by vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service, while in time of war they have taken part with the sister service.

The seizure of smugglers and the prevention of illicit trade—the only duty of the service that has direct relation with the collection of customs—is precisely similar to the duty of naval officers in seizing vessels engaged in contraband trade in time of war. Other duties of the Revenue-Cutter Service—such as the enforcement of the neutrality laws, the suppression of piracy and of mutinies in merchant vessels—are now actually imposed on and performed by the Navy in common with the Cutter Service.

We are all familiar with the good work done by the Cutter Service during the Spanish-American war.

There were with the Navy 13 revenue cutters, carrying 61 guns, 98 officers, and 562 enlisted men. Of these, 8 cutters (43 guns), 58 officers, and 339 men were in Admiral Sampson's fleet and on the Habana blockade; 1 cutter (6 guns), 10 officers, and 95 men were in Admiral Dewey's fleet at Manila, and 4 cutters (12 guns), 30 officers, and 128 men cooperated with the Navy on the Pacific coast.

At the battle of Manila the McCulloch, Capt. D. B. Hodgsdon, Revenue-Cutter Service, efficiently performed the duties assigned by Admiral Dewey. It was the McCulloch that carried to Hongkong the dispatches announcing to the Government and to the world that glorious and signal victory. Admiral Dewey has officially commended the commander of the McCulloch for the value and efficiency of his command.

At the battle of Cardenas, May 11, the revenue cutter Hudson, Lieut. Frank H. Newcomb, Revenue-Cutter Service, commanding, sustained the fight against the gunboats and shore batteries of the enemy side by side with the naval torpedo boat Winslow, and when Ensign Bagley and half the crew of the latter-named vessel had been killed and her commander wounded, rescued from certain destruction the vessel and the balance of the crew, under the furious fire of the enemy's guns.

On the same day (May 12) the Windom, Captain Maguire, Revenue-Cutter Service, engaged the enemy's shore batteries at Cienfuegos, demolished the light-house, and destroyed the rendezvous of the Spanish troops there. During this engagement the senior naval officer present, in appreciation of the fine work of the Windom, signaled from his flagship, "Well done, Windom."

The Manning, Capt. F. M. Munger, Revenue-Cutter Service, commanding, was in many engagements with shore batteries of the enemy, and Captain Todd, United States Navy, has officially bestowed upon her commander generous praise for the efficiency of his command and for effective and meritorious services. Rear-Admiral Howell and Commodore Remey have officially commended the efficiency of the service in cooperation.

In addition to services rendered by vessels with the naval forces, there were 7 others, carrying 10 guns, 33 officers, and 163 men, with the Army, engaged in patrolling and guarding mine fields in various harbors from Boston to Mobile and New Orleans.

The Revenue-Cutter Service had in active cooperation with the Army and Navy throughout the war 20 vessels, carrying 71 guns, 131 officers, and 725 men. There were 3 other vessels—25 officers and 210 men—ordered to be transferred to the Navy, but because of unavoidable delay by contractors in finishing their work the vessels could not be sent to the front.

This, sir, is the glorious record of the revenue-cutter men, and what American is not proud of that brilliant chapter of achievements? There should be no opposition to this bill. The brave and deserving men of the Cutter Service have earned this just reward, and we would be false to ourselves and ungrateful as the representatives of the people if we did not pass it.

These men are always in danger in what they have to do, and why should they not receive some recognition? Should these men be discriminated against simply because there are a few naval officers in the country who do not want this bill to pass? I believe that the man who has served thirty years in the Revenue-Cutter Service of this Government knows more about a ship, more about the guns, and is more competent to command a ship, in time of peace or war, in the harbors or on the high seas, than the fledgeling from Annapolis who spends most of his time leading cotillions and being, as Sampson says, "a gentleman" in Washington. I am heartily in favor of this bill and I hope it will pass. It should be a law. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. OLMSTED having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12846. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902;

H. R. 13850. An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902;

H. R. 13801. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902; and

H. R. 12394. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14144. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River at Monticello, Miss.;

H. R. 13992. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Carthage, Tenn.;

H. R. 13907. An act to revive and amend an act entitled, "An act to authorize the Georgia Pine Railway of Georgia to construct a bridge across the Flint River, a navigable stream, in Decatur County, Ga.; and

H. R. 13707. An act authorizing the Citizens' Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

S. 2799. An act to carry into effect the stipulations of article 7 of the treaty between the United States and Spain, concluded on the 10th day of December, 1898;

S. 323. An act granting homesteaders on the abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation in Wyoming the right to enter one quarter section of public land on said reservation as pasture or grazing land; and

S. 3288. An act for the relief of Daniel Coonan.

The message also announced that the Senate had still further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13705) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had receded from its amendment to the bill (H. R. 149) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of William E. Woodbridge for compensation for the use by the United States of his invention relating to projectiles, for which letters patent were ordered to issue to him March 25, 1852.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Michigan.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 27, 1901:

H. R. 10700. An act to confirm a lease with the Seneca Nation of Indians.

On February 28, 1901:

H. R. 5137. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell a certain lot in the District of Columbia at public auction.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, the merits of this measure, it seems to me, hardly need any discussion to secure favorable recognition by this House. This is one of the oldest branches of the service. It was for eight years the only Navy of our country. It was established before the Navy Department, and served in that capacity for eight years. It has been an ally of the Navy and engaged in every war since that day. They are not only the bulldogs in war time, but they are the watchdogs of the Treasury in times of peace for the protection of the revenues of our country.

They are the bloodhounds of the water to search out the violators of our laws, not only in merchant marine, but the quarantine laws are enforced by this branch of our Government. They are the greyhounds of the water to take important messages in times of war and carry them with safety and dispatch. They have proved their loyalty to our country and their bravery; their ships are commanded like the ships of the Navy, the men are trained like the men in the Navy, and they are exposed in times of war to the same dangers as the men in the Navy.

We have in past years recognized the loyal services of the officers and men of the Navy and given them the benefit which is now attempted to be extended to this service, and that is right. If it is right for the Navy, I should think it right for the Revenue Service to obtain a recognition of its services and the advantages embraced in this bill. The service is made up in the same manner of enlistment and service in time of war, and in time of peace it is better and more valuable to the Government.

I desire, so far as my influence can extend in this House, that this measure shall be given favorable consideration and adopted; that the service may be recognized and honored for the loyal service rendered for one hundred and twenty years. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I consider this bill one of the fairest measures that have been presented for our action during this session of Congress. I am heartily in favor of its passage, and being somewhat familiar with the history of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and the duties which its officers have performed and are now performing, I propose to vote for the measure and to speak, as forcibly as I am able, in its support.

The bill has been favorably reported by the Senate and House Committees on Commerce and Interstate Commerce, respectively. The history of the service has been traced in these reports, and no one who admires heroism and devotion to duty under the most trying circumstances will deny or belittle the value of the service rendered by the revenue-cutter officers in time of war or its continuous and great importance in time of peace, and I regret to have been compelled to listen to the scant praise which the gentleman from Illinois gave to the officers of this service for their gallantry in the late war with Spain and for their constant endeavor to protect the coast trade of the United States and the lives of those engaging in it.

This service, organized in 1790, has been called into active use in every war or disturbance which the United States has been involved in, and as a coast defense, as dispatch carriers, as sea scouts, and in actual engagements in defense of the flag it has accounted for itself as gallantly as the officers of the naval or military arm of the Government. It has done well the work assigned to it, and it has been commended for the doing of it, and no more can be said of any service of the United States. It is ready at all times to undertake the hardest duties, and its work in the Arctic compares with any work of the Army in the West or the Navy in tropical climates. Its demands for proper recognition are just, and not incommensurate with the necessities of the service nor unwarranted by the actual service rendered.

Briefly, the bill proposes, first, to fix and define the rank of the officers of the service as compared with the officers in the Army or Navy. No reasonable objection can be urged against the first proposition. Without regard to the rank of the officers of the Army and Navy, the bill proposes to define expressly what grades or rank shall exist in the service, and to what ranks in the Army and Navy they shall correspond. It has been objected that this will put companies of the Army in the time of war under the command of a Revenue-Cutter officer, whose whole life has been given to other subjects. What these subjects are has not been stated, but I can state what subjects and what course of training a Revenue Cutter officer devotes his whole life to, and I can see nothing in this education or training which would make him unfit to command any detachment of infantry, or even a gunboat.

Candidates for lieutenancies in the Revenue-Cutter Service must be American citizens not over 25 years of age. They must pass an examination in spelling, geography, history, and the Constitution of the United States. They must be proficient in algebra, geometry, physics, and chemistry, and after passing a successful examination in these branches of studies, they are then assigned to the receiving ship, where two years are spent in the practice of seamanship, gunnery, and military drill, and an extended cruise. Having completed this prescribed course of study and practice, and after a final examination, an appointment as third lieutenant is made. I do not think the master of any sailing vessel, or the mate of such a vessel, reaches his position through such a course of training; and I think this knowledge, acquired during years of service in the Cutter Service, gives officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service a little more general and technical information than is possessed by masters or mates of vessels sailing the seas. And I think everyone will agree with me that the education is technical as well as practical.

It is also proposed to increase the pay of the officers 10 per cent for each five years of service, not to exceed 40 per cent of the compensation of the grade to which the officers belong.

The pay now received by these officers does not permit them to dispense the ordinary acts of hospitality which is required of them, and if the rank is to be fixed it must naturally follow, if they are to be subject to the same official consideration and exactions as naval officers, and are expected to maintain the same social courtesies, that the pay must be in keeping with the duties expected of them. The only question to be decided is whether the service rendered is worth the proposed increase of compensation. Those most familiar with the service say it is, and a perusal of the varied services rendered will, I think, convince any fair-minded man that the hardships which these officers are compelled to face, and which they are ever ready to face, is worth every cent of the compensation which it is proposed to give them.

I have personal knowledge of the fact that one officer who served in the Revenue-Cutter Service during the civil war, and who was left a substantial fortune, died in that service from the effects of the hardships and changes of climate necessary to be borne in performance of his duty, whose widow was left absolutely penniless, with no pensionable status commensurate with the rank of the officer whose fortune had been spent in dispensing the courtesies which were necessary to make efficient the service to which he devoted his life. His widow received $8 a month pension, which Congress has subsequently increased to $20 a month. And this pension would not have been granted had not the officer been engaged in actual hostilities and received wounds which hastened his death.

The extension of all official honors and courtesies now enjoyed by the officers of the Army and Navy to commissioned officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service need not be discussed here. The personnel of the Cutter Service embraces gentlemen of the highest standing socially and mentally, and they deserve the same consideration that is extended to officers of the other branches of the service of the United States, and I hope they will receive it.

I have made these few remarks to emphasize how heartily I am in favor of the passage of the bill. I know many of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and I know them to be men of education, technical and practical, faithful servants of the United States, ever alert for the interests of our people on the seas, and who have earned by years of the hardest service the meager reward which both committees of Congress say they should receive.

I submit for the consideration of the House as a part of my remarks a record of some of the more notable cases of assistance rendered by the Revenue-Cutter Service from 1872 to 1895:

ASSISTANCE RENDERED THE STEAMSHIP METIS BY THE REVENUE STEAMER MOCCASIN.

On August 30, 1872, the commanding officer of the Dexter received information while at Newport, R. I., that the steamship Metis had been wrecked off Watch Hill Light with 130 persons on board. He at once proceeded to the scene of the wreck and cruised in its vicinity, a heavy sea running at the time. The Moccasin rescued 42 of the passengers and crew, who were in the water and on temporized rafts, and 17 bodies of those who had perished. In recognition of the services rendered by the Moccasin on this occasion Congress passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress are due, and are hereby tendered, to Capt. David Ritchie, commanding the revenue steamer Moccasin, and to the officers and men under his command for their heroic and humane action in saving the lives of 42 human beings and rescuing 17 dead bodies from the wreck of the steamer Metis on the waters of Long Island Sound, on the morning of the 31st of August, 1872."

Approved, January 24, 1873.

RESCUE BY THE REVENUE STEAMER WOODBURY OF SIX OF THE CREW OF THE WRECKED SCHOONER ADA BARKER, JANUARY 13, 1881, OFF GREEN ISLAND, COAST OF MAINE.

The Woodbury discovered the remains of the wrecked schooner Ada Barker in the breakers off Green Island, and perched on a rock above the reach of the waves were noticed six shipwrecked men. A heavy southeast sea was running, and the rock being surrounded by jagged bowlders and spurs, created a terrific breaker running at least 30 feet high. The force of the sea was so great that no boat could live therein a moment. The Woodbury put back to Portland, obtained two dories, and the sea having subsided somewhat upon her return, the first cutter of the Woodbury and the two dories were manned and worked their way through the violent sea, and rescued the six men at the imminent peril to the boats and the lives of those manning them.

CITY OF COLUMBUS.

The steamship City of Columbus, from Boston for Savannah, at 3.30 a. m., January 18, 1884, struck on Devils Bridge Reef, off Gayhead, Mass., and sunk almost immediately. At 12.35 p. m., same date, the revenue steamer Dexter, Capt. Eric Gabrielson, commanding, discovered and headed for the wreck. The weather was piercing cold, the wind blowing very hard, and the sea so rough that when the Dexter came to she rolled rails under water. The survivors of the wreck were clinging to the rigging, and were numb and exhausted from their long exposure. Owing to the conditions of weather and sea prevailing, they could only be rescued by jumping into the water and being picked up by the Dexter's boats, with the assistance of a lifeboat from Gayhead, which had come off to the wreck. In this way 19 were rescued and received on board the Dexter. Two men were yet in the rigging, evidently dead, or unable to speak or move. Second Lieut. John U. Rhodes, of the Dexter, volunteered to release them. After several efforts he reached the rigging, cut the ratlines, and the two men fell into the water and were picked up by the Dexter's boats. When picked up they were yet breathing, but both expired before the boat reached the Dexter. For this service Captain Gabrielson, his officers and crew, received the thanks of the National House of Representatives and the Department, and Lieutenant Rhodes was advanced 21 numbers in his grade for his gallant conduct.

ASSISTANCE RENDERED BY THE GALVESTON TO SUFFERERS IN THE FLOODED DISTRICTS OF THE BRAZOS RIVER, TEXAS, IN 1899.

During the month of July, when the district bordering the Brazos River was inundated by the heavy rains near the head waters of that stream, the Galveston at once proceeded to the scene of the flood to afford such relief as lay within her power. She remained upward of two weeks upon the scene and was able to perform services which called forth the highest expressions of appreciation from the citizens. These services were mainly performed by Lieut. S. P. Edmonds, Revenue-Cutter Service, who was detailed for that purpose, and who succeeded in bringing immediate relief to upward of a thousand persons.

The following is a copy of a resolution adopted at a public meeting of the citizens of Velasco, Tex., held July 17, 1899, which expresses their gratitude for his heroic services in behalf of the distressed people in the flooded districts; also a copy of a letter of W. F. Blunt, M. D., State health officer and surgeon-general of the State of Texas:

"At a meeting of the citizens of Velasco on July 17, 1899, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the citizens of Velasco, Brazoria County, Tex., do hereby formally express to Lieut. S. P. Edmonds, of the U. S. revenue cutter Galveston, their profound appreciation of and gratitude for his heroic efforts in helping to rescue many of the people along the Brazos River from a watery grave and in aiding to supply them with means of sustenance for days until sufficient provisions could be got for them.

"That Lieutenant Edmonds was out from noon on Saturday, July 8, 1899, until noon Saturday, July 15, 1899, during which seven days he, in hot July weather, with every danger and discomfort which the situation could produce, spared not any energy or effort to aid in rescuing 189 people from danger and relieving the suffering of about 1,000 unfortunates who had lost their all in the terrible flood of water which devastated the valley of the Brazos River. His cool courage and undaunted resolution in such a time of danger and almost unendurable conditions of heat and other physical menaces to health mark Lieutenant Edmonds as much a hero as any of our gallant men who fought at Manila or Santiago. Coming among us as an entire stranger, with no motive save that of a noble soul moved by the sufferings of a common humanity, he has endeared himself to our people and has marked himself as one of our most efficient officers.

"Resolved, That the report made by Lieutenant Edmonds is received and his acts fully approved.

"L. R. BRYAN,
"Chairman, and others."

AUSTIN, TEX., July 20, 1899.

DEAR SIR: I can not refrain from personally expressing to you my appreciation of your services in carrying relief to the unfortunate sufferers from the Brazos floods at Brazoria, Columbia, and other places, as observed by me while engaged in the same work. Your actions were noted by the people there and will not soon be forgotten by them. Your work was not only well timed, but was arduous, painstaking, and effectual to an unusual degree, and was accomplished with no little labor, exposure, and personal danger.

Yours, truly,

W. F. BLUNT, M. D.,
State Health Officer and Surgeon-General State of Texas.

Lieut. S. P. EDMONDS,
Revenue-Cutter Galveston, Galveston, Tex.

RESCUE OF THE OFFICERS AND CREW OF THE BRITISH S. S. SUTTON BY THE REVENUE STEAMER ONONDAGA, JANUARY 20–21, 1900.

On the evening of January 21 the Onondaga discovered the British S. S. Sutton wrecked outside Fenwicks Island Shoal off the coast of Delaware, with her bow sunk in 5 fathoms of water and stern afloat, and during the night, in a thick fog and with a heavy sea prevailing, rescued 24 persons, comprising the officers and crew of the Sutton, for which service the commanding officer of the Onondaga, his officers and crew, received the thanks of the Department.

ASSISTANCE RENDERED BY THE REVENUE STEAMER GRESHAM TO THE BARK FRATERNIDATE, AUGUST 16, 1900.

While the Gresham was cruising from Newport to New London on this date, the bark Fraternidate was discovered anchored dangerously close to rocks, Black Point, Rhode Island. This vessel was bound from Brava, Cape Verde Islands, for New Bedford, with 103 persons on board. She had a favorable passage until off Montauk Point, where unfavorable winds kept her beating for seven days, when, the weather becoming threatening, the captain tried to make harbor, as he was short of provisions, water, and fuel, and the vessel was leaking. He missed stays off Black Point, and, as he was only a thousand yards from the rocks, he let go his port anchor, the chain of which instantly parted. The starboard anchor was then tried, but dragged until the ship finally fetched up within a hundred yards of the rocks. The heavy sea, with the increasing force of the winds, made her position one of greatest peril, with the [almost] certain loss of all on board. The Gresham went to her assistance, and, notwithstanding the violence of wind and sea and the proximity to dangerous rocks, succeeded in getting a line to the imperiled vessel and dragged her off into deep water, where her starboard anchor was got aboard and the vessel towed into Newport Harbor.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, the vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service assisted 526 vessels, whose value, together with their cargoes, was $7,328,793, and the number of persons on board the vessels thus assisted and whose lives were imperiled was 4,041.

During the year ended June 30, 1886, the number of vessels assisted was 313. Their value, together with their cargoes, was $6,738,569; the number of persons on board 2,888, while the number actually taken out of the water and thus saved from drowning was 154.

WORK OF THE REVENUE STEAMERS WOODBURY AND DALLAS.

During the winter season of 1887–88 the revenue steamer Woodbury assisted 268 different vessels, whose value, together with their cargoes, was $3,508,650. The number of persons on board these vessels whose lives were imperiled and who were rescued and taken to places of safety was 2,066.

The Dallas, during the season of 1894–95, assisted 55 vessels in distress, whose value, together with their cargoes, was $329,600, and the number of persons on board and assisted, whose lives had been imperiled, was 272.

Mr. HEPBURN. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS].

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in a bill of as much importance as this we should consider carefully all the provisions and propositions contained therein before enacting it into law. I believe the bill, with certain amendments, ought to be enacted into law. It seems to me it is only fair, just, and right, when we recognize the fact that two of the most famous Admirals of the civil war, Porter and Farragut, were members of this service, that we should not at this late day refuse to acknowledge that the Revenue-Cutter Service has developed men of great credit and great honor to the nation.

I believe it only right and fair that the officers of this service should come to Congress and ask for an increase in pay. One of the provisions of this act does increase their pay. It places the captain of the Revenue-Cutter Service on a par with the major and lieutenant-commander in the Navy, and so on down to grade of third lieutenant. That may sound all very well—"places them on a par"—but if you will notice the pay at present of the three relative divisions you will see that the major in the Army and the lieutenant-commander in the Navy receive $3,500 salary each, and we only propose in this bill to pay to the captains of the Revenue-Cutter Service the same compensation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. DRIGGS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman know that the lieutenant-commander gets $2,500 a year and 10 per cent for each five years up to twenty years additional?

Mr. DRIGGS. I am frank to say I did not know it.

Mr. MANN. The pay of a lieutenant-commander is $2,500 a year and 10 per cent added for each five years, making 40 per cent additional, and that is the same with a captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. DRIGGS. If they are on the same footing as far as pay is concerned I am satisfied. But this report does not show it to be so.

I am taking this statement from the report and what I have learned at the Treasury Department in relation to it. Now, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not take up any more of my time; I have but five minutes, and he had one hour, and made his speech.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman does not want his statements correct, I am sure I do not care about it.

Mr. DRIGGS. I am making my statement from the report and the bill, which state that it is proposed to place these men on less pay while on the retired list, while in active service they are to receive the same pay. That is the way I understand the proposition. I am willing, however, to concede what the gentleman says, that they are on the same pay as the majors in the Army will receive. If that is correct and they are to receive the same compensation, I have nothing further to say upon that point, and thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for the information.

I will go on to the next proposition, and that is as to the technical education given the cadets of the Revenue-Cutter Service as compared with the technical education given the cadets of the Naval Academy. One of the chief reasons for opposing this bill that I personally had was the lack of knowledge in reference to the education the cadets of the Revenue-Cutter Service received.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have three minutes' time left, which I will yield the gentleman.

Mr. DRIGGS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to the education given the cadets of the Revenue-Cutter Service in order that they may thoroughly understand that young men who become third lieutenants in the service are as thoroughly competent and capable of taking care of a ship as a junior officer, an ensign, in the Navy is competent and capable. Before the cadet in the Revenue-Cutter Service can receive a commission he has to pass an examination in seamanship, in gunnery, and in navigation, and the examination in seamanship and in navigation, I have been informed by the best posted nautical men in Washington, is far more severe and far more drastic, both in its practicability and in its technicalities, than the examination given the cadets at the Naval Academy prior to their graduation.

As far as the technical knowledge of gunnery is concerned, I would like to allude to the general scope of instruction that is given cadets in the Revenue-Cutter Service from the rules and regulations governing the course of instruction on one of their practice ships, the Chase. (See report on Revenue-Cutter Service.) So, too, in navigation and mathematics you will find the course of study severe and drastic. But the chief feature of the general scope of instruction to cadets on board the practice ship is the thoroughness of their practical nautical education.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SOUTHARD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11161. An act to refund excessive postage paid on certain newspapers; and

H. R. 1860. An act for the relief of the trustees of Carson-Newman College, at Mossycreek, Tenn.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4306) for the relief of settlers under the public land laws to lands within the indemnity limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. I understand that gentleman does not wish to occupy the time at present. I wish to take a moment to correct a statement which I made the other day. I wish to say that the term of tuition is two years, as stated at that time by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]—not three years.

Mr. MANN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] has already occupied time yielded to him by the gentleman from Iowa. I suppose under the rules the gentleman from New York is entitled to recognition for his full hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly I am. But I propose to yield one-half hour to the gentleman from Iowa, to be used when he desires to use it, and to reserve the whole hour. I would be glad if gentlemen on the other side would use some time now if they intend to use any at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] has a right to reserve his hour, of which he can yield any part to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] when he desires it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish, then, to reserve my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is recognized.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before the gentleman from Alabama proceeds, I would like to ascertain whether we can not reach some arrangement as to the time to be occupied in general debate on this question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that arrangement had better be made after I have used the time for which I have been recognized.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why not make it now? The gentleman has been recognized for an hour, and we have an hour on this side. I assume the gentleman does not want anything more than reasonable debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly not.

Mr. HEPBURN. It would seem to me that two hours more of debate ought to be enough to bring this matter fairly to the attention of the House. The gentleman has been recognized for an hour, and my colleague on the committee [Mr. SHERMAN] has an hour which he has reserved. Will not that be sufficient?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Later on, after I have had an opportunity to consult with gentlemen on this side as to how much time they want, I may be able to enter into some agreement, but I can not do so now. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, according to my understanding of this bill its purpose is to increase the rank and pay of officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service and to impose upon them a military character and stamp. I have carefully read the bill, and studied its provisions as best I could; yet I am unable to understand in what respect the efficiency of this department of the public service will be enhanced by the measure.

The Revenue-Cutter Service is, I think, essentially a civil service. It was originally created for the purpose of assisting in the collection of our revenues, and by its very nature it became a sort of ocean police—a patrol of the sea. Its equipment was such that it had the facilities for discharging other functions along with the primary duty in assisting in the collection of revenue; and additional duties and responsibilities were imposed upon it. It became a part of the duty of the Revenue-Cutter Service to assist in the enforcement of the navigation laws, to assist in the suppression of piracy and the prevention of smuggling, to assist wrecked vessels, and also to assist in the Life-Saving Service.

But the members of this House ought always to bear in mind the fact that the primary function of the Revenue-Cutter Service is altogether civil in its character; that it is for the collection of revenues; and I am opposed to the policy of imposing on branches of the public service which are purely civil in their origin and character the aspects of the military service.

This bill will involve an increased annual expenditure of over $200,000. I have listened to the arguments which have been made thus far in favor of the measure, and I have failed to discover a single feature in all its provisions that will improve the efficiency of the service.

The salaries now paid are fixed by law. They will be increased at the rate of 40 per cent all along the line. Members of this service will be placed on the retired list, and as was abundantly demonstrated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in his exceptionally able and peculiarly instructive speech against this measure one day last week, these men may be retired from the active service and draw three-fourths pay at the age of 48 years. A man may enter the service at the age of 18 and after 30 years' service, as I construe the bill, he will have the right, the absolute right, to insist on retirement, to be placed on the waiting-order list, at three-fourths pay.

Mr. SCUDDER. Is it not true that the retirement of these officers will be optional with the President? Does not the bill vest in the President the power to decide whether or not at the end of thirty years an officer of this service shall be retired?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not give the bill that construction. I read carefully the argument of the gentleman from Illinois and analyzed as best I could the provisions of the bill, and I believe the duty will be imperative upon the President, under the terms of this measure, to retire men who comply with the specified conditions, upon their application.

Mr. SCUDDER. I think that if the gentleman will study the bill and not the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois he will find that he is in error.

Mr. DRIGGS. Does the gentleman from Indiana know the provisions of the Revised Statutes covering the retirement of officers of the Army?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not familiar with those provisions in detail.

Mr. DRIGGS. Does the gentleman believe in the retirement of officers of the Army?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. DRIGGS. And therefore the gentleman would follow the provisions of the Revised Statutes covering the retirement of Army officers?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not sufficiently familiar with those provisions in detail to say whether I consider them wise or not. I believe in the general principle of retirement in the military service, but not in the civil service.

Mr. DRIGGS. If the provision of the Revised Statutes covering the retirement of officers of the Army is identically the same as the provision of this bill with reference to officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service, does not the gentleman think that this is a good retirement proposition? If the gentleman is willing, I will read from the Revised Statutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the provision of law in reference to officers of the Army is identically the same as the provision of this bill, and is subject to the interpretation which I think must be given to this provision, then I think the retirement provision with reference to Army officers ought to be corrected, because I do not believe that any commissioned officer of the Army or Navy ought to have the absolute right to be retired from active service upon three-fourths pay at the age of 48 years, regardless of the condition of his health.

Mr. SCUDDER. Does not the gentleman know that officers have not that right, either under the provisions with reference to the Army or the Navy or under this bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I had so supposed in regard to the Army and the Navy, but it seems that this bill confers that right.

Mr. SCUDDER. The gentleman is in error, I think.

Mr. DRIGGS. Let me read from the Revised Statutes in reference to the Army retirements.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have not the time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think if the gentleman would read this bill instead of the speech of the gentleman from Illinois he would not come to the conclusion which he has stated.

Section 7 provides:

When any officer of the United States Revenue-Cutter Service shall have served thirty years as a commissioned officer in said service, he may be retired from active service by the President upon his own application and may be placed on the retired list.

Section 8 provides:

When any officer in the Revenue-Cutter Service has reached the age of 64, he shall be retired by the President from active service.

Now, these are pari materia, and they are to be construed together, and I think any court would say it was discretionary in the first instance, as it is obligatory in the second.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I undertake to construe them together. I construe section 7 to mean that an officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service with thirty years' service is entitled to be retired upon his own application, and when he reaches the age of 64 years then it is an imperative duty of the President to retire him without regard to his application.

Mr. HEPBURN. But in the one instance there is the option of the President.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a question of interpretation.

Mr. HEPBURN. By putting the words "in the discretion of the President" in there that difficulty would be solved.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That difficulty would be removed so far as that section is concerned.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will offer that amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think that ought to be in if the bill is to become law.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think it is unnecessary.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is another criticism I desire to offer to this bill. Section 16 provides that boards of examiners shall be organized for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the health of officers of this branch of the service, and if it be discovered that any officer is incapacitated from the performance of the duties of the service he shall be retired. He shall be retired from the active service or wholly retired, as the President may determine.

If he is simply retired from active service, he goes on the waiting-order list, or retired list, and draws retire pay of three-fourths of the regular pay of the service; that is to say, conditions may exist by which an officer may incapacitate himself for the performance of duty by his own vicious habits, and yet he may go on the retired list and draw three-fourths pay.

Mr. SCUDDER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. SCUDDER. Is it not again discretionary? The bill makes no such absolute provision.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I said it is discretionary.

Mr. SCUDDER. The President would not exercise that discretion injudiciously.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Why invest the discretion in any public officer of allowing a man holding a commission from the Government in the military service incapacitating himself by his own vicious conduct and then permit him to go on the retired list at three-fourths pay?

Mr. SCUDDER. Was not that the case of General Eagan?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, if it was the case with General Eagan, it does not make it right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman from Indiana want any further time?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes more time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I oppose, Mr. Chairman, the policy of impressing upon any branch of the public service which is essentially civil in its character the aspect of the military service. This bill simply illustrates the aggression of the various departments of the public service. The Revenue-Cutter Service, humble in its beginning, originated simply as a sort of coast police, and is, in many respects, closely analogous to the municipal police in the large cities of the country, a service for the purpose of protecting business, the enforcement of the navigation laws of the country.

It occurs to me that there is no more occasion for classifying this service with the military service of the country than there is in classifying the police organizations of the great cities of the country with the military. The functions of the municipal police of the country are as much military in their character as the functions of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I believe that the pay already accorded the officers of the Cutter Service is abundantly adequate, much higher than the pay granted to officers performing like duty in civil life, almost twice as high as the same character of service in civil life, service that involves as much responsibility, that involves as much risk of life and limb, as the Revenue-Cutter Service.

I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, I repeat, to emphasizing the military character of this great Republic. We are proud of our soldiery; we are proud of our magnificent Navy; but we must bear in mind all the time that the Army and Navy are only necessary in order that the great multitudes of the country may carry on and perform the civil functions of life—may carry on and perform their daily duties as they come to them. They are simply guardians and protectors of the more important activities of life, and should always be subordinate.

I can not understand why, if this bill should pass and the rank and pay of the Revenue-Cutter Service should be increased, that it will improve the efficiency of the service. The salaries of the Revenue-Cutter Service of this country are almost twice as high now as similar salaries for analogous services in foreign countries. While we are increasing our Navy and enlarging our Army—and judiciously so, because the situation of the country demands it—we must bear in mind all the time that the relative cost of the Army and Navy of this country is more than twice as great as the army and navy in any foreign country on the face of the earth.

I oppose this bill because it will impose upon the country an annual expenditure of $250,000 without any corresponding benefit. I believe this important service ought to be under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. I believe it ought to be classified with the civil service of the country. Its functions are directly and essentially civil. The fact that it may be detailed during time of war as an auxiliary for the Navy should no more characterize it and classify it as a branch of the military service than the fact that persons and property are subject to the same imperative requirement should make all the people of this country members of the military order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not sufficient familiarity with the details of this bill to go into a particular discussion of it. It is a striking illustration of the aggressiveness of the various branches of the public service in demanding more power and more pay, and Congress must stand like a wall of adamant against such encroachments or our revenues will not be sufficient to meet our ordinary expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, there are a number of reasons why this bill should not be enacted into law. In the first place, there is a great governmental principle involved, one that goes to the very root of our governmental system. The idea of the founders of this Government was that we should have no classes in this country; that every free American citizen should occupy the same position before the law that every other citizen of the country occupies.

We have abandoned that to some extent. We provided for the retirement of officers of the Army and the Navy. If I had been a member of Congress when those laws were originally enacted, I would have voted against them, because I believe that when we provide and give a sufficient salary for the officers of the Army and Navy it is their duty to provide for their future as much as it is my duty and your duty by economy and careful living to provide for our future.

It is true we have also provided for the retirement salary for United States judges. To a certain extent that was compelled, because the Constitution of the United States prohibited the retirement or decrease in the pay of a Federal judge. And it would have been necessary for us to allow men to sit on the Federal bench until they were incapacitated for service unless we had provided some means by which they might exercise the option of a retirement.

In principle it was just as wrong as the original enactment of the retirement pay of Army officers. It is not in keeping with the principles and intent of a republic. It is not in harmony with the great ideas of the founders of this Government, and it is with regret that I see this Congress, step by step and day by day, abandoning the principles on which we have founded this Republic and aping after and copying the systems in vogue in the monarchies of the old country.

They may have their classes there. They may recognize that certain classes of citizens are superior to other classes of citizens; that there is an aristocracy, and that aristocracy must be provided for and protected, but such a principle is not in harmony or keeping with our Government or our ideas.

We all see the effect that it has had on the Army and Navy circles of this country. They are made up of boys selected from the common masses of the country, of the common people, and by virtue of the training we give them at the Military and Naval Academies, by virtue of the fact that we give them to understand that they are to hold lifetime positions, that they are to be provided for as a separate class in the future, we are fast finding ourselves surrounded by a class of citizens that do not believe that they stand on the same basis and the same level with the ordinary American citizen.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how much further are we going along this line? Where are we going to stop? We have ingrafted the system as a part of the law of this country, so far as the Army and Navy are concerned. The pending bill proposes to carry the system into the Revenue-Cutter Service, and train these gentlemen in the same system, make them feel that they are wards of the Government for life, that they are a part of the Government, that even a Representative in Congress is not their equal, because, as some of them say, he comes and goes; that to-day he is here and to-morrow he is gone, but they remain with their power as long as their lives last.

There are not so many men or officers engaged in this Revenue-Cutter Service. I believe at present the total charge involved on the Federal Treasury a year is about $140,000 additional to what the service is now costing. Well, $140,000 is a considerable sum of money; but the amount of money involved is a mere bagatelle in comparison to the dangerous step you are about to take in this direction. Why? Is there a man in this House that believes in the principle? Is there a Democrat on the floor of this House that can assert, and is willing to assert, that the building up of these special classes is within the line of the doctrines of his party? No, Mr. Chairman.

The corruption that will destroy this Government in the end is not the corruption of bribery, not the power of the millionaire to come upon the floor of this House and corrupt the individual members of Congress, but the corruption that to-day faces the American people is the power of patronage, the power that is vested in the Executive by giving offices to members of Congress and Senators to warp their minds and warp their influence and change their votes on great questions and principles. That is where the danger lies, and it is a danger that is behind this bill.

The gentlemen who are advocating the bill I do not believe are earnestly in favor of it because they believe in the principle involved, but it is because they represent constituencies where the officers of these revenue-cutter boats are popular, where they have numerous friends among their constituents, and where these constituencies appeal to them, without a full knowledge of the step that is being taken, to pass this bill and give these men the additional pay and the retirement pay.

There is nothing in the world that makes as many bad laws and puts them on the statute books as the sympathy and the appeals to sympathy that are brought before this House. They say that here is a man who has rendered good and efficient service in this Revenue-Cutter system; that he has worked hard and earnestly, and done his duty. No doubt that is all true; that he has served up to the time when the span of his life is about to run out, and then they come here and appeal to our sympathy that we should provide for him in the future.

Mr. HEPBURN. Can I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did the gentleman support the naval personnel bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not. How many of the gentleman's constituents and my constituents, I will ask the honorable chairman of the committee, are in the same position that these gentlemen are in the war Revenue-Cutter Service?

How many able, honest, hard-working men have we got—has he got in his district and have I got in my district—who have worked for their families, paid their taxes, done their duty at home and to their country, who are now reaching the close of life, when their energy is gone, and they are no longer able to give their time to business or earning the salary that they were twenty-five years ago? And yet you would put the additional burden of taxes on these men in order to protect them here who have been comfortably taken care of by the Government, many of them for thirty or forty years.

But it will not stop here, Mr. Chairman. This is simply the beginning of the system. These gentlemen of the Revenue-Cutter Service are not naval officers nor Army officers. It is true in times of war they have been called upon to render services to their country and their country's flag, but no more so than many a gallant soldier who sits on the floor of this House who served as a volunteer officer or soldier. The revenue-cutter system from the beginning down to this time has been used for one purpose, and but for one purpose only, and that is to enforce the revenue laws of this country.

In order that we may prevent smuggling, look after our coast, and enforce the laws of the United States on sea as well as on land, it is necessary for us to have a police service at sea as well as on land. The revenue-cutter system and revenue-cutter officers and seamen are policemen of the sea. United States marshals and deputy marshals are the policemen on the land, so far as the United States Government is concerned.

Mr. SCUDDER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. SCUDDER. Is it not a fact that the United States marshals are exempt from military duty at all times?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I have not examined the statute. It is possibly true, because we have to maintain the laws of the country even during times of war. It is not so necessary to maintain the laws at sea when we may need a revenue cutter for other purposes at that time.

Mr. SCUDDER. Will the gentleman kindly state what civil officers render equal service?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought I made myself clear that they are the police officers in a broader sense of the term. They are police officers of the United States Government—that and nothing more.

Mr. BERRY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. BERRY. Have they not always in times of war been ordered into the service along with the Navy?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I admit that, and that they were good volunteers. They are good officers, and I have nothing against the service, but I say that they are no more entitled to be retired on three-fourths pay because they have acted as gallant officers when we have had a war than any other volunteer on the floor of this House.

Mr. SCUDDER. Have they the benefit of the provisions of the statutes in reference to volunteers?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To what does the gentleman refer?

Mr. SCUDDER. I mean, for instance, the two months' extra pay.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not say whether they receive it or not.

Mr. SCUDDER. As a matter of fact, they do not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well; that is a mere bagatelle.

Mr. SCUDDER. It is not "a bagatelle" when a man has to risk and perhaps sacrifice his life while in the service of the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, well, they are serving the United States Government now. They are being paid every month. The volunteers who received that extra pay were being mustered out of the service. They had to go home. They had lost their employment. They had to go back and find some new employment to engage in. The two months' additional pay was given to them upon being mustered out of the service, in order that they might have something in their pockets whilst they were thus seeking new employment to take the place of that which they lost when they answered their country's call.

But when these gentlemen of the Revenue-Cutter Service, at the conclusion of the war, were no longer occupied as a part of the Navy, but were relieved from such service, they were at once sent back to safe and sound positions under the pay of the Government of the United States. The two cases are very different.

Mr. SCUDDER. Will the gentleman say what would have been their condition, or the condition of their surviving families, if they had been wounded or killed?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They or their survivors would have had the same right, with respect to pensions, that any other volunteer has.

Mr. SCUDDER. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The Department has ruled otherwise.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I am mistaken in that matter, it will be the duty of this House to give pensions to those men as volunteers would be pensioned—to pension the particular men, but not to pension the whole crowd. Many of these men of the Revenue-Cutter Service who were assigned to duty in connection with the Spanish war never heard the shot of a hostile gun. You gentlemen propose to pension the whole crowd because some few of them have been gallant in the face of the enemy.

Mr. DRIGGS. When the gentleman speaks of these officers being employed in "safe and sound" positions in time of peace, I wish to ask him whether he considers that service in the expedition which was sent to Alaska, under the command of one of the lieutenants of this service, to rescue the sailors there, was a "safe and sound" position? Those men were one hundred and thirty-one days on the ice—on sledges or sleds drawn by Esquimo dogs.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I think the gentleman from Illinois very well answered that suggestion the other day——

Mr. DRIGGS. I do not think so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But as that gentleman is not here now, I take pleasure in repeating the answer—that there may be a few individuals in the Revenue-Cutter Service who have performed gallant feats and are entitled to corresponding reward, and if we wish to reward them for the services they performed, let them be rewarded; but do not drag in that matter here as a reason for urging that this whole corps shall be put on the retired list and their regular pay increased because a few men of that service have done their duty bravely.

Mr. DRIGGS. Is it not true that these men are absolutely under the orders of the Secretary of the Treasury, that they go wherever they are sent, just the same as if they were officers of the Army and Navy? What is the difference, so far as that matter is concerned, between an Army or Navy officer and an officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The great difference between a revenue-cutter officer and an officer of the Navy is that the two classes of men are engaged in different branches of the Government and in different services. The Navy officer is engaged to take care of his ship for purposes of war; the revenue-cutter officers are under the orders of the Secretary of the Treasury, as police officers and to protect the revenue, and for no other purpose.

Of course there are times when some of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service have been engaged in dangerous duty, but no more so than the deputy marshals. There are many deputy marshals and marshals who have lost their lives in the mountains of this country in trying to break up moonshine gangs—to drive out the "moonshiners." More of our men have lost their lives in enforcing the laws of this Government upon the land than these police officers of the sea.

The gentleman's argument carried to its full extent would be equivalent to saying that because, forsooth, revenue-cutter officers have performed good service, and because some of them have given their lives to enforcing the laws of the Government, therefore we must put all the officers of this service on the retired list. Carry that argument to the full extent and you must say because some deputy marshals or marshals have been killed in enforcing the laws of the Government, the men in that branch of the service must be put on a retired list and must be constituted a separate branch or corps of the Government service.

Mr. DRIGGS. The gentleman does not state my proposition aright. I am opposed to any kind of a retirement list, either for the Army, the Navy, or the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then there is no difference between us.

Mr. DRIGGS. But when we have a retirement provision applicable to one branch of the service, it is only fair and right that this other branch of the service, standing upon an equally meritorious footing, should be recognized.

Mr. KING. Why not repeal the whole thing?

Mr. DRIGGS. I think that a provision of this kind is as fair for these officers as for the others.

Mr. DINSMORE. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will allow me to ask whether he ever heard of any difficulty being encountered by the United States Government in procuring, under present conditions, proper officers for the Revenue-Marine Service?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The question of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] is a complete answer to the position of the gentlemen who are supporting this bill. These officers of this service are not willing to retire. I have not heard of any of them sending in their resignations to the Secretary of the Treasury; I have heard no complaint from the Secretary of the Treasury that he has not been able to find plenty of competent men able to fill positions under the present system and at the present salary.

Mr. SULZER. Does not the gentleman think that the man of the Revenue-Cutter Service who is compelled to work all the time during a period of peace, and who in time of war is ordered to the front by the President or the Secretary of the Navy, is entitled to just as much consideration as the graduates at the Academy at Annapolis who lead cotilions around Washington here for five or ten or fifteen or even thirty years without ever doing sea duty?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. DINSMORE. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] designate some of those naval officers who are "dancing cotillions" around Washington?

Mr. SULZER. I could give you the names of a great many of them. If you will take the Naval Register you will find the names of men who are wearing naval caps and naval epaulets who have not seen salt water in thirty years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, since the gentleman has finished—and I wanted to give him a chance to make a speech——

Mr. SCUDDER. Will the gentleman allow me just one further question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Go ahead.

Mr. SCUDDER. Is it not a fact that officers of the Army and the Navy are detailed for light-house service under the direction and jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that a similar service is performed by revenue-cutter officers, and that if perchance one of the Army or Navy officers performing such service should be disabled or injured in any way, he receives the full benefit of pension and retirement, whereas the revenue-marine officers injured in the same service have not that benefit?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think my friend's question has any more applicability to this than if he should say that because he finds an Admiral scrubbing the floor all the scrub women in the service must be put on the retired list. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCUDDER. The gentleman's illustration, I think, is as lame as his argument.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one more word, and I am through. If, when we come to vote on this question, we vote to put these men on a retired list—to set them apart in this safe service—this bill will be followed by bills making similar provision for the employees in the Weather Bureau and the Signal Service Corps and elsewhere. From every Department in Washington will come efforts to have men of one or another branch of the service put on the retired list.

And there will be no end to the additional charge which will be put on the Government. When we are asked to set up in this Government a class of officeholders who will receive special pay and emoluments, while the balance of the people are to pay the taxes that go to their support—when that day comes, as it will if you continue this system—then it may be truly said that the fabric of the temple in which this Republic of ours holds its seat is about to fall, and can no longer be sustained.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee from which this bill comes, I desire in my feeble way to oppose it, not altogether for the abuses contained in the bill itself, but because it is one of a series of provisions that in the end will prove disastrous to the country.

The pseudo military spirit abroad in this land is a great menace to our people. Our boys are impressed that the only way to distinction is through a military career. Our children are educated in so-called military schools, and every effort is made to turn the youth of the land from the walks of civil life.

This mock military spirit is destined, if not checked, to change our national character and arrest the progress of this Republic toward the goal of its true greatness—that of being the most enlightened, prosperous, and happy people in the world. Never was this evil tendency better illustrated than by this bill, providing that a lot of Federal police, constituted to prevent smuggling, shall be togged out with the trappings and rank of naval officers.

But I am opposed to this bill, Mr. Chairman, for another and a better reason. I am a Democrat. I am one of the everlastingly organized Democracy which has stood from the foundation of the Government until now opposed to all class legislation, and this bill is preeminently a piece of class legislation. It confers benefits upon the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service to the exclusion and at the expense of the rest of the people. We are told that they are efficient officers.

I am not prepared to dispute it. They should be, for they diligently sought the positions they hold and receive good pay. When they become dissatisfied with their jobs, they have the privilege to quit, and there are hundreds of others just as efficient ready to take their places. It is no more arduous or dangerous work in the Revenue-Cutter Service than at a Mississippi cotton gin, or in an Arkansas sawmill, or on a Missouri farm, and yet you want to tax these, tax all the rest of the people, in order to confer upon this Revenue-Cutter Service a special privilege at the expense of the great masses of the people.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. As you know, recently we have passed, or attempted to pass, from a constitutional form of government into an imperialistic one, and therefore it is eminently proper that we only have two classes of people—the taxpayer and the man who holds office, the tax eater.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I recognize that we are rapidly passing into the realm of imperialism, but the principle involved here is that of building up in this country an aristocracy, an officeholding aristocracy, which is to fatten at the expense of the taxpaying masses. This is only one of a series of officeholding classes to be pensioned or put on the retired list.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, whom I see sitting here, had introduced a bill, now pending, providing for pensioning the ens tire civil-service list. All of these classes are to be pensioned anretired on pay at the expense of the tax-paying masses of the people

These revenue-cutter officers entered the service voluntarily. They were not forced in, nor are they forced to remain.

The revenue-cutter officer has that which he made great effort to secure. He secured the place that many others sought and could not get. He lives on the fat of the land while those who failed struggle on through life's journey along the highway of poverty, living hard and paying taxes. When they get too old to work they fall as burdens upon the bounty of children or friends, or go "over the hill to the poorhouse." But this office-holding aristocrat who defeated them for the place they sought not only receives liberal compensation for his labors during the days of his competency to serve, but is retired on ample pay when too old to work. Such a system is rank injustice to the masses of the people.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. I am thoroughly in sympathy with what the gentleman says. Is there not about equal of merit in the Life-Saving Service and the Railway Mail Service?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Quite as much and more. There are many classes not appointed by the Federal Government who serve the people just as well as the class sought to be favored by this bill. Compare, for instance, this Revenue-Cutter Service with the railway service.

Think of the service and the peril of a crew in charge of a locomotive and train of cars sweeping across the country with the speed of lightning carrying the commerce of this people. Every time that brave engineer mounts that engine and starts out for a trip he takes his life in his hand. And yet, sir, by this bill you would tax him for the benefit of that would-be aristocrat who wants the rank and privileges of a naval officer.

The Government has already given him thirty years' service, and has paid him well. He has not had to look out for a stormy day. The United States furnished him a place to work, furnished the pay, and now he comes and says, "All these days have you taken care of me, Uncle Sam, have fed me the good things of life, and because I have fared better than my brethren, because I got this job and my competitors were turned down, I beseech you to tax these fellows that could not get jobs in order to give me a competency now that I am too old to further enjoy the place secured for me."

That is what is involved in this bill, nothing more or less. They are putting a tax on the farmer, the mechanic, and the laborer throughout the country to give special favors to men who have already received special benefits in having been selected over and above others just as good as themselves. If Revenue-Cutter Service officers can do better in other walks of life, in God's name, why do they not forego their perilous positions and go back to the private vocations?

If they can do better in the Revenue-Cutter Service, then let them cease complaining and out of their liberal pay lay up enough to keep them in their old age. That is what other people must do or suffer for their failure.

Now, then, what is involved in this? I can see how some who belong to the other party, which favors privileges for the few at the expense of the masses, may vote for the measure; but for these, my brethren on this side, I do not understand how they can take the position they do in advocating that the people of this country be taxed in order to confer a special favor upon a special class. It is in violation of the cardinal principle of Democracy.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Under the provisions of the bill now before the House 36 out of 37 captains in this service can be retired on full pay the moment the bill becomes a law.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is true, but it is not so enormous within itself if we knew that was to be the end of it. But it is the entering wedge that will open the way for far greater wrongs hereafter. Evils of this character do not all come at once. They creep upon us gradually and stealthily. To-day we will put the Revenue-Cutter Service on the retired list. Next will come the Life-Saving Service. Then the Weather Bureau service, and class after class will be saddled upon the taxpayers of the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, would we not better stop and take our bearings before we vote in favor of this measure which will be an awful example in the wrong direction. It will come by and by that the farmer, the mechanic, and the laborer will be the only people in the country who are not of the favored aristocracy, and they will have to foot all the bills. You are voting that condition on your country when you vote in favor of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, would it not be well if in this Chamber we sometimes considered the taxpayer? The gentleman in charge of this bill talks much about "the man behind the gun." Sir, I would commend to his consideration the man behind the plow, the man who from early morn to dewy eve must struggle to feed and clothe not only himself but the multitudinous aristocracy of taxeaters quartered upon him by class legislation of the character here proposed. Sir, whatever may become of "the man behind the gun," I shall be ever ready to raise my voice and cast my vote for the man behind the plow.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 3819. An act for the relief of the widows and children of William Ryan and John S. Taylor, deceased;

H. R. 13803. An act to amend section 19 of chapter 252, Twenty-ninth Statutes at Large, approved May 28, 1896; and

H. R. 5220. An act for the relief of Charles M. Kennerly.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6048. An act to amend chapter 559 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, approved March 3, 1891; and

S. 6054. An act authorizing the Texas and Pacific Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River, Louisiana.

The message also announced that the Senate had still further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13729) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, numbered 2 and 3, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. CHANDLER, and Mr. BUTLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10899. An act to restore to the public domain a small tract of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona;

H. R. 7571. An act to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12396. An act to amend an act entitled "an act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act; and

H. R. 11598. An act for the relief of Frank B. Case.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7760) for the relief of James Kelly, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] such time as I have remaining.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I confess to being somewhat surprised at this debate. I am especially surprised at the earnest attacks upon this bill that have been made by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. That committee at times carefully considered this bill; and during all the deliberations of the committee no one of our colleagues brought to us the knowledge of their opposition to the measure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will pardon me. I never in the committee heard this bill discussed or referred to; and I believe I have not missed any meetings of the committee which took place while I was in the city.

Mr. HEPBURN. I beg to differ with the gentleman. I know that he was present when this bill was considered; and I know that no word of dissent came from him. He has characterized this bill as the most vicious piece of legislation that has been introduced in this House.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will permit me to say that I was not present in the committee at any time when this bill was considered.

Mr. HEPBURN. No word of dissent had there been from the gentleman at any time until he took the floor. There is no minority report here, and my associates on the committee time and again, one after another, while the gentleman was making his assault upon the bill, came to me and expressed profound astonishment that with the ideas he expressed in this House he had all the time been silent while the bill was under consideration in the committee.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the agreement to report this bill was reached at a committee meeting when I was not present. I understood at the time it was not discussed in the committee for fifteen minutes. I know nothing about that, however.

Mr. HEPBURN. Evidently the gentleman does not.

Mr. MANN. "The gentleman" was not present, and knows he was not.

Mr. HEPBURN. I was a little surprised at the reasons which my friend from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] gave for opposing this bill. After a few preliminary remarks he announced to the House that he was opposed to this bill because he was a Democrat and because the bill was special legislation and proposed special benefits to somebody. I do not know but that is a fair type of Missouri Democracy, for I have noticed that while the gentleman claims to be animated by those ideas, yet when it comes to an appropriation or legislation for his locality he always votes "aye."

Can the gentleman, in all his legislative experience, point to a negative vote when the affirmative proposed to take a dollar into his district? When we propose a $200,000 appropriation for seeds, of which my friend, like myself, gets a quota, he votes "aye." When there is a proposition to give $5,000,000 for a great show in a great city only a little way from his own he forgets his Democratic principles, forgets that this is a special privilege to a few, and votes "aye." [Laughter and applause.] When there is a proposition pending in the river and harbor bill to improve the harbor—God save the word!—of his city, the gentleman votes "aye." When he has an opportunity to vote for the Southern Railway mail subsidy, I think he votes "aye;" but I may be mistaken.

A MEMBER. He voted "aye."

Mr. HEPBURN. So when we take the gentleman's votes in connection with his declaration that he is a Democrat, we have an accurate definition of what Missouri Democracy is. Prate before the public about special privileges; prate about the importance of saving the money of the dear people; prate about love for the poor taxpayer, and vote for all the appropriations you can get for your district. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I think there is a great deal of misinformation in this House in regard to this bill. It has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois that the men who are connected with this service are not educated men.

Mr. MANN. I made no such statement.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will not bandy words with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman must not misstate what I said.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman forgets in the excitement of making his speech what his utterances are.

Mr. MANN. They are pretty well taken down.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman reminds me of a graphophone. It is an admirable instrument for correct repetition, but when you want to ascertain the veracity of the statement you must discover the fellow who has talked into it at the other end. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman at least must make statements that are true.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will not yield on a misstatement.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman from Illinois can be taught the rules of the House I would be glad.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes gentlemen will follow the well-understood rules of the House and address the Chair, and the Chair will also address the gentleman speaking, and try to preserve order.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a set of examination papers for admission into the school in which the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service are taught the examinations they must take. They must secure a pecentage of 75. Here are the subjects: Arithmetic, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, grammar, English literature, geography, chemistry, physics, history, and French. They are in the school for two years. I have here a sample examination, and if the gentleman's arithmetic, algebra, and geometry are no better than his law, he could not pass an examination. [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman made the statement that these men——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What is the average wages of school-teachers in your district?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think that is pertinent at all. The examination requires a scholarship far in advance of the average school-teacher in my State, to say nothing of Missouri. [Laughter.]

The gentleman made a statement the other day that no officer could retire in the Army or Navy until he had reached an age service of 45 years in one, and 40 in the other. He repeated it over and over. He held up a clause in this bill that authorizes the retirement, in the discretion of the President, at the end of thirty years' service as an outrage incomparable; and yet I find the law, that the gentleman might have found if he had been of an inquiring mind, in section 1243 of the Revised Statutes:

When an officer has been thirty years in service he may, upon his own application, in the discretion of the President, be so retired and placed on the retired list.

Now, we have in the bill that the gentleman voted for, I think, the naval personnel bill, a provision whereby—

An officer may, in the discretion of the President, be retired at any time.

Not even five years of service are necessary; and under certain circumstances, without his own volition, without having committed crime, he may be summarily retired if four of a board of five admirals elect to so recommend him, without regard to time of service.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I call the attention of the gentleman to sections 16 and 17. Section 16 provides——

Mr. HEPBURN. I would be glad if the gentleman would not interrupt.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I was going to ask the gentleman a question. Section 16 provides for the retirement of an employee of the Government if a board shall find that he is incapacitated because of his own vicious habits.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McDERMOTT. And it is provided in the next section that officers retired from the service shall be entitled to one year's pay of the rank held by them at the date of such retirement. How does the gentleman justify that when the man has been discharged by reason of his own vicious habits?

Mr. HEPBURN. The difference between that and the provisions in regard to the Navy is that in the Navy he gets the pay of the grade next above that which he fills.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Why should we pay one year's salary if the man is dismissed by the Federal Government?

Mr. HEPBURN. So far as I am concerned, I am entirely willing, and I do not know but what I would be better satisfied with the bill if that section should be out of it; but it was placed there to assimilate the retirement procedure of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. SCUDDER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SCUDDER. In the case of a Navy officer retired under the circumstances stated by the gentleman from New Jersey, is not his retirement for life on a percentage of his pay?

Mr. HEPBURN. Of a grade higher.

Mr. SCUDDER. So he is paid notwithstanding he is retired for vicious habits, and is retired a grade higher and at half pay?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not examined.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman pardon a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman's reference to section 1243 to read that it permitted Army officers to retire after thirty years' service?

Mr. HEPBURN. I did.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentlman would read the statute through again, because the statute says forty years' service.

Mr. HEPBURN. That shows what interruption does, and that declaration shows the inaccuracy of the gentleman, and shows how little he investigates a subject before he discusses it. I will read the whole section:

When the officer has served forty consecutive years as a commissioned officer, he shall, if he makes application therefor to the President, be retired from active service and placed upon the retired list.

There the President has no volition.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understood the gentleman read as thirty years.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing the reading):

When the officer has been thirty years in service he may, upon his own application, in the discretion of the President, be so retired and placed on the retired list.

Is the gentleman satisfied now?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman when he read the section did read thirty instead of forty.

Mr. HEPBURN. I read the latter clause of the section; that applied to the subject I was discussing.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that these officers ought to be placed upon the plane with the officers of the Navy. I believe that they are entitled to be so placed by reason of their service and its character, by reason of their fitness, and because it would only be a proper recognition of their worth. This House a few years ago passed an act putting them in the Navy, with the rank and pay and all the emoluments of officers of their grade in the Navy. It passed this House.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I find in section 1492, Revised Statutes, that the "officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service when serving, in accordance with law, as a part of the Navy, shall be entitled to relative rank as follows: Captains, with and next after lieutenants commanding in the Navy," etc. I would like to ask my friend if there is any good reason why the words "and next after" are eliminated or left out of this bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. When the bill was originally drafted the intent was to put them upon terms of absolute equality; when they were serving together to give them the same rank, but there has been criticism with regard to that, and it is the purpose of the committee to offer an amendment that will make the section in this bill conform to the section that the gentleman has read.

These officers are taught in all the requisites of naval efficiency. They have the same course in gunnery and in all that pertains to the management and the fighting of ships that the naval cadet has. They study the same text-books, they have precisely the same scholarship, with this difference, that they are required under their regulations to frequent rehearsal, so to speak, frequent practice; and they are, for the purposes of war, ship for ship, the full equal and equivalent of anything we have in the United States Navy of the same size.

We have in the service a number of ships of more than 1,500 tons. Nelson never commanded a ship so large. Every ship in the service of the forty and odd are armed ships. They are ready for service at any time. Their crews are constantly and perfectly drilled. They are in every essential the equal of those now in the Navy, with the exception that the Navy has the larger ships. Their service is infinitely more arduous. I make the statement that the officers of this service, with a very few exceptions, are now on shipboard; they are kept on shipboard. There is no extended leave; there are no fat, soft places.

I want to remind gentlemen that that is not true in regard to the naval service. This day, this moment, counting the 94 retired officers in the Navy on leave in the city of Washington, there are 300 naval officers within 40 miles of your capital on shore duty. A tour of three years at sea, a term of three years on shore in some fat, comfortable places. There are now 1,013 officers afloat.

There are nearly 700 of the naval officers ashore to-day, filling mainly civilian positions and drawing their pay.

These men in the Revenue-Cutter Service, on the contrary, are in actual service. You find our revenue cutters all over the world; some you will find in Bering Sea; some you will find in Manila; some you will find in Cuba and Porto Rico, and others along our coasts. When a naval officer sees an approaching storm, if he is near a port, he goes there, perhaps, for safety, but when the storm comes, and when there is peril on the sea, these men go out of a comfortable harbor and face the storm. Their duties are incessant; there is no class of men in the public service so poorly paid.

A few years ago, there being no provision for retirement, there was a larger number of the older officers and officers of higher rank incapacitated. Congress passed an act for their retirement. Thirty-nine have been retired. Now there is an accumulation of eleven, I am told, past the age of usefulness and yet filling the higher places. They ought to be provided for. The humane gentleman from Chicago says, "Turn them out." The old horse is no longer useful. These men have served, boy and man, in war and peace, for forty, and some for fifty years, and the gentleman from Illinois, in his humanity, says, "Turn them out, and get rid of them." Ah, I would trust even him; I would trust even his humanity. He would not turn them out. But if he did not, he would be compelled to allow them to cumber the service.

They can not render an equivalent; they can not perform the duty; and yet they prevent the younger men, the men who ought to be promoted as a reward for service, from having that rank that is their due and that it is our duty to give to them. I say that the gentleman from Missouri is wrong when he discusses this proposition as though promotion was a great benefit that we were conferring upon these officers alone. What is the theory of promotion compensation? It is to secure the better service. It is to enable the men serving to believe that there is a grateful and just and righteous Government that he is serving; that it is ready to reward him for what he does.

It holds out an incentive to him for better and better and better service; it gives to him that stimulus for growth that we all want. We want efficiency in our service. We want the best men, we want the growing men, we want the man who knows something more of his professional duties when he goes to bed than he did when he rose in the morning. We want him to have constant stimulus before him of preferment if he properly serves; and so it seems to me that we ought not to make an exception of this service.

Mind you, gentlemen, that if this bill is passed no man is elevated to a rank so great that he can not serve. There is no rank in this bill higher than captain. The gentlemen who voted a little while ago for the naval personnel bill provided for 18 admirals. How many squadrons have we? How many fleets have we; how many places where these gentlemen can serve? Only 5; and 13 of these admirals are now ashore. The gentleman voted for that.

The gentleman the other day voted for a proposition under which it is possible, so far as the law is concerned, to increase that number by 30. We have 13 supernumeraries, and the gentleman voted for the possible addition of 30 more. Not only that, but to fill the places of 30 captains with 30 commanders, and, in turn, their places with 30 lieutenant-commanders, and so on all along the line; so that there might be, possibly, a condition that the boy from Annapolis as an ensign might, perchance, have his promotion within a year. That was all right, the gentleman thought.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill ought to pass. There is an objection in the minds of many, fearing that it creates something in the nature of a civil pension. I want to remind you that the duties of these officers are not civil any more than are the duties of a naval officer. The difference between the two is this: A naval officer in time of peace has nothing to do. When we are at war the revenue-cutter officer does all that the naval officer does, and when we are at peace he then takes up the vocation of an aid to the Secretary of the Treasury in collecting the customs revenue.

Let me correct the gentleman from Indiana—that it is not the internal revenue. I say for the information of that gentleman—and I only refer to it because it illustrates the vast fund of information that all these gentlemen have on the subject—that he was incorrect when he suggested that the revenue-cutter officer aids in the collection of the internal revenue.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I thank the gentleman for the information and the correction. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman very naturally fell into the mistake from the remark made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Illinois is very fearful that the revenue-cutter officers may come in contact when serving together with the Army officers, and that there will be infinite confusion. Why, if the gentleman will stop to think, he will remember that the troops, as I understand that term, operate on the land, while the naval officers maneuver their ships upon the sea. [Laughter.] There would be no possible conflict, without the gentleman devised some method by which our soldiers could walk upon the water, or some other method by which our ships could be compelled to maneuver upon the land. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to thank the gentleman for that information. I think the country is under great obligations to him.

Mr. HEPBURN. Ordinarily it would not have been necessary to refer to primary ideas of this kind. It is only proper in this case in order to meet that density of ignorance which seems to have animated the opponents of this bill. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion? He spoke a few moments ago about walking upon the water. Does he not remember that a namesake of his in olden times once walked upon the water?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, my recollection is that he did not make much headway. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. The difficulty in that case was a want of faith. If these gentlemen of the revenue marine had sufficient faith, perhaps they might walk on the water.

Mr. HEPBURN. My namesake lost his grip. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill ought to pass. I believe we ought to care for these old men in the service. Gentlemen speak of this measure as if it were a new proposition. They forget that we have already done partial justice to this class of men. This legislation is not new. Thirty-seven of these officers have been placed upon the retired list.

The gentleman from Missouri thinks that there ought not to be an increase of salary because there have been no resignations in this branch of the service by reason of the insufficiency of the present salary. I do not think there is very much in that argument. A man fits himself for a position. He studies for years in a college and ultimately secures an appointment to this revenue-cutter training school, the Chase school-ship. He there goes through a tutelage for additional years. He fits himself for a particular profession. He is young. He thinks that the position of an ensign is extremely desirable. He enters the service. He goes on day after day, conscious that he is not receiving fit compensation; yet because of a fear, possibly, of going out into the world to "rustle"—having lost that habit or having never gained it—he goes on and on and on, not content, satisfied that he is suffering injustice, yet like thousands of other men, as seen in the examples in every part of this city, he submits rather than go into the world and begin life anew.

There have been efforts time and again to secure something of amelioration for the condition of these officers. As I said before, this House once passed an act making these officers a part of the Navy, giving them all the advantages of naval rank and pay. That bill passed this House by a vote, I think, of 114 to 19. It went to the Senate in the last days, I believe, of a long session. And in the interim the naval gentlemen asserted their opposition. I think that the Secretary of the Navy to-day is in favor of this change; but for some reason or other naval officers do not desire it.

A gentleman says they are jealous. I do not think that is true; but it may be that the spirit lately expressed by one of the high officers of the Navy—a man whom I always honored until I saw his late letter; a man for whose interest I was solicitous—animates some of the naval officers. They may feel, as he seems to feel, that the man who fails to have the educational advantages of a Naval Academy is unfit to represent a country like this upon the quarter-deck. I am glad to believe there are but few men here who sympathize with that feeling. I hope it does not exist to any considerable degree. But if it does, I want to see it stifled now and always. [Applause.] It is un-American.

I remember that a little while ago people throughout this country were sounding the praises of "the man who stood behind the gun." I remember that everywhere we were contrasting our shots and their effectiveness with those delivered from other than American cannon. I remember it was said with pride that of all the shots fired from our fleet at Santiago eight in every hundred took effect. A wonderful record, it was claimed.

You must remember that it was "the man behind the gun" who won the glory at Santiago and at Manila. All the glory that there is for any part of the Navy is that which comes in time of war. And I have thought that the man who was able to play his full part—the man who was able to draw upon himself the attention of all the world when we were in the stress and storm of battle, "the man behind the gun"—might be the man who would properly represent the American people anywhere where our Navy might go. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he is prepared now to say what time he desires for further debate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand there are several gentlemen on this side of the House who are still desirous to be heard on the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the committee now rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. MANN. I rise to a point of order on that motion. I submit that the proper form of the motion should be that the committee rise.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to request the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to withhold that motion for a short time. I desire to be heard a little longer on this question.

Mr. HEPBURN. The opposition has had two hours for debate—a quarter of an hour more than we have had. I am unwilling to yield for further debate.

Mr. MANN. I rise to a point of order on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Iowa, which was "that the committee now rise for the purpose of closing debate."

Mr. HEPBURN. That was my explanation of my purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not put the motion in that form. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Division.

Mr. HOPKINS. That comes too late. The Chair had announced the result, and the Speaker had taken the gavel.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules that point of order. There was no objection. The Chair will state when stating the motion he was looking directly at the gentleman from Alabama and he did not make a motion until the Chair had made the declaration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Chair will hear me a moment; it is usual, when the Chair states the question, to say, "In the opinion of the Chair the 'ayes' have it," and then, if there is no demand for a division, to state "The 'ayes' have it." The Chair did not state that.

The CHAIRMAN. I agree to that. The Chair will explain. The Chair supposed that this was a sort of unanimous agreement to rise and went through the formula a little more rapidly than usual, and if the gentleman says he was misled by the statement of the Chair, the Chair will order a division.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think there are other members who have rights as well as the gentleman from Alabama. I heard the Chair distinctly make the statement, and the Speaker had taken the gavel and resumed his duties as Speaker before the gentleman from Alabama made the point.

Mr. MANN. If that change had been made, I ask the gentleman how the Chairman has the gavel now?

Mr. HOPKINS. He handed it back to the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists on a division, the Chair will order one.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I understand the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee desires to take up the war-revenue bill, or the conference report upon that; and therefore I will not insist on the division.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes have it, and the committee determines to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5499 and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker——

WAR-REVENUE REDUCTION.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up a conference report.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report may be dispensed with, and that the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report may be dispensed with, and that the statement may be read in the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12394) "to amend an act entitled 'an act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes,' approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the House bill and agree to the same amended so as to read as follows:

That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"That there shall be paid, in lieu of the tax of $1 now imposed by law, a tax of $1.60 on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors, brewed or manufactured and sold, or stored in warehouse, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquors may be called, for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons; and at a like rate for any other quantity or for the fractional parts of a barrel authorized and defined by law. And section 3339 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended accordingly: Provided, That in lieu of or in addition to the present requirements of law in that respect, all stamps used for denoting the tax upon fermented liquors or other taxes may, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, be canceled by perforations to be made in such manner and form as the Commissioner may by regulations prescribe."

SEC. 2. That section 2 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That special taxes shall be, and hereby are, imposed annually as follows, that is to say:

"1. Bankers using or employing a capital not exceeding the sum of $25,000 shall pay $50; when using or employing a capital exceeding $25,000, for every additional thousand dollars in excess of $25,000, $2, and in estimating capital surplus shall be included. The amount of such annual tax shall in all cases be computed on the basis of the capital and surplus for the preceding fiscal year. In the case of bankers who were not in business in the preceding fiscal year the tax shall be computed on the capital at the time of commencing business. Every person, firm, or company, and every incorporated or other bank, having a place of business where credits are opened by the deposit or collection of money or currency, subject to be paid or remitted upon draft, check, or order, or where money is advanced or loaned on stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes, or where stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes are received for discount or sale shall be a banker under this act: Provided, That any savings bank having no capital stock, and whose business is confined to receiving deposits and loaning or investing the same for the benefit of its depositors, and which does no other business of banking, shall not be subject to this tax.

"2. Brokers shall pay $50. Every person, firm, or company, whose business it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, bonds, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank notes, promissory notes, or other securities for themselves or others, shall be regarded as a broker: Provided, That any person having paid the special tax as a banker shall not be required to pay the special tax as a broker.

"3. Pawnbrokers shall pay $20. Every person, firm, or company whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of money loaned thereon, shall be deemed a pawnbroker.

"4. Custom-house brokers shall pay $10. Every person, firm, or company whose occupation it is, as the agent of others, to arrange entries and other custom-house papers, or transact business at any port of entry relating to the importation or exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be regarded as a custom-house broker.

"5. Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls in cities having more than 25,000 population, as shown by the last preceding United States census, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater: Provided, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease.

"6. The proprietor or proprietors of circuses shall pay $100. Every building, space, tent, or area where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports or theatrical performances are exhibited shall be regarded as a circus: Provided, That no special tax paid in one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be imposed for exhibitions within any one State, Territory, or District.

"7. Proprietors or agents of all other public exhibitions or shows for money not enumerated in this section shall pay $10: Provided, That a special tax paid in one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall not exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be required for exhibitions within any one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

"8. Proprietors of bowling alleys and billiard rooms shall pay $5 for each alley or table. Every building or place where bowls are thrown or where games of billiards or pool are played, and that are open to the public with or without price, shall be regarded as a bowling alley or a billiard room, respectively."

SEC. 3. That the internal-revenue tax on cigars weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand shall be $3 per thousand; and the tax on cigars weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand shall be 18 cents per pound, and on cigarettes weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand and of a wholesale value or price of not more than $2 per thousand shall be 18 cents per pound; and the tax on cigarettes weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand and of a wholesale value or price of more than $2 per thousand shall be 36 cents per pound; and all such cigars and cigarettes weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand shall for purposes of taxation be held and considered as weighing 3 pounds.

SEC. 4. That there shall be allowed a discount of 20 per cent on all sales by collectors to manufacturers of tobacco and snuff upon the stamps provided for the payment of internal-revenue taxes upon manufactured tobacco and snuff: Provided, That in addition to the packages of smoking tobacco now authorized by law there shall be packages of 2 ounces, 3 ounces, and 4 ounces: And provided further, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco and snuff, and cigars, held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such discount or reduction of tax shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of such discount or reduction of tax, but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been presented within sixty days following the date of the reduction; and no claim shall be allowed or drawback paid for a less amount than $10. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect.

SEC. 5. That section 6 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the words "medicines, preparations, matters, and things," in the last paragraph of said section, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "wines," so that the section as amended shall read as follows:

"ADHESIVE STAMPS.

"SEC. 6. That on and after the 1st day of July, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect of the several bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock and of indebtedness, and other documents, instruments, matters, and things mentioned and described in Schedule A of this act, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which such instruments, matters, or things, or any of them, shall be written or printed by any person or persons, or party who shall make, sign, or issue the same, or for whose use or benefit the same shall be made, signed, or issued, the several taxes or sums of money set down in figures against the same, respectively, or otherwise specified or set forth in the said schedule.

"And there shall also be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect to the wines mentioned and described in Schedule B of this act, manufactured, sold, or removed for sale, the several taxes or sums of money set down in words or figures against the same, respectively, or otherwise specified or set forth in Schedule B of this act."

SEC. 6. That section 9 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the proviso, so that the section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That in any and all cases where an adhesive stamp shall be used for denoting any tax imposed by this act, except as hereinafter provided, the person using or affixing the same shall write or stamp thereupon the initials of his name and the date upon which the same shall be attached or used, so that the same may not again be used. And if any person shall fraudulently make use of an adhesive stamp to denote any tax imposed by this act without so effectually canceling and obliterating such stamp, except as before mentioned, he, she or they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court."

SEC. 7. That section 13 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the words "Schedule A of," and also by inserting in the first proviso, after the words "bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock or of indebtedness," the words "or any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act;" so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That any person or persons who shall register, issue, sell, or transfer, or who shall cause to be issued, registered, sold, or transferred, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in this act, without the same being duly stamped, or having thereupon an adhesive stamp for denoting the tax chargeable thereon, and canceled in the manner required by law, with intent to evade the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $50, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court; and such instrument, document, or paper, not being stamped according to law, shall be deemed invalid and of no effect: Provided, That hereafter, in all cases where the party has not affixed to any instrument the stamp required by law thereon at the time of issuing, selling, or transferring the said bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock or of indebtedness; or any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act, and he or they, or any party having an interest therein, shall be subsequently desirous of affixing such stamp to said instrument, or, if said instrument be lost, to a copy thereof, he or they shall appear before the collector of internal revenue of the proper district, who shall, upon the payment of the price of the proper stamp required by law, and of a penalty of $10, and, where the whole amount of the tax denoted by the stamp required shall exceed the sum of $50, on payment also of interest, at the rate of 6 per cent, on said tax from the day on which such stamp ought to have been affixed, affix the proper stamp to such bond, debenture, certificate of stock or of indebtedness or copy, or instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act, and note upon the margin thereof the date of his so doing and the fact that such penalty has been paid; and the same shall thereupon be deemed and held to be as valid to all intents and purposes as if stamped when made or issued: And provided further, That where it shall appear to said collector, upon oath or otherwise, to his satisfaction, that any such instrument has not been duly stamped, at the time of making or issuing the same, by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any willful design to defraud the United States of the stamp, or to evade or delay the payment thereof, then and in such case, if such instrument, or, if the original be lost, a copy thereof, duly certified by the officer having charge of any records in which such original is required to be recorded, or otherwise duly proven to the satisfaction of the collector, shall, within twelve calendar months after the making or issuing thereof, be brought to the said collector of internal revenue to be stamped, and the stamp tax chargeable thereon shall be paid, it shall be lawful for the said collector to remit the penalty aforesaid and to cause such instrument to be duly stamped.

"And when the original instrument, or a certified or duly proven copy thereof, as aforesaid, duly stamped so as to entitle the same to be recorded, shall be presented to the clerk, register, recorder, or other officer having charge of the original record, it shall be lawful for such officer, upon the payment of the fee legally chargeable for the recording thereof, to make a new record thereof, or to note upon the original record the fact that the error or omission in the stamping of said original instrument has been corrected pursuant to law; and the original instrument or such certified copy, or the record thereof, may be used in all courts and places in the same manner and with like effect as if the instrument had been originally stamped: And provided further, That in all cases where the party has not affixed the stamp required by law upon any such instrument issued, registered, sold, or transferred at a time when and at a place where no collection district was established, it shall be lawful for him or them, or any party having an interest therein, to affix the proper stamp thereto, or, if the original be lost, to a copy thereof. But no right acquired in good faith before the stamping of such instrument, or copy thereof, as herein provided, if such record be required by law, shall in any manner be affected by such stamping as aforesaid."

SEC. 8. That Schedule A of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SCHEDULE A.

"STAMP TAXES.

"1. Bonds, debentures, or certificates of indebtedness issued after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1898, by any association, company, or corporation, on each hundred dollars of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents, and on each original issue, whether on organization or reorganization, of certificates of stock by any such association, company, or corporation, on each hundred dollars of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents, and on all sales, or agreements to sell, or memoranda of sales or deliveries or transfers of shares or certificates of stock in any association, company, or corporation, whether made upon or shown by the books of the association, company, or corporation, or by any assignment in blank, or by any delivery, or by any paper or agreement or memorandum or other evidence of transfer or sale, whether entitling the holder in any manner to the benefit of such stock, or to secure the future payment of money or for the future transfer of any stock, on each hundred dollars of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents: Provided, That in case of sale where the evidence of transfer is shown only by the books of the company the stamp shall be placed upon such books; and where the change of ownership is by transfer certificate the stamp shall be placed upon the certificate; and in cases of an agreement to sell or where the transfer is by delivery of the certificate assigned in blank there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale, to which the stamp shall be affixed; and every bill or memorandum of sale or agreement to sell before mentioned shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers.

"And any person or persons liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person or persons, who shall make any such sale, or who shall in pursuance of any such sale deliver any such stock, or evidence of the sale of any such stock or bill or memorandum thereof, as herein required, without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, with intent to evade the foregoing provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

"2. Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell any products or merchandise at any exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, either for present or future delivery, for each $100 in value of said sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell, 1 cent, and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 1 cent: Provided, That on every sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell as aforesaid there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, to which there shall be affixed a lawful stamp or stamps in value equal to the amount of the tax on such sale.

"And every such bill, memorandum, or other evidence of sale or agreement to sell shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers; and any person or persons liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person or persons, who shall make any such sale or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, or who shall, in pursuance of any such sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, deliver any such products or merchandise without a bill, memorandum, or other evidence thereof as herein required, or who shall deliver such bill, memorandum, or other evidence of sale, or agreement to sell without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, with intent to evade the foregoing provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That no bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, in case of products or merchandise actually delivered to, and while in vessel, boat, or car, and actually in course of transportation, shall be subject to this tax, provided such bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell shall be accompanied by bills of lading or vouchers showing that the said products are actually in course of transportation as aforesaid.

"3. From and after the 1st day of April, 1901, every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who or which shall in his, its, or their own behalf, or as agent, engage in the business of making or offering to make contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions respecting the purchase or sale, or purchase and sale, of any grain, provisions, raw or unmanufactured cotton, stock, bonds, or other securities wherein both parties thereto, or such person, association, copartnership, or corporation above named, contemplate or intend that such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall be or may be closed, adjusted, or settled according or with reference to the public market quotations of prices made on any board of trade or exchange upon which the commodities or securities referred to in said contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions are dealt in, and without a bona fide transaction on such board of trade or exchange, or wherein both parties, or such person, association, copartnership, or corporation above named, shall contemplate or intend that such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall be or may be deemed closed or terminated when the public market quotations of prices made on such board of trade or exchange for the articles or securities named in such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions shall reach a certain figure, and every person, association, copartnership, and corporation who or which shall in his or its own behalf or as agent conduct what is commonly known as a "bucket shop" shall pay a stamp tax of 2 cents on each $100 in value or fraction thereof, of the merchandise covered or pretended to be covered, and also a tax of 2 cents on each $100 on the face value or fraction thereof, of all stocks, bonds, or other securities covered or pretended to be covered by each and all of such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions: Provided, however, That the payment of any tax imposed by this paragraph shall not be held or construed to exempt any such person, association, copartnership, or corporation from any penalty or punishment provided by the laws of any State for carrying on such business, or the making of such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions within such State, or in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such business or the making of any such contracts, agreements, trades, or transactions contrary to the laws of such State, or in any place prohibited by municipal law; and on or before the 1st day of April, 1901, every such person, association, copartnership, or corporation, as aforesaid, shall, for each office or place of business, and for each branch office or place of business wherever established, pay a special tax of $12.50, and on or before the 1st day of July, 1901, and annually thereafter, for every such office or branch office, a special tax of $50, and such taxes shall be in addition to all other special taxes imposed by this act.

"Every person, association, copartnership, or corporation proposing to engage in or continue the business aforesaid shall, before commencing such business, file with the collector or proper deputy collector of the district in which it is proposed to carry on such business a notice in writing under oath, and in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, stating the name of the person, association, copartnership, or corporation intending to engage in such business, the names of the members of any such association or copartnership, and the names of the officers of any such corporation, together with the residences of all the individuals whose names are thus required, and the place (including street number) where such business is to be carried on, and it shall be the duty of the collector of internal revenue to keep in his office a book in which shall be recorded a complete copy of all such notices, and such book shall be open to public inspection.

"Every person, association, copartnership, or corporation conducting or transacting the business aforesaid shall keep or cause to be kept just and true books of account, wherein shall be plainly and legibly recorded on the day of the making of every such contract, agreement, trade, or transaction a complete and exact specification thereof, including the date thereof, the other party thereto, and the quantity, price, and the gross amount in value of each article or commodity covered or pretended to be covered by each such contract, agreement, trade, or transaction, and such books shall at all reasonable times and hours be subject to the inspection of the collector, deputy collector, and the inspector of internal revenue or any duly authorized agent of the Internal Revenue Department, and every such person, association, copartnership, or corporation shall deliver to the other party to each such contract, agreement, trade, or transaction, at the time of making the same, a written memorandum also containing the complete and exact specification thereof, above referred to, to which the proper stamp shall be, before delivery, affixed.

"Every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who shall, in his or their own behalf, or as agent, engage in or continue in the business hereinbefore defined without having filed the notice herein required, or who shall fail or refuse to keep any such book or make any return, report, or affidavit required as aforesaid, or shall make a false, fraudulent, or partial return, report, or affidavit, or shall fail or refuse to deliver a written memorandum, as hereinbefore required, or shall in any other respect violate any of the provisions of this paragraph, shall, besides being liable for the amount of the tax or taxes herein prescribed, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense, pay a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than five thousand dollars, or be imprisoned not less than three months nor more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court. All provisions of law now in force relating to the collection, recovery, and enforcement of taxes, fines, and penalties imposed under the law concerning internal revenue and not inconsistent with the provisions of this paragraph shall extend and apply to the recovery and enforcement of the taxes, fines, and penalties imposed by this paragraph.

"4. Bill of exchange (inland), draft, or order for the payment of any sum of money, otherwise than at sight or on demand, and for each renewal of the same, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents; and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents.

"5. Bill of exchange (foreign) or letter of credit (including orders by telegraph or otherwise for the payment of money issued by express or other companies or any person or persons), drawn in but payable out of the United States, if drawn singly or otherwise than in a set of three or more, according to the custom of merchants and bankers, shall pay for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents, and for each $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents.

"If drawn in sets of two or more: For every bill of each set, where the sum made payable shall not exceed $100, or the equivalent thereof, in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard of value fixed by the United States, 1 cent; and for each $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 1 cent. Excepting that bills of exchange drawn against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries shall not be subject to this tax, provided that such bills of exchange shall be accompanied by proper invoices, and receipts, bills of lading, or vouchers, showing that goods of a value at least equal to the amount for which said bill of exchange may be drawn shall have been exported.

"6. Freight: It shall be the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, carrier, or corporation, or person whose occupation is to act as such, except persons, companies, or corporations engaged in carrying on a local or other express business, to issue to the shipper or consignor, or his agent, or person from whom any goods are accepted for transportation, a bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt and forwarding for each shipment received for carriage and transportation, whether in bulk or in boxes, bales, packages, bundles, or not so inclosed or included; and there shall be duly attached and canceled, as is in this act provided, to each of said bills of lading, manifests, or other memorandum, and to each duplicate thereof, a stamp of the value of 1 cent: Provided, That but one bill of lading shall be required on bundles or packages of newspapers when inclosed in one general bundle at the time of shipment. Any failure to issue such bill of lading, manifest, or other memorandum, as herein provided, shall subject such railroad or steamboat company, carrier, or corporation, or person to a penalty of $50 for each offense, and no such bill of lading, manifest, or other memorandum shall be used in evidence unless it shall be duly stamped as aforesaid.

"7. Bond: For Indemnifying any person or persons, firm, or corporation who shall have become bound or engaged as surety for the payment of any sum of money, or for the due execution or performance of the duties of any office or position, and to account for money received by virtue thereof, 50 cents.

"8. Certificate of profits, or any certificate or memorandum showing an interest in the property or accumulations of any association, company, or corporation, and on all transfers thereof, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents.

"9. Contract: Broker's note, or memorandum of sale of any goods or merchandise, stocks, bonds, exchange, notes of hand, real estate, or property of any kind or description issued by brokers, or persons acting as such, for each note or memorandum of sale, not otherwise provided for in this act, 10 cents.

"10. Conveyance: Deed, instrument, or writing, whereby any lands, tenements, or other realty shall be sold, granted, assigned, transferred, or otherwise conveyed to or vested in the purchaser or purchasers, or any other person or persons, by his, her, or their direction, when the consideration or value exceeds $2,500 and does not exceed $3,000, 25 cents, and for each additional $500 or fractional part thereof in excess of $3,000, 25 cents.

"11. Entry of any goods, wares, or merchandise at any custom-house, either for consumption or warehousing, not exceeding $100 in value, 25 cents. Exceeding $100 and not exceeding $500 in value, 50 cents. Exceeding $500 in value, $1.

"12. Entry for the withdrawal of any goods or merchandise from customs bonded warehouse, 50 cents.

"13. Passage tickets: Ticket, order, contract, or certificate for passage by any vessel from any port in the United States to a foreign port, costing $50, 50 cents; and for each $50 or any part thereof in addition thereto, 50 cents."

SEC. 9. That Schedule B of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SCHEDULE B.

"Sparkling or other wines, when bottled for sale, upon each bottle containing 1 pint or less, 1 cent. Upon each bottle containing more than 1 pint, 2 cents."

SEC. 10. That section 29 of said act is hereby amended by adding at the end of said section the following: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to bequests or legacies for uses of a religious, literary, charitable, or educational character, or for the encouragement of art, or to legacies or bequests to societies for the prevention of cruelty to children, including all bequests or legacies of such character on which the tax imposed had not been paid or collected on the 1st day of March, 1901: And provided further, That the provisions of this act and of the act hereby amended shall not be held to apply to any estate where the testator or intestate died before June 13, 1898;" so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"LEGACIES AND DISTRIBUTIVE SHARES OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

"SEC. 29. That any person or persons having in charge or trust, as administrators, executors, or trustees, any legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property, where the whole amount of such personal property as aforesaid shall exceed the sum of $10,000 in actual value, passing, after the passage of this act, from any person possessed of such property, either by will or by the intestate laws of any State or Territory, or any personal property or interest therein, transferred by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor or bargainer, to any person or persons, or to any body or bodies, politic or corporate, in trust or otherwise, shall be, and hereby are, made subject to a duty or tax, to be paid to the United States, as follows—that is to say: Where the whole amount of said personal property shall exceed in value ten thousand and shall not exceed in value the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars the tax shall be:

"First. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the lineal issue or lineal ancestor, brother, or sister to the person who died possessed of such property, as aforesaid, at the rate of 75 cents for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest in such property.

"Second. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the descendant of a brother or sister of the person who died possessed, as aforesaid, at the rate of $1.50 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest.

"Third. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the brother or sister of the father or mother, or a descendant of a brother or sister of the father or mother, of the person who died possessed, as aforesaid, at the rate of $3 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest.

"Fourth. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother, or a descendant of the brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother, of the person who died possessed, as aforesaid, at the rate of $4 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest.

"Fifth. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be in any other degree of collateral consanguinity than is hereinbefore stated, or shall be a stranger in blood to the person who died possessed, as aforesaid, or shall be a body politic or corporate, at the rate of $5 for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest: Provided, That all legacies or property passing by will, or by the laws of any State or Territory, to husband or wife of the person died possessed, as aforesaid, shall be exempt from tax or duty.

"Where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $55,000, but shall not exceed the sum or value of $100,000, the rates of duty or tax above set forth shall be multiplied by one and one-half; and where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $100,000, but shall not exceed the sum of $500,000, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by two; and where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $500,000, but shall not exceed the sum of $1,000,000, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by two and one-half; and where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $1,000,000, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by three: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to bequests or legacies for uses of a religious, literary, charitable, or educational character, or for the encouragement of art, or to legacies or bequests to societies for the prevention of cruelty to children, including all bequests or legacies of such character on which the tax imposed had not been paid or collected on the 1st day of March, 1901: And provided further, That the provisions of this act and of the act hereby amended shall not be held to apply to any estate where the testator or intestate died before June 13, 1898."

SEC. 11. That section 30 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 30. That the tax or duty aforesaid shall be due and payable in one year after the death of the testator and shall be a lien and charge upon the property of every person who may die as aforesaid for twenty years, or until the same shall, within that period, be fully paid to and discharged by the United States; and every executor, administrator, or trustee having in charge or trust any legacy or distributive share, as aforesaid, shall give notice thereof, in writing, to the collector or deputy collector of the district where the deceased grantor or bargainer last resided within thirty days after he shall have taken charge of such trust, and every executor, administrator, or trustee, before payment and distribution to the legatees, or any parties entitled to beneficial interest therein, shall pay to the collector or deputy collector of the district of which the deceased person was a resident, or in which the property was located in case of nonresidents, the amount of the duty or tax assessed upon such legacy or distributive share, and shall also make and render to the said collector or deputy collector a schedule, list, or statement, in duplicate, of the amount of such legacy or distributive share, together with the amount of duty which has accrued, or shall accrue, thereon, verified by his oath or affirmation, to be administered and certified thereon by some magistrate or officer having lawful power to admister such oaths, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which schedule, list, or statement shall contain the names of each and every person entitled to any beneficial interest therein, together with the clear value of such interest, the duplicate of which schedule, list, or statement shall be by him immediately delivered, and the tax thereon paid to such collector; and upon such payment and delivery of such schedule, list, or statement, said collector or deputy collector shall grant to such person paying such duty or tax a receipt or receipts for the same in duplicate, which shall be prepared as hereinafter provided. Such receipt or receipts, duly signed and delivered by such collector or deputy collector, shall be sufficient evidence to entitle such executor, administrator, or trustee to be credited and allowed such payment by every tribunal which, by the laws of any State or Territory, is, or may be, empowered to decide upon and settle the accounts of executors and administrators.

"And in case such executor, administrator, or trustee shall refuse or neglect to pay the aforesaid duty or tax to the collector or deputy collector, as aforesaid, within the time hereinbefore provided, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver to said collector or deputy collector the duplicate of the schedule, list, or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, under oath, as aforesaid, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver the schedule, list, or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, under oath, as aforesaid, or shall deliver to said collector or deputy collector a false schedule or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, or give the names and relationship of the persons entitled to beneficial interests therein untruly, or shall not truly and correctly set forth and state therein the clear value of such beneficial interest, or where no administration upon such property or personal estate shall have been granted or allowed under existing laws, the collector or deputy collector shall make out such lists and valuation as in other cases of neglect or refusal, and shall assess the duty thereon; and the collector shall commence appropriate proceedings before any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, against such person or persons as may have the actual or constructive custody or possession of such property or personal estate, or any part thereof, and shall subject such property or personal estate, or any portion of the same, to be sold upon the judgment or decree of such court, and from the proceeds of such sale the amount of such tax or duty, together with all costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by such court, shall be first paid, and the balance, if any, deposited according to the order of such court, to be paid under its direction to such person or persons as shall establish title to the same.

"The deed or deeds, or any proper conveyance of such property or personal estate, or any portion thereof, so sold under such judgment or decree, executed by the officer lawfully charged with carrying the same into effect, shall vest in the purchaser thereof all the title of the delinquent to the property or personal estate sold under and by virtue of such judgment or decree, and shall release every other portion of such property or personal estate from the lien or charge thereon created by this act. And every person or persons who shall have in his possession, charge, or custody any record, file, or paper containing, or supposed to contain, any information concerning such property or personal estate, as aforesaid, passing from any person who may die, as aforesaid, shall exhibit the same at the request of the collector or deputy collector of the district, and to any law officer of the United States, in the performance of his duty under this act, his deputy or agent, who may desire to examine the same.

"And if any such person, having in his possession, charge, or custody any such records, files, or papers, shall refuse or neglect to exhibit the same on request, as aforesaid, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500: Provided, That in all legal controversies where such deed or title shall be the subject of judicial investigation, the recital in said deed shall be prima facie evidence of its truth and that the requirements of the law had been complied with by the officers of the Government: And provided further, That in case of willful neglect, refusal, or false statement by such executor, administrator, or trustee, as aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $1,000, to be recovered with costs of suit. Any tax paid under the provisions of sections 29 and 30 shall be deducted from the particular legacy or distributive share on account of which the same is charged."

SEC. 12. That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, is authorized to appoint a competent person, at an annual salary of $3,000, whose special duty it shall be to conduct such investigations as may be necessary to secure the efficient enforcement of the tax imposed upon legacies and distributive shares of personal property by this act, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may also from time to time assign one or more special agents to aid in such investigations.

SEC. 13. That section 35 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 35. That for the purposes of this act, the words 'mixed flour' shall be taken and construed to mean the food product resulting from the grinding or mixing together of wheat, or wheat flour, as the principal constituent in quantity, with any other grain, or the product of any other grain, or other material, except such material, not exceeding 5 per cent in quantity, and not the product of any grain, as is commonly used for baking purposes: Provided, That when the product resulting from the grinding or mixing together of wheat or wheat flour with any other grain, or the product of any other grain, of which wheat or wheat flour is not the principal constituent as specified in the foregoing definition, is intended for sale, or is sold, or offered for sale as wheat flour, such product shall be held to be mixed flour within the meaning of this act."

SEC. 14. That section 18 of said act is hereby repealed.

SEC. 15. That the provisions of this act shall take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1901, except where otherwise expressly provided.

And the House agree to the same.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses (H. R. 12394) "To amend an act entitled 'An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes,' approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder," make the following statement as a result of the conference report agreed upon:

The difference between the two Houses related, first, to the form of the bill, and by the conference report the House form is retained; second, to certain subjects of taxation, which are disposed of as follows:

The House reduced the tax on beer to $1.60 per barrel; the Senate to $1.50. The House provision is retained in the report.

The Senate reduced the tax on banks and bankers' capital to $1 per thousand. The House bill retained the tax at $2, and the House provision was agreed to.

The House repealed the special tax on theaters, circuses, and other public exhibitions, and the Senate retained the same. The conference report retains these taxes.

The House made no change on tobacco and snuff. The Senate made a discount of 25 per cent, amounting to 3 cents per pound. The conference report agrees to the reduction of 20 per cent, or 2.4 cents per pound.

The Senate made no provision for a change in the size of the package. The conference report authorizes packages of 2, 3, and 4 ounces in addition to those now authorized by law.

The House made a reduction of 60 cents per thousand on cigars weighing over 3 pounds. The Senate made a reduction of 30 cents per thousand. The conference report agrees to the House provision.

The Senate proposed a rate of 54 cents per thousand on cigarettes worth not over $2 per thousand at wholesale and $1.08 on cigarettes worth more than $2 per thousand. Also 54 cents instead of $1 per thousand on cigars weighing not over 3 pounds per thousand. These provisions of the Senate bill are retained in the conference report.

The Senate proposed an amendment taxing transactions in bucket shops 2 cents for each $100 par value on all stocks, etc., transferred or pretended to be transferred, as well as a special tax of $50 per annum. The House agreed to these amendments, with a provision that the same shall go into effect on the 1st day of April, 1901, the remaining provisions of the bill taking effect on the 1st day of July next.

The House retained the provision of the present law for the sale of produce on exchange at 1 cent for each $100, and the Senate agreed to the same with an amendment exempting sales of merchandise in actual course of transportation as evidenced by bill of lading, and the House agreed to this amendment.

The House repealed the tax of 2 cents on bank checks. The Senate disagreed to the same, but the conference report also repeals this tax.

The tax on time drafts was repealed by the House, but the conference report retains it.

The House repealed the 2-cent tax on each $100 on money orders. The Senate retains the same, and the conference report agrees to the provision of the House repealing this tax.

The tax of 4 cents per $100 on foreign bills of exchange was reduced to 2 cents by the action of the conference, and all drafts accompanied by bill of lading for merchandise sold abroad are exempted.

The House repeals the tax on bonds. The Senate retained the tax on bonds of indemnity, which the conference committee agreed to.

The House retained the tax on certificates of profits. The Senate repealed the same. The conference committee retained the same as in the House bill.

The House repealed the tax on conveyances of real estate, and the conference committee exempted such conveyances where the consideration did not exceed $2,500. Exceeding $2,500, the tax is at the rate of 25 cents for each $500.

The House repeals the tax on all insurance policies. The Senate retains the same at one-half the present rate. The conference report accepts the House provision.

The House repealed the tax on manifests for custom-house entry. The Senate retained the same. The conference accepted the House repeal.

The tax on passage tickets was repealed by the House, retained by the Senate, and by the conference such tickets below $50 in value are exempt, and above that taxed at the rate of 50 cents for each $50 or fraction thereof.

The House repealed all of Schedule B, except the tax on wines. The Senate retained the same, with some amendments. The conference report accepts the House action and repeals all these taxes, except on wines.

The House amendment to the mixed-flour-law clause is retained by the conference report.

SERENO E. PAYNE,
JOHN DALZELL,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

[Applause on Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this conference report retains the House bill in form and very largely in substance. The tax upon fermented liquors is the same as that adopted by the House by a large majority vote. The Senate sought to reduce it. The conference report retains it at the House rate. The Senate made a reduction on tobacco and snuff of 3 cents per pound. The conference report makes a reduction of 2.4 cents a pound, the tax being 12 cents, and the additional tax under the war-revenue act 6 cents.

The Senate made no changes in the packages and no provision for any change of size of package. The law prior to the act of 1898 provided for 2, 3, and 4 ounce packages. Because of that additional tax, the 2, 3, and 4 ounce packages were dispensed with under the war-revenue act and there was substituted therefor packages of 1⅞, 2¼, and 3⅛ ounces. The House contended that if there is to be a reduction in the taxes there should be an opportunity to increase the size of the package.

The provision of the bill is that in addition to 1⅞, 2¼, and 3⅛ there shall be packages of 2, 3, and 4 ounces, leaving it optional with the manufacturer. Of course, if one manufacturer adopts one of these sizes the others will have to do so, and if one adopts another package all will have to do so. The House took off the 60 cents added by the war revenue on cigars. It was $3.60 per thousand. We took off the 60 cents. The Senate made them $3.30—taking off only one-half. They also had some provision for cigars costing less than $3.60 per thousand; but that provision was stricken out, and the House rate was restored at $3, reducing the tax on cigars 60 cents.

On cigarettes the House had made no recommendation. Prior to the war-revenue tax they were 50 cents per thousand. That act made it $1.50. The Senate provision was that all cigarettes sold at not exceeding $2 per thousand, wholesale price, should pay a tax of 18 cents per pound, fixing the weight at 3 pounds, or 54 cents a thousand. For those costing more than $2 the rate will be $1.08. The House acceded to the Senate proposition on cigarettes.

The law also provided a tax of $1 on cigars weighing less than 3 pounds to the thousand. The Senate reduced it to 54 cents, and the House acceded to that. The reason for this reduction of rates on cigarettes and small cigars was that under the reduced rates it is believed there will be a larger manufacture, especially of the smaller cigars, and that ultimately, if not during the next year, there would be no loss in the revenue on that account. If the same number of small cigars and cigarettes should be manufactured as during the past year, the reduction in the revenue would be $1,400,000.

Upon the other main items of the bill the House rates were adopted by the conference committee.

The House took off 2 cents upon checks and upon money orders and upon kindred papers and contracts of that kind. The Senate restored them in their amendment. The conferees have wiped them all out. The House repealed all of Schedule B except the tax upon wine. Schedule B in the original act provided for a tax upon patent medicines, a tax upon cosmetics, and a tax upon chewing gum. The House struck out the tax upon all these items. The Senate restored it, making a reduction upon patent medicines. The conference has wiped them all out, and left nothing of Schedule B except the tax on wine. That is all that is left of Schedule B.

Mr. GAINES. What about telegraphs?

Mr. PAYNE. As to the sending of telegrams and express receipts, there was nothing in conference. They were all wiped out by the House bill and acceded to by the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. Would it be possible to secure a vote upon that portion of the tobacco schedule referring to tobacco rehandlers and tobacco dealers?

Mr. PAYNE. It would not. The Senate put it in one amendment, and if before the House the items could not be separated you would have to reject the whole report or adopt it.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman will permit me to make a statement, the portion of the schedule which relates to tobacco rehandlers and dealers provides three taxes in the original law, one of $5, one of twelve, and the other of twenty-five. At the early part of the session I introduced an amendment to make them all $12.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue informed me that it would make a difference of less than $2,000. I have received innumerable letters from tobacco dealers in my State asking me to have the change made, and saying they would rather pay twelve or twenty-five dollars than have their business inspected from day to day to find out the amount of business that they do; and if it would be possible to secure a vote on that question I should be very glad.

Mr. PAYNE. The House did not interfere with that proposition. It has not been before the conferees in any way, and can not be before the House. It is subject to a point of order, and would be subject to a point of order if the whole thing were open.

Now, the gentleman from Kansas had a question.

Mr. RIDGELY. I understood the gentleman to say that the 2-cent tax on checks was repealed, and also the stamp tax on patent medicines.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; that is correct.

A MEMBER. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the estimated total reduction in the conferees' report?

Mr. PAYNE. I was coming to that a little later.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to ask the gentleman as to the tax on loans.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I was just coming to that. The House took off all the taxes on promissory notes and mortgages and all matters of that kind and on all bonds except debenture bonds issued by corporations, which the House left on, and the Senate agreed to; we took off the tax on all bonds except these. The Senate restored the tax on bonds of indemnity and the conferees left it there. But bonds given for loans are entirely exempt.

Mr. RIDGELY. How about the tax on deeds?

Mr. PAYNE. The tax on notes and mortgages is entirely removed.

Mr. McRAE. I would like to ask about the tax on deeds.

Mr. PAYNE. I was just going to speak about it. The House took off the tax on deeds and the Senate amended it, provided that all deeds where the consideration did not exceed $2,500 should be free of tax, but where the consideration exceeded $2,500 the tax should be 25 cents for every additional $500 of consideration over and above the $2,500, and the conferees agreed to that amendment of the Senate.

The House took off all taxes on insurance of every description. The Senate restored one-half of the present rate in their bill, and the conference committee adopted the House provision and took off all taxes upon insurance policies of every nature whatever.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are the main features of the bill. The House took off the taxes on theaters and circuses and shows of that kind, amounting to $225,000 of revenue. We thought that possibly it was not necessary for the Government to exact those taxes at this time, but the Senate restored it, and the conferees yielded to the contention of the Senate and left the tax on. The House took off the tax on foreign bills of exchange, foreign drafts, and letters of credit, and the Senate restored it.

The main reason why the House took off the tax was because these drafts were largely used in collecting pay for products exported abroad, and we did not desire to have any tax upon our exports, even indirectly. The Senate restored this tax upon drafts, and the conference committee allowed it to remain, cutting down the rate one-half, but expressly exempted all drafts which are accompanied by bill of lading showing that the draft is given to collect pay for goods sold abroad.

I am told by the members of the produce exchange in New York that this amendment will cover all transactions where the draft is given or sent abroad for the purpose of collecting pay for goods that are sold abroad. So that the only tax upon foreign bills of exchange, or the principal part of it, will be that paid by tourists who are going abroad.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the tax is retained on orders the farmers give to the merchants for the payment of money?

Mr. PAYNE. Those go off, if they were ever on.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understood by reading the statement that something was said about time drafts.

Mr. PAYNE. On time drafts the tax is left on. I would say to the gentleman that the House took off in its bill the tax upon time drafts, drafts drawn otherwise than at sight. The Senate restored the proposition. It amounted to about $500,000 of revenue. The conferees acceded to the Senate amendment and left the tax on time drafts.

Mr. KITCHIN. How about sight drafts?

Mr. PAYNE. The tax is all off of sight drafts.

Mr. LEVY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it was not possible to reduce the tax on deeds of a higher consideration than $2,500? That is of no use to us in cities at all.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course the committee were not living in large cities. [Laughter.] The committee thought $2,500, as consideration for real estate, was a good, big price when we made that exemption.

Mr. LEVY. Then cities have to pay the taxes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I see there is a material change in the provision for the exemption of educational and charitable institutions.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; I was about to speak of that.

Mr. TAWNEY. After the gentleman's explanation I want to ask one question in order to draw out and have it appear in the RECORD what the intention of the conferees was with respect to the item, when this proviso should take effect, and as to the nonpayment or exemption of taxes already due.

Mr. PAYNE. The House exempted from tax all bequests for educational, charitable, and religious uses, and also included works of art. That includes the taxes on legacies to institutions for the promotion of art. The Senate added to this a proposition exempting legacies given to humane societies—societies organized for the prevention of cruelty to children.

We gladly adopted the suggestion of the Senate, and they also put on a proviso making certain what we believed was in the House bill. We believe that when we exempted all these bequests from taxation that it related to all bequests that had been made upon which the taxes had not been paid. Some gentlemen were very nervous about a certain bequest for an educational institution where the tax would amount to about $25,000.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me?

Mr. PAYNE. When I have finished this sentence. And they were nervous, as I say, about the $25,000. It had not been paid and we insisted it would be repealed by the House action. They prevailed on the Senate to put in a clause expressly repealing these taxes which had not been paid. When we came to consider in conference we inserted the provision that should apply to certain taxes that had not been paid up to the 1st of March, 1901.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, right there. At the conclusion of the bill there is this section that provides that this act will take effect on and after the 1st of July, 1901, except where otherwise expressly provided; whether or not that was the intention of the conference committee that this exception would apply so that these taxes would only be collectible after March 1, notwithstanding the express provision that the bill was not to take effect until July.

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly, because it so provides. It says that no tax shall be collected on legacies which had not been collected up to the 1st of March, 1901. Now, we have taken it out of the power of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to collect any such tax, and the provision at the end of the bill is that the bill shall take effect on the 1st of July, 1901, except as hereinbefore provided. Perhaps the gentleman represents that $25,000 tax, about which there seems to be so much anxiety.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not.

Mr. PAYNE. It seems to me there is no occasion at any time for anyone to lose sleep on account of this tax.

Mr. TAWNEY. I simply wanted to make clear what the intent of the committee was.

Mr. PAYNE. The intention of the committee was to repeal all these taxes upon legacies for educational, charitable, and religious uses, and to have the repeal apply to all such taxes as had not been collected up to the 1st of July.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. In other words, to have the provision take effect from the 1st of March.

Mr. PAYNE. From the 1st of March, 1901. I hope we have accomplished that object by the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I understand that the tax on sight drafts has been taken off. In the statement showing the effect of the bill as now agreed upon, I find these words:

> Drafts or bills of exchange, inland, 2 cents for each $100.

Mr. PAYNE. Let the gentleman read the bill. That is only a statement.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It is all I have before me.

Mr. PAYNE. The bill reads differently.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is what I wanted to understand.

Mr. GAINES. I am asked by telegram about the rebate on tobacco. Is there any such thing in the bill as now agreed upon?

Mr. PAYNE. The bill provides for a rebate on all unbroken factory packages of tobacco in the hands of the manufacturers or dealers when the law goes into effect on the 1st day of July next.

Mr. GAINES. In round numbers, how much of war taxation do you reduce by this bill?

Mr. PAYNE. I am going to give a statement on that point.

Mr. FLEMING. Before the gentleman leaves the question of legacies, I would like to make an inquiry. I understood the chairman of the conference committee to say that this conference report removed all taxes on legacies where the tax has not been collected prior to the 1st of March.

Mr. PAYNE. Legacies for charitable, educational, and religious uses.

Mr. FLEMING. I understood the repeal applied to all legacies.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no; simply to legacies for charitable, religious, and educational uses. The taxation on other legacies is left in force.

Mr. FLEMING. Let me ask the gentleman this question: When a legacy has become already vested, as it were, before the 1st of March, and the parties have delayed paying it, does the bill as agreed to in conference release taxation in such cases?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, on all legacies for educational, charitable, or religious uses.

Mr. FLEMING. So that if a party has been negligent in paying over a legacy, he is to profit by the negligence?

Mr. PAYNE. Nobody profits by the remission of the tax except the charitable institution to which the legacy has been given. And I will say to the gentleman further that if heretofore any legacies for any of these purposes have paid taxes, I for one am in favor of refunding the tax in such cases at the first opportunity. I do not think that half a dozen members of this House would have been in favor of putting a tax on legacies for charitable, educational, or religious uses if it had been noticed when the war-revenue act was passed and our attention called to it.

Mr. FLEMING. I agree with the gentleman upon that point.

Mr. PAYNE. And if such taxation has been imposed on legacies of this description I think we ought to take it off at the first possible moment, whether the nonpayment may have resulted from negligence or otherwise; and if the tax has in fact been paid I am in favor of paying it back at the first opportunity.

Mr. FLEMING. There seemed to be an unjust discrimination in allowing an exemption where the tax has already accrued and its nonpayment has simply been the result of negligence.

Mr. PAYNE. We did not want to make this an appropriation bill.

In regard to the taxation of legacies, I want to add one word. The Senate put in a provision for the appointment of an officer whose duty it should be to institute and put in motion the machinery for the collection of this special tax upon legacies. The House acceded to that amendment, because we wanted the measure to be thorough and to secure the payment of these taxes into the Treasury of the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have explained all the important items in the bill.

Mr. COONEY. As I understand this statement, all deeds in which the consideration is $2,500 or less are exempt from taxation, while all deeds in which there is a greater consideration pay tax. I wish to ask the gentleman whether that tax applies to the whole consideration or only to the amount in excess of $2,500?

Mr. PAYNE. The tax applies to the amount of consideration over $2,500.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Up to $2,500 the exemption operates.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; up to $2,500 there is an absolute exemption on all deeds.

Mr. GAINES. I inquired of the gentleman a few moments ago as to the amount of war tax which would continue in effect after the passage of this bill. The gentleman was about to reply, but was interrupted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING].

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think I ought to take up the time of the House by reading what is contained in this document, "A summary showing the effect of House bill 12394." Any gentleman may obtain a copy of this statement in the room of the Committee on Ways and Means; and I hope a large number of copies will be printed for the use of the House. This statement shows the action of the House, the action of the Senate, the action of the conference committee, and the revenue derived from each form of taxation for the fiscal year 1900.

Several MEMBERS. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. It has been printed as a document, and I do not think it necessary to print it in the RECORD.

Mr. HOFFECKER. Is there any provision for the redemption of stamps that may be left on hand on July 1 next?

Mr. PAYNE. No; there is not. The House put in such a provision at the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; but we believe that the act passed a year ago is amply sufficient on this point.

We omitted it from the conference report; and further we found that the act was amply sufficient to redeem every stamp that was not used. It provides that the Internal Revenue Commissioner can redeem every stamp for which the owner has no use, and of course that embraces every unused stamp. The present law requires him to redeem it on presentation, or at any time within two years after the stamp is sold, so that there is no question about that.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Has there been any change as to the size of the packages of tobacco? In other words, is the poor man's pipe protected?

Mr. PAYNE. I stated that a few moments ago. I spoke fully upon that subject. We have restored the 2, 3, and 4 ounce package, the same size packages that were used before the tax was put at 6 cents.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Just one further question. I see you have retained the tax on freight rates, but have not on express rates. How is that?

Mr. PAYNE. That is because the House was in favor of this proposition, as the gentleman may remember.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will not the gentleman consent that this schedule be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PAYNE. I thought it would be better to have it made into a document. I presume it will be put into the RECORD by the Senate. Mr. Speaker, there is such a demand for it, I ask unanimous consent that this summary statement be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the summary statement of the bill be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

NOTE.—Such of the above amounts as are in round numbers are estimated.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Arkansas desires to ask me a question.

Mr. McRAE. On the question of the redemption of stamps, I want to ask the gentleman if he has convinced the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that this law is sufficient for him to redeem the stamps?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, he has ample authority.

Mr. McRAE. Why did he make the request?

Mr. PAYNE. When he made the request I do not think he had looked at the law. But he has ample law—as full as we could give.

Mr. McRAE. Then, under your statement, you think there will be no trouble about his redeeming the stamps?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think there can be.

Mr. McRAE. If he should decide otherwise, the stamp holder would have no remedy.

Mr. PAYNE. He can not decide otherwise. The gentleman from Tennessee wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. GIBSON. There are a great many manufacturers of patent medicine; and I would like to ask whether the conference report covers them?

Mr. PAYNE. It takes off entirely the taxes on patent medicines. I want to speak a moment as to the amount of reduction of the bill. The House reduced the war revenue $40,000,000. As it passed the Senate it reduced it about $41,000,000. This bill provides for a gross reduction of $44,665,000, but the Senate proposed an amendment taxing transactions in what is commonly known as the "bucket shops," and provided a tax of 2 cents on the hundred dollars upon every transaction made in any one of those institutions on all goods and stocks sold and all pretended to be sold in those transactions.

It also provided for a special tax of $50 annually upon each one of those institutions and upon all of their branch businesses. The amount of revenue to be derived from this has been variously estimated. It has been estimated as high as $10,000,000 a year. Of course, I do not believe it will produce any such amount of revenue as that; but from the most conservative estimates we could get, the very lowest estimate has been two and a half million dollars a year; and I think it will fairly produce that amount of revenue. So that here is an increase of revenue, as it affects these particular transactions. Of course, they are held by the courts in every State to be gambling transactions, and some doubt has been expressed as to whether the Government of the United States ought to tax gambling transactions. There is a clause in this amendment, the amendment itself being most carefully drawn, which provides that nothing herein shall be held to legalize such transactions in any of the States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there were taxes on pool rooms and places of that kind, and we did not see any very good reason why we should not tax these "bucket shops." I do not know but what as a proposition it would be competent, if it came into the House, to make the tax so high on those institutions as to wipe them out altogether. The friends of honest butter could have coupled with it the tax on oleomargarine, and make it sufficient to wipe them out. But we are only trying to look out for any possible deficiency in the revenue as well as being perfectly willing to put a burden upon this class of business. I believe that $2,500,000 a year will be produced. The net reduction of the bill, therefore, is $42,165,000, or $2,000,000 more than the bill as it passed the House and $1,000,000 more than the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. BABCOCK. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I desire to ask in reference to the first section of the bill, which evidently is a misprint. It says, "there shall be paid, in lieu of the tax of $1 now imposed by law, a tax of $1.60."

Mr. PAYNE. I will explain that to the gentleman. You will notice that the first section of the bill provides that the first section of an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet the war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1898, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

We are amending the first section of the old law, 1898. That section provided there shall be paid, in lieu of the taxes of $1 now imposed by law, a tax of $2, with a rebate of 7½ per cent. That is the old law. We amend the section of the original law and provide the tax shall be $1.60. I will append a statement of the reductions under this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-six minutes remaining.

Mr. PAYNE. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee want?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will only want a few minutes, but quite a number of gentlemen have asked for some time, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, before saying a word, a request for leave to print on this bill, in order that we may take no time. I know it is a late hour of the session.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that general leave to print on this bill be granted by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general leave to print be given upon the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Upon taxation.

The SPEAKER. For what length of time?

Mr. PAYNE. For five days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, I only want a few minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, after the very clear statement of the gentleman from New York just made, I shall not go over the bill in its details, and shall not refer to the different features of the measure. The conference report, as it is presented, brings the legislation more nearly to the House bill than to the Senate bill. The bill as now presented makes a reduction of $42,000,000 in the war revenue. This side of the House, when the measure was pending here a few weeks ago, thought there should be a reduction of at least $70,000,000 in war revenue, and we voted with practical unanimity for such reduction.

We thought so, Mr. Speaker, because the report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that there will be a surplus this year of $80,000,000. It is shown that there will be a surplus of about the same sum in the next fiscal year, according to the estimates. Taking the surplus already in the Treasury, the surplus for this year and the estimated surplus that is shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, there is no doubt but there could be and there should be a reduction by this bill of $70,000,000 at least. We pledged ourselves by a vote to that effect. We tried to give relief to the business interests of this country by voting a reduction in these war revenues of $70,000,000. It was conceded that when the war-revenue bill passed in 1898 there was an exigency upon the country and a just demand for an increase in the revenues. When the war with Spain began, we pledged our constituents in enacting the war-tax measure that it was a temporary measure, and that just as quickly as possible we would relieve them.

We have not kept the promise, Mr. Speaker, except in a very limited degree. We have reduced the revenue as stated only about forty million or forty-two million dollars, but a suffering commercial community was entitled to a much larger reduction, and this Congress should have given it. Now, there is no use to speak against this conference report. It is possibly the best we could get. I think it is the best we could get, in view of the political condition of this body, and of the body at the other end of this Capitol. They were not willing to go beyond $42,000,000, and, Mr. Speaker, while we wanted a much larger reduction, we have been unable to get it; but as wise and prudent legislators we can not afford, in my judgment, to vote against this reduction. Therefore, acting as one of the conferees, representing the minority side of the House, I signed the conference report, and would now advise that the bill be passed.

At the same time I emphasize the fact that there should have been a larger reduction, and if we had had an opportunity, if it had been given to some of us to have arranged the items of reduction, we would have changed and made a further reduction upon items upon which only a partial relief is given in the pending bill.

I believe that we have not kept the promise that we made to the people that the war-revenue measure was a temporary imposition put upon them, and that as soon as the war was over they should have relief from the burden. But not being able to get the total relief that I think they were entitled to I signed the report, and I believe the bill should pass.

Mr. PAYNE. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri three minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, at this stage of the proceedings it is perhaps useless to attempt a modification of this bill, but in behalf of my constituents I am constrained to enter a protest against that section which relates to the tax on malt liquors.

This is not a party question, I believe. The Democratic side has failed to make a minority report on this bill, and when previously I stood upon the floor and made a motion for the purpose of securing a further reduction of the tax on beer Democrats joined hands with Republicans for the purpose of voting down that motion, and consequently it is fair to say that there is no politics in this question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes; although I have only three minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to say that the Democrats had filed no minority report.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understood that both Democratic members of the conference committee have signed the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman must understand that there can be no minority report from a conference committee.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. True; but the gentleman from Tennessee and his colleague, as I understand, both signed the conference report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There was no other way; there can not be a minority report from a conference committee.

Mr. SULZER. Look up the rule. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, we content ourselves now with this bill. But I sincerely trust, in the interest of justice and fairness, that at the next session this matter may be taken up again. It is a serious proposition, this question of taxing the people by a tax on consumption. When you tax consumption you tax the poor man as much as you tax the rich man, and in many features of this bill you lay the burden on the shoulders of those who can least afford to bear it.

Besides, as far as the tax on malt liquors is concerned, the reduction is the least of all the reductions granted. The percentage of reduction in every other respect is much larger than in this. Why this unfairness? But, as I say, I shall vote for the bill because I prefer to take half a loaf rather than no loaf at all. Since there does not seem to be any desire on the Democratic side to object, those of us who are dissatisfied with certain features of this measure are helpless, and shall have to accept the situation. I shall be here when in the next Congress justice will be demanded in behalf of a great American industry.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. You appeal to the Democrats for help, do you? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York if he will not make a request for the printing of extra copies of this bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print 10,000 copies of the bill as it comes from the conference committee, and also the summary which is presented, to be distributed through the folding room.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why not make it 15,000 copies, so as to provide 5,000 copies for the Senate?

Mr. PAYNE. The Senate will provide for itself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that there be printed 10,000 copies of the bill for the use of the House, with the conference report and the summary, to be distributed to the members of the House through the folding room. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and I ask consent of the House that the statement be read and the reading of the formal report be omitted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the statement only will be read. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives make the following statement of the result of the conference with the managers on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13850) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902:

The Senate recedes from No. 2, increasing salary of minister resident and consul-general to Persia $2,500; and

From No. 10, providing five Chinese student interpreters at $1,000 each.

The House recedes and concurs with the Senate amendments as follows:

In No. 1, increasing salary of minister to Ecuador, $2,500.

In No. 5, for salary of secretary of legation to Roumania, Servia, and Greece, $1,800.

In No. 6, for salary of secretary to Netherlands, but striking out Belgium.

In No. 12, increasing from $20,000 to $40,000 the sum to purchase ground and erect buildings for our legation at Pekin.

In No. 14, for safe-deposit vault at Seoul, Korea.

In No. 15, striking out alphabetic list of salaried consulates.

In No. 16, inserting list of consulates in the old form by schedules and classes, and increasing the salaries at Ottawa, Quebec, Odessa, Para, Asuncion, Copenhagen, Leghorn, Port Stanley, Liege, Stetten, and St. Johns, Newfoundland, $500 each; making St. Pierre and St. Christopher salaried consulates at $1,500 each; leaving Lorenco Marquez at $2,000, instead of $2,500 as in Senate amendment.

In No. 18, arranging allowances for clerk hire in the old order instead of alphabetical order, with one increase of clerk hire at Beirut from $480 to $800.

In No. 20, allowing $600 for a prison keeper in Korea.

In No. 22, allowing $500 more for employee of the Bureau of Foreign Commerce in preparing consular reports.

The other amendments relate to footings.

R. R. HITT,
R. ADAMS, JR.,
HUGH A. DINSMORE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the changes in the bill made in conference are so slight, and are recited so clearly in the statement just read, that it is unnecessary to repeat them again. We were unanimous in the conference report, and did as well as we could to maintain the House bill in spirit, and the changes are not large.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to ask how much the bill is increased now, if at all, over what it carried when it passed the House?

Mr. HITT. Thirty-nine thousand six hundred and twenty dollars, one-half of which is for the legation land and buildings at Pekin.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And what is the remainder for?

Mr. HITT. Mostly for slight increases in salaries of consuls and clerks for smaller consulates—poor fellows that only had fifteen hundred or two thousand dollars.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The question was taken, and the report was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF PAY OF HOUSE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from a special committee to investigate the employees of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, chairman of the special committee with instructions to investigate the employees of the House, with instruction to report back within six days, submits the report from that committee. Has the gentleman any suggestion to make in regard to it?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Would the report be printed as a document without any action by the House?

The SPEAKER. If it is referred to the Calendar it would be. The report will be printed and referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent to have that report itself printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will make that request, Mr. Speaker, except that it shall not include the evidence.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Texas would not include the evidence.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The evidence is a part of the report by the terms of the report itself; so I suggest the modification of the terms of the request so as to include only the report and leave the evidence to be printed as a document.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. That was my intention—the report to be printed with the evidence as a part of the document, but the report itself only to be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The special committee of the House of Representatives, appointed in pursuance of the House resolution passed on Saturday, February 23, submit the following unanimous report:

The committee met immediately after their appointment and have held frequent and protracted sessions, and the testimony taken is made a part of this report. By the terms of the resolution the committee were required to make their report within six days after their appointment. This limitation of time was demanded by the early expiration of this Congress.

The short time at our disposal has rendered it impossible to make a complete investigation; but we believe we have complied with the spirit of the resolution, and are able to report to the House a sufficient number of facts to make clear the method of appointment and payment of the employees of the House, and to characterize properly any abuses which have grown up thereunder.

Including the clerks and assistant clerks and messengers to committees, but excluding members' clerks, the officers and employees of the House number 357, and their aggregate annual compensation is about $400,000.

The four officers elected by the House, namely, the Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster, appoint the employees of the House, except the clerks and assistant clerks of members and committees, four elevator men, the stenographers, and those appointed by House resolutions. The appointments, however, are made on the recommendation of members of the House, and very largely, though not entirely, of members of the dominant party in the House.

If a member upon whose recommendation an appointment is made desires the removal of his appointee and the substitution of another person, the removal and substitution are made without regard to the capacity of either person. In case a member upon whose recommendation an appointment has been made ceases to be a member of the House, an employee recommended by him ordinarily loses his place. Thus the officers of the House, though responsible for the character of the service rendered by the employees, have in reality little or no voice in their selection, and, as might reasonably be expected, the results obtained from the system which we have described are in some cases extremely unsatisfactory. This method of appointing House employees has existed for many years, during which the House has been under the control of each party alternately.

We believe that candor compels us to state at the outset that some of the faults in administration which we have observed are attributable to the system and to the persistence of members of the House in urging upon the officers the appointment of their constituents and friends to subordinate places, and that such faults are deeply rooted, of long standing, and likely to continue under the administration of any political party as long as such a system is maintained. We shall consider the four departments of the House service in turn.

POST-OFFICE.

We find nothing to criticise in the administration of the House post-office during the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses.

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS' OFFICE.

We find nothing to criticise in the administration of the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms during the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses. There is one fact, however, to which we desire to call the attention of the House: Humphrey H. Lemon was injured in 1870 while in the performance of his duty as a member of the Capitol police; in 1878 Congress appropriated $3,000 for his relief, and in 1882 legislation was had in his behalf by a joint resolution approved July 7, as follows:

"Joint resolution authorizing the appointment of Humphrey H. Lemon upon the Capitol police force.

"Resolved, etc., That the board of Capitol police be authorized and directed to place upon the roll of the Capitol police, as an additional member thereof, Humphrey H. Lemon, formerly belonging to said force, who was maimed for life while in the discharge of his duties, and that when appointed under the authority of this resolution the said Humphrey H. Lemon be assigned to the duty now performed by him as a watchman inhe Dome of the Capitol."

Mr. Lemon is still a member of the Capitol police and paid as such at the rate of $1,100 per annum, although he is and has been for a long time unable to perform any duty.

OFFICES OF THE CLERK AND DOORKEEPER.

It is impossible to separate entirely these offices in the consideration which follows. We have found in both departments certain abuses, which may be grouped under three heads, namely: Transfers of employees from the duties of the positions to which they were appointed to other duties, unjustifiable payments of compensation to employees while absent from their posts of duty, and divisions of salaries.

First. Transfers of employees from the duties to which they were appointed to other duties.—Some part of this evil is doubtless attributable to the fact that the annual appropriation acts have not properly provided for the necessities of the House service. An illustration of this is furnished by the case of Guy Underwood, who is carried on the rolls as a laborer at $720 per annum, while in point of fact he performs the duty of assistant in the Hall Library of the House and his compensation is usually increased to $1,800 per annum by an appropriation of $1,080 in the general deficiency act.

Again, a sufficient number of messengers has not been provided for the actual necessities of the service, while more folders have been provided than are required. As a result of this men have been transferred from the duties of a folder to those of a messenger, and the compensation of some has been increased by appropriation in deficiency acts.

But evils of another class result from transfers, some examples of which we report. They result in part, at least, from an attempt to adjust salaries so as to satisfy the members that their appointees obtain a just share of the whole appropriation, instead of attempting to apportion the compensation to the merits of the respective employees and the character of the services which they render. The following are illustrative instances:

The place of House telegrapher is held by O. M. Enyart, who in point of fact has never served in that position, but for a time was detailed to the stationery room and then to the House library, where he now is. J. J. Constantine actually performs the duty of telegrapher, and has done so during the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses. During this time he has been paid from an appropriation carried in the legislative act, as follows: "Hire of horses and wagons and cartage for use of the Clerk's office, $900."

The Clerk has used this appropriation for the payment of Constantine's

salary, while he has procured the service for which it was made by payments of $40 monthly, which sums have been obtained by contributions from other employees in the manner hereinafter described. Such a use of an appropriation is in violation of section 3678 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows: "All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others." In the meantime, up to the current year, Constantine has been paid $900 per annum by an appropriation on the general deficiency act, thus making his salary equal to that called for by the place which he actually fills.

Winthrop C. Jones is carried on the roll as a locksmith under the Clerk's department at a salary of $1,440, while in point of fact he performs the duty of a messenger under the Doorkeeper's department at the southwest door of the House lobby, and his duties as locksmith are performed by Daniel P. Hickling, who is on the Doorkeeper's roll as a session folder at $75 per month. Thus the position of locksmith, the duties of which require only a payment of $75 per month during the session, pays to a man who performs none of its duties $1,440 per annum.

And this is not all. There are four other men serving with Jones as messengers at the southwest lobby door. The five men all do exactly the same work, while their respective rates of pay are different. Thus, while Jones receives $1,440, George E. Page, a folder, receives $840; Willard Wilson, also a folder, receives $900; John Deardorff, on the messengers' roll, receives $1,000, and George Jenison, a special employee by House resolution, receives $1,200 per annum.

Jones was at the time of his appointment to the post of locksmith on the roll as a messenger, receiving $1,000 per annum. He continued to perform the same duties after his appointment as locksmith as before, the net effect of the transaction being to increase his compensation $440 a year at the expense of the person to whom that sum was really due for service performed. The whole transaction is so instructive that we report a part of the testimony relating to it:

"The CHAIRMAN. Daniel P. Hickling is performing the duties of locksmith?

"Major MCDOWELL. Yes, sir.

"Q. He is a session folder at $75 a month?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And his pay simply extends through the session, and how much longer?

"A. No longer.

"Q. Is he doing the work properly?

"A. Yes, sir; he is a capable man.

"Q. And you have been able to get for $75 a month the services that the position require?

"A. The position is probably worth a little more; it is probably worth $1,200 a year.

"Q. Did he not hold the position of locksmith once?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And drew the salary?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. The whole of it?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How did he happen to be removed from that position?

"A. Several members of the Michigan delegation thought they hadn't their share.

"Q. Where did he come from?

"A. Who, Hickling?

"Q. Yes.

"A. He is from the District here.

"Q. And had no Congressman?

"A. No.

"Q. So that on the demand of the Michigan delegation you removed a competent locksmith who was doing the work and drawing the pay of the place and had him appointed, I believe, as a session folder at $75 a month?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And he still continued to perform the duties of the position?

"A. Yes.

"Q. Was this man Jones, who was appointed, a locksmith?

"A. Indeed, I do not know.

"Q. Have you ever heard that he had any skill in that calling?

"A. No; I never knew anything about him. I know him, but that's all. I do not know what his qualifications are.

"Q. The substance of it was you yielded to the demand of the Michigan delegation without any regard whatever to the interests of the public service?

"A. That's right.

"Mr. LONG. And the man who was appointed to the position of locksmith was put on the door as a messenger?

"The WITNESS. Yes.

"Mr. LONG. That is the fact?

"The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that is the fact.

"It is not surprising to find, as we do, that Jones is a persistent absentee, and not attentive to his duties when present. He was absent from the service of the House from early in April of last year until after the Christmas holidays."

Second. Payments of compensation to employees while absent.—The duty of many of the employees of the House ceases with the end of a session, or very soon thereafter. Such is the case with the reading clerks, messengers, enrolling clerks, and many others who might be named. Their absence from Washington after a session of Congress closes and their duties are finished is as legitimate as the absence of the members themselves.

But many employees who should be at their posts have been from time to time absent without justification, both during sessions and between sessions. In the absence of any record it is impossible for the committee to ascertain with anything like accuracy the amount of absenteeism, but in our opinion it is very considerable.

Some of those employed in the library service have been absent for long periods between the sessions of Congress, although the House library is in a condition which demands constant attention for years to come in order to bring it up to a proper condition of efficiency. The pay roll of the librarian, his assistants, and those detailed to the library service, including deficiency appropriations, amounts to $9,200 per annum.

No one of the employees of the library, with the exception of a $600 deficiency employee and Guy Underwood, who in his freshman year at college was librarian part of one session at the Ohio State University, has ever had any library experience, although they all appear to be capable, intelligent men. The House library is said to consist of 300,000 volumes, many of which are duplicates, and is scattered from the Dome to the basement of the Capitol, in some instances, until recently, books being piled in unused rooms, like so much wood or coal. The present librarian testified as follows:

"Q. It would be difficult to describe a worse condition than existed?

"A. It would, for the condition of books. It would be all right for a barnyard, but for books it was terrible."

It is just to say that under the present administration of the library some attempt has been made at improvement, but the effect of fifty years' neglect can not be remedied in a day. We can not think that any absenteeism, beyond a reasonable vacation, on the part of those employed in the library is justifiable in view of the foregoing facts.

The folders, taking the orders of members rather than those of the Doorkeeper, are absent a great deal during the vacation, and in some cases persons are employed by resolution to do their work. The Doorkeeper testified as follows:

"I think Mr. Lyon told me where members requested they had three months at home during this last Congress.

"Q. Drawing their pay in the meantime?

"A. Yes, sir; they had three months'.

"Q. That is not in the interest of your service, is it?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Have you been able to prevent it?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Why?

"A. They would go to the superintendent of the folding room and say to him, "My man has got to go home."

"Q. You mean the members would go?

"A. Yes, sir. I do not like to criticise members, but that is the situation. They go and say, "I have got to have my man home, and he must go home; it is absolutely necessary;" and he has been permitted to go."

We have been unable to inquire as much into specific instances of absenteeism as we desired, but it may be said generally that absenteeism on the folders' force is very general. There are several cases of absenteeism which we report without comment.

C. B. Brockway, assistant file clerk, with an annual compensation of $1,200, has been absent during the present session, owing to severe illness.

Leroy J. Hooker was appointed clerk to the Doorkeeper in May, 1897, and remained in that position until January 11, 1898, when he was appointed upon the soldiers' roll. He was absent from Washington from the date of his appointment until the following December without loss of pay.

E. H. Keller, of New York, has been upon the roll as a cloakroom man at an annual compensation of $900 since July 26, 1897, and is on the roll at the present time. He has never been on duty in the cloakroom, but Mr. Lyon, formerly clerk to the Doorkeeper, testified that during these years he had been at work "off and on for three or four months." It is the opinion of the Doorkeeper that Keller worked six months. In any event, he has not worked over six months in the nearly four years during which he has drawn pay, and has not been in Washington for eleven or twelve months.

Third, division of salaries.—According to the testimony of Thomas H. McKee, the Journal clerk, the custom of dividing salaries is an old one and has existed for at least twenty years. We are satisfied that we are unable to report all the instances of divisions of salaries which have occurred; but we submit the following facts, which were clearly proved before us:

On the organization of the House in the Fifty-fourth Congress it appears that more places, or places with higher salaries, were promised than the officers of the House were able to discover under the law. It does not appear by whom these promises were made. There began at once a system whereby the employees agreed to contribute greater or less portions of the salaries they received for the purpose either of paying persons not on the roll or of increasing the compensation of persons who were on the roll.

Of the latter class, the increases were not proportioned to the character of the services rendered or the merit of the employees, but to the supposed rights of the States or Congressional districts from which the recipients came. Some of these contributions were made voluntarily and cheerfully; others we believe to have been made under a species of moral duress. It must be said, however, that no instance of threat of dismissal appeared before us, and that in the single case of refusal to contribute which appeared before us the person refusing held his position without molestation.

We have been unable to examine all the employees of the House, but it has appeared that Alexander McDowell, Clerk; William J. Browning, Chief Clerk; E. L. Lampson, reading clerk; Messrs. Hatcher and Stratton, former reading clerks; Henry Robinson, disbursing clerk; Henry C. Campbell, formerly assistant librarian; Thomas H. McKee, journal clerk; Herman A. Phillips, assistant journal clerk; Thomas Parran, index clerk; C. S. Hoyt, distributing clerk; O. M. Enyart, telegrapher; R. E. Fleharty, clerk in the stationery room; D. Wright, formerly a clerk in the stationery room, and George W. Sabine, assistant librarian, contributed for these purposes in the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses sums ranging from $5 to $20 per month from their respective salaries, in addition to the specific instances to which we call attention below. These contributions were paid into the hands of Henry Robinson, disbursing clerk, of William J. Browning, chief clerk, or John L. Morrison, stationery clerk, and by them disbursed to the persons whose salaries were thus provided or increased.

Robert Coates, a colored man, was on the roll as a laborer in the Democratic cloakroom up to June 30, 1896. He was dropped from the roll and was succeeded by another colored man, Daniel W. Lewis, of Oklahoma, who was transferred to other duties. On the suggestion of Mr. Lyon, then clerk to the Doorkeeper, 5 employes in the cloakroom contributed to Coates $10 each per month from their salaries until December 1, 1896, when Coates was restored to the service by resolution of the House, at $70 per month, being $30 more than the amount received by his fellows.

Robert Richardson and William Richardson, two colored men employed in the House bathrooms and carried on the Clerk's roll as laborers at $720 each per annum, have been so employed for many years. In August, 1898, W. W. Wood, of Newcastle, Pa., a white man, was placed upon the roll and continued there for four months, taking the place on the pay roll of Robert Richardson in August and October and of William Richardson in September and November. We have not learned that Wood did anything besides drawing his pay. He never even appeared in the bathrooms.

In the meantime the Richardsons performed all the work, but each lost two months' pay. The transaction was without their consent. In April, 1900, W. H. Ridley, a colored man residing in Media, Pa., came to the bathrooms with another colored man, apparently with the purpose of taking the place of one or other of the Richardsons. The final result was that the Richardsons agreed each to pay $10 per month to Ridley, and did so by registered letters for eight months. Robert Richardson testified that this was done by the Clerk's orders; but this the Clerk denied, asserting his ignorance of the transaction. The Richardsons continued to do the work. Ridley did nothing.

A. C. Smith, of Tennessee, appointed as a clerk in the enrolling room, January 1, 1898, at a salary of $1,600 per annum, served as such until February, 1900, but during all the time except two months paid Mr. Robinson, the disbursing clerk, at the rate of $400 per annum, for the general purposes above described.

Dennis E. Alward entered the employ of the House in April, 1896, as superintendent of the document room, at a salary of $2,000 per annum, and remained in that position until the beginning of the special session of the Fifty-fifth Congress.

During this period, by arrangement between the respective members of the House from whose districts the employees came, he paid at the rate of $400 per annum to the use of Oscar J. Hill, a folder, serving as messenger at the main door. At the special session of the Fifty-fifth Congress Mr. Alward became one of the reading clerks of the House, at a salary of $3,600, and has continued in that position until the present time. During the two years of the Fifty-fifth Congress he paid Mr. Robinson, by some understanding, the origin of which is uncertain, the sum of $1,000 per annum for the general purposes above described.

We have found no evidence of the continuance of the practice of assessment, contribution, or division of salaries in the present Congress, except in the case of the bathroom employees hereinbefore stated. Upon this subject the Clerk of the House testified as follows, near the close of the investigation, and we commend his testimony to the thoughtful attention of the House:

"Of course those abuses have been going on for years, salaries have been divided for years, and it is generally caused by the members; you understand that. For instance, two men draw two positions. One is $1,200 and the other is $800. They both want the $1,200 position; and they compromise by taking the $800 position and the one of $1,200, and they figure 8 and 12 is 20, one-half of 20 is 10. This is a matter which they figure among themselves. I have never been a party to any of those divisions, and at the beginning of this Congress I told my men that I would have nothing of the kind, that I would not have any divisions or contributions or anything else on the rolls; and so far as I know it has been strictly adhered to."

We have not had the opportunity to consider the subject-matter of our investigation with sufficient care and deliberation to warrant us in submitting specific recommendations for the correction of the abuses which we have reported to the House. Upon the instance of the committee a concurrent resolution has been passed by both Houses of Congress conferring upon the conferees upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill jurisdiction which will enable them to deal with some of the questions raised by our investigation. It would not be pretended that the inquiry is at such a stage that the coming action upon the appropriation bill—if there is any such—will dispose finally of the subject, although we hope that there will be some reorganization of the House force upon that bill and some salutary provisions of permanent law reported.

While the committee is by the resolution directed only to report the facts to the House, we believe that the abuses and evil practices which have by long continuance grown up under the present system of appointment of House employees can not be fully and completely prevented except by a permanent statute which shall properly and equitably adjust compensation and employment, and specifically prevent the abuses which have been herein reported.

WILLIAM H. MOODY.
JESSE OVERSTREET.
CHESTER I. LONG.
JOSEPH W. BAILEY.
FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Texas is that the report, without the evidence, be printed in the RECORD, and that the report, with the evidence, be printed as a House document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. In connection with that matter, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a brief resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House appoint a committee consisting of 5 members, not more than 3 of whom shall belong to the same political party, and all of whom shall be members-elect of the Fifty-seventh Congress, whose duty it shall be to frame and report to the next House a bill to regulate the appointment of and payments to the employees of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if I can have unanimous consent, I desire to say only a word or two in explanation of this resolution.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no disposition to antagonize the resolution, if it will not call for debate.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. It will not occupy three minutes.

My first idea was to offer a resolution continuing this special committee, with the exception of myself; but on reflection I have thought it more proper to leave the appointment of the committee entirely with the Speaker, confident in the opinion that he would appoint my associates on the committee.

The House will perceive from the reading of the testimony, as well as the report, that the present service of the House urgently needs revision and correction. The House has already authorized the conferees on the legislative appropriation bill to deal with the question of employment and salaries, but it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that no proper regulation of that matter could be had upon a general appropriation bill, and therefore it was deemed best to offer this resolution.

The committee authorized by this resolution will, of course, have the benefit of whatever labor the conferees may perform in accordance with the other resolution; and when this House assembles for the next session of Congress, this committee, I am more than satisfied, will be ready to submit a bill under which these gross abuses will be impossible. I ask for the adoption of the resolution just read.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; and it was adopted.

HOMESTEADS ON FORT FETTERMAN MILITARY RESERVATION, WYO.

Mr. LACEY. I ask the consideration of the conference report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 323) entitled "An act granting homesteaders on the abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation, in Wyoming, the right to enter one quarter section of public land on said reservation as pasture or grazing land, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 4.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

Statement of the House conferees on S. 323, a bill "to grant homesteaders on the abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation, in Wyoming, the right to enter one quarter section of public land on said reservation as pasture or grazing land."

The effect of the report is as follows: The word "enter" is changed to "purchase," and the price is fixed at $1.25 an acre.

The Senate propose that a homesteader may purchase an additional quarter section in the reservation at any place thereon.

The House amendment required that the additional land should be contiguous to the homestead.

As the reservation is small, about 6 miles by 10, the additional grazing land in any event would not be very distant from the homestead of the settler and the House recedes from its amendment requiring that the additional land be contiguous.

JOHN F. LACEY,
CHAS. H. BURKE,
JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question being taken, the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I submit a conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill. I ask that the statement of the House conferees be read in lieu of the conference report.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Without knowing what this report contains, I want to reserve all points of order.

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13801) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 53, 55, 70, 72, 73, and 83.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 67, 68, 71, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, and 82, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 8, line 23, in lieu of the words "forty-three" insert the words "forty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 8, line 23, in lieu of the word "forty-three" insert the word "forty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 33, line 21, strike out the word "ten," stricken out by said amendment, and insert "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 33, line 22, strike out the word "sixty," stricken out by said amendment, and insert "sixty-three;" also, on page 33, line 24, after the word "Columbia," insert "of which sum $3,000 shall be immediately available;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 34, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "forty-six," stricken out by said amendment, and insert "fifty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 39, in line 3, strike out the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House beg to submit to the House the following statement and explanation of the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 13801:

Outside of the amendments affecting the reorganization of the Department and the amendments increasing the appropriations for seeds, to both of which the conferees were directed by the House to agree, the remainder are unimportant and relate mainly to changes of totals, omissions, and typographical errors, with the following exceptions:

Amendment 53, by which the appropriation for the biological investigations was increased $7,500 was receded from by the Senate and the amount left at the figure appropriated by the House.

Amendment 56, by which the Senate increased the amount for the Division of Publications by $5,500, was agreed to by the House conferees and was made immediately available, at the earnest request of the Secretary of Agriculture, in order to expedite the work of getting out Department publications which should be distributed before July 1.

Amendment 64, by which the Senate increased the appropriation for the Division of Statistics by $15,000 was compromised at an increase of $10,000.

Amendment 67, increasing the appropriation for the Department library from $14,000 to $16,000 was agreed to by the House conferees, that being the amount originally estimated for by the Department.

Amendment 69, increasing the appropriation for nutrition investigations from $17,500 to $20,000 was agreed to by the conferees on the part of the House, that amount having been originally estimated for by the Department.

Amendment 70, by which the Senate increased the appropriation for irrigation investigations from $50,000 to $75,000 was receded from by the Senate and the amount allowed to remain at $50,000, as fixed by the House.

Amendment 72, whereby the Senate increased the appropriation for the public road inquiry $7,500, was receded from by the Senate, and the amount appropriated was left as fixed by the House.

Amendment 82, enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to procure plans and specifications for a new building for the Department of Agriculture, to be submitted to the next Congress, was agreed to by the conferees on the part of the House, as the necessity for a new building has long been recognized by members of the Agricultural Committee who are familiar with the inadequate accommodations afforded by the present one, and its inconveniences and the combustible character of its construction.

Amendment 83, which provided for the appeal of section 2 of an act approved March 3, 1885, chapter 338, Revised Statutes, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, was stricken from the bill for the reason that it repealed a good law which ought to apply to all Departments, and not alone to the Department of Agriculture.

The section in question is as follows:

"That no part of the money herein or hereafter appropriated for the Department of Agriculture shall be paid to any person, as additional salary or compensation, receiving at the same time other compensation as an officer or employee of the Government; and in addition to the proper vouchers and accounts for the sums appropriated for the said Department to be furnished to the accounting officers of the Treasury, the Commissioner of Agriculture shall, at the commencement of each regular session, present to Congress a detailed statement of the expenditure of all appropriations for said Department for the last preceding fiscal year."

A law which, in the judgment of the conferees of both Houses, should be made applicable to every Department and branch of the Government service. The bill as agreed upon by the conferees carries $4,581,520, an increase of $236,820 over the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask for the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to was laid on the table.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 5499. Pending that motion, I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on this bill be closed in five minutes; and upon that motion I ask the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to make the motion that the House adjourn, which, I think, takes precedence.

Mr. HEPBURN. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were on a division—ayes 126, noes 61.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 80, answered "present" 10, not voting 97; as follows:

YEAS—166.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, in pursuance of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1898 (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 30, pp. 645, 646), the report of Mr. Ferdinand W. Peck, commissioner-general of the United States to the International Exposition held at Paris, France, during the year 1900.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 28, 1901.

POTOMAC RIVER FLATS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13865) relative to the suit instituted for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats.

The amendments were read, and, on motion of Mr. JENKINS, concurred in.

PUBLIC COMFORT ON INAUGURATION DAY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (S. R. 164) giving the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to provide for the public comfort; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution.

There was no objection.

The House proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to expend a sum not to exceed $500 from the emergency fund of the District of Columbia to provide for the public comfort during the approaching inaugural ceremonies; and the said commissioners may from time to time issue temporary permits for the aforesaid purpose, subject to such regulations as they may prescribe.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JAMES KELLY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7760) for the relief of James Kelly, with a Senate amendment.

The bill and the Senate amendment were read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER, LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 6054) authorizing the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company to construct a bridge across Red River, Louisiana.

The bill was read at length.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The House bill similar to the one just passed will lie on the table; and of the others, Senate bills 5935 and 6012, the House bills corresponding to those will lie on the table.

BILLS ORDERED TO LIE ON THE TABLE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submits a list of House bills where similar Senate bills have passed; these bills to lie on the table.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bills, duplicates of which have passed the House, to lie upon the table.

H. R. 2365. A bill to complete the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Sheridan, in the State of Wyoming, and making an appropriation therefor. (By Mr. MONDELL.) (Union Calendar No. 10.)

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 1, 1901.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. PLATT of New York, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, without objection.

LIST OF JUDGMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 26th ultimo, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims not heretofore reported to Congress, amounting to $300,919.88.

The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the communication and accompanying papers. Does the Senator desire to have them printed?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask to have them printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I hope the Public Printer will be admonished to have them returned by to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication and accompanying papers will be ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LIST OF CLAIMS ALLOWED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 26th ultimo, a list of claims allowed by the accounting officer of the Treasury under appropriations, the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INSPECTION OF BUILDINGS IN THE CITY OF WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in connection with the report submitted on the 27th ultimo, a final report of inspection of buildings in the city of Washington occupied by the War Department, made by Maj. John Tweedale, assistant chief of the Record and Pension Office; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th ultimo, a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with copies of all papers relating to the location, right of location, claimed leased acquisition of title to mining land or the privileges of exploring for minerals on any part of the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona and New Mexico; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agréed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 7760) for the relief of James Kelly; and

A bill (H. R. 13865) relative to the suit instituted for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 5935) authorizing the Montgomery and Autauga Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery; Ala.;

A bill (S. 6012) to provide an American register for the steam yacht May;

A bill (S. 6054) authorizing the Texas and Pacific Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River, Louisiana; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 164) giving the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to provide for the public comfort.

DELINQUENT CHILDREN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13067) to enlarge the powers of the courts of the District of Columbia in cases involving delinquent children, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

He also presented petitions of 38 citizens of West Mill Creek, of the Woman's General Missionary Society of the United Presbyterian Church, of 48 citizens of Philadelphia, and of 50 citizens of Petrolia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPOONER presented the following memorial of the legislature of Wisconsin; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD:

Memorial to Congress for the repeal of that part of the war-revenue act passed by Congress on June 13, 1898, which levies a tax on legacies and distributive shares of personal property.

The memorial of the legislature of Wisconsin to the Congress of the United States respectfully shows that in the opinion of the legislature the imposition of inheritance or succession taxes belongs, except in certain exigencies, to the domain of State taxation; that the emergency of war which may have justified the feature of the national war-revenue act of June 13, 1898, levying a tax on legacies and distributive shares of personal property has now passed away; that many of the States have already adopted, and many more will soon adopt such inheritance-tax laws, and if such feature of the national act remains in force a large amount of property in the country will be subjected to double taxation, once by the Federal Government and again by the State; and that it is expedient and would be good governmental policy that the part of such national revenue act imposing a tax on legacies and distributive shares be repealed and this feature of taxation be left entirely to the jurisdiction and control of the States. It is the purpose of this memorial, therefore, to respectfully request of Congress the repeal of said feature of the revenue act during the present session.

Resolved, That the governor be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of this memorial to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Wisconsin.

JESSE STONE,
President of the Senate.

GEORGE H. RAY,
Speaker of the Assembly.

Mr. KYLE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of South Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, opium, and firearms in the New Hebrides and other islands of the Pacific; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Federation of Labor of Chicago, Ill., favoring the holding of all public lands for actual settlers, and for the construction of reservoirs for the irrigation of arid lands, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FRYE presented a memorial of the National Civil Service Reform League of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation giving preference to veterans in the public service; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

UNLAWFUL TRADE RESTRAINTS AND MONOPOLIES.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I present a letter prepared by Hon. F. S. Monnett, attorney-general of the State of Ohio, on the subject of the anti-trust bill. I move that the letter be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

AGREEMENTS WITH CHEROKEE AND MUSCOGEE INDIANS.

Mr. THURSTON. I present the hearings before the conference committee of the Senate and House of Representatives on House bill 11820, to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Cherokee tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, and also on House bill 11821, to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes. I move that they be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4338) for the erection of a public building at Georgetown, S. C., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,000 for the preparation of a site and the erection of a pedestal for a statue of the late Henry Wadsworth Longfellow in the city of Washington, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and moved that it lie on the table; which was agreed to.

A bill (H. R. 231) for the relief of John Dailey;

A bill (S. 1370) to correct the military record of William T. Rominger; and

A bill (S. 3511) for the relief of Capt. Charles A. De Arnaud.

HISTORY OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That of Senate Document No. 60, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, all copies delivered to the Senate document room be bound in cloth.

REPORT OF GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 306) concerning printing of additional copies of the Annual Report of the Geological Survey, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that of the volumes or parts of the Annual Report of the Geological Survey which relate to hydrography, forestry, and mining and mineral resources there shall hereafter be published 1,000 copies in addition to the number now published, for distribution by the Geological Survey.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 6,000 additional copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the Production of the Precious Metals for the Calendar Year 1899, bound in cloth and wrapped, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives,

1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

And be it further resolved, That there also be printed 3,000 additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint covering the operations of the mints and assay offices of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, to be bound in cloth and wrapped, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed from the stereotype plates in the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies of House of Representatives Document No. 171, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, entitled Agricultural Resources and Capabilities of Porto Rico, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture, the quality of paper and style of binding to be the same as in the original edition of the publication.

AGRICULTURAL INVESTIGATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed from the stereotype plates in the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies of House of Representatives Document No. 335, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, entitled Fourth Report on the Agricultural Investigations in Alaska, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture, the quality of paper and style of binding to be the same as in the original edition of the publication.

PORT OF LOWELLTOWN, ME.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5943) to establish Lowelltown, Me., a subport of entry, to report it with amendments. It is very short, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce were, in line 5, before the word "Maine," to strike out "Bath" and insert "Bangor," and in the same line, after the word "Maine," to strike out:

And that the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and are hereby, extended to said port.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Lowelltown, Me., be, and is hereby, established as a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Bangor, Me.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMILIE L. MAJOR AND OTHERS.

Mr. McCOMAS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills:

A bill (S. 884) for the relief of Emilie L. Major;

A bill (S. 2146) for the relief of Jacob Bool, administrator of the estate of Mary C. Kleindienst, deceased;

A bill (S. 2503) for the relief of Deford & Co., of Baltimore, Md.;

A bill (S. 3367) for the relief George Brewer;

A bill (S. 4860) for the relief of Horace Resley;

A bill (S. 5328) for the relief of inspectors of customs who performed double duty;

A bill (S. 5691) for the relief of John Q. Everson and others; and

A bill (S. 5896) for the relief of the legal representatives of Jacob C. Blum, deceased—reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the claims represented by the following bills, to wit: S. 884, S. 2146, S. 2503, S. 3367, S. 4860, S. 5328, S. 5691, and S. 5896, for the relief of Emilie L. Major; for the relief of Jacob Bool, administrator of the estate of Mary C. Kleindienst, deceased; for the relief of Deford & Co.; for the relief of George Brewer; for the relief of Horace Resley; for the relief of inspectors of customs who performed double duty; for the relief of John Q. Everson and others, and for the relief of the legal representatives of Jacob C. Blum, deceased, now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

JAMES BIGLER.

Mr. DEPEW, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3583) for the relief of James Bigler, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3583) entitled "A bill for the relief of James Bigler," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

BONDS OF PIMA COUNTY, ARIZ.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I should like to call up the conference report on House bill 8068.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont calls up a conference report which has been previously submitted. The report will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 8068, "An act authorizing the board of supervisors of Pima County, Ariz., to issue fifty-year 5 per cent bonds of Pima County, Ariz., to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said county."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report has been read in full. Will the Senate agree to the report?

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will consider the question open, if the Senator desires.

Mr. PETTIGREW. No; I am perfectly willing that it shall be agreed to, but I will enter my motion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

REPORT ON CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. From the Committee on Relations with Cuba, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to investigate certain matters regarding the receipts and expenditures within the island of Cuba, I submit a report, and therewith certain statements which have been secured by the committee and printed. If it is desired that the report should be read, it may be read. Otherwise, I ask that it lie on the table, and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut, from the Committee on Relations with Cuba, makes a report; which will be printed, and lie on the table. He also reports certain testimony taken, and papers. Does the Senator make any request as to the printing of the testimony?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No request.

Mr. MONEY. I shall be glad to have permission to make a minority report, if I see fit to do so after reading the report. I have not seen nor read the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the Senator from Mississippi will have permission to file views of the minority.

Mr. MONEY. Allow me; I do not know that I will make a minority report, but I should like to have that privilege if I disagree with the report of the majority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Mississippi to submit views of the minority, without objection, is granted.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 6065) to establish a national military park at the battlefield of Fort Stevens, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CARTER submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate of the Fifty-sixth Congress five sets of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, to be distributed by the Secretary of War to such permanent libraries and educational institutions as may be designated by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Henry T. Clarke the sum of $5,500 for the value and rent of buildings in Sarpy County, Nebr., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the completion of the custom-house and post-office building at Buffalo, N. Y., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVILEGES OF OFFICERS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. ALLEN. I send to the desk and ask for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate if commissioned officers in the naval service promoted from the ranks are in any respect debarred the use of the uniform and other privileges of commissioned officers of the Navy; whether there is any distinction in the insignia of office of such officers and the officers graduates of the Naval Academy; and if so, why, and what steps are being taken, if any, to permit this class of officers to wear the regular insignia and uniform of the naval officers graduated at the Naval Academy.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

LIEUT. COL. H. O. S. HEISTAND.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution and ask that it be read and lie over under the rule.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it has been charged in the public prints that Lieut. Col. H. O. S. Heistand, assistant adjutant-general, was in the summer of 1899 engaged in forming a combination for the purpose of controlling the hemp output of the Philippine Islands; and

Whereas it is further stated that on various occasions he represented as associated with him in the progress of such enterprise George D. Meiklejohn, Assistant Secretary of War; James E. Boyd, Assistant Attorney-General; Charles H. Allen, then Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and H. C. Corbin, Adjutant-General; and

Whereas it is further stated that in connection with the formation of such company said Lieut. Col. H. O. S. Heistand, intending to indicate that the tariff duties of the Philippine Islands would be adjusted for its benefit when formed, wrote the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 31, 1899.

MY DEAR MAJOR HAWKS: Your note of the 26th to hand, and I note with gratification what you say of our prospects and progress. I have sent you a pamphlet showing export duties, etc., as at present arranged. Of course the needs of the future will be met as developments require.

Yours, truly,

H. O. S. HEISTAND.

And

Whereas it is alleged that because of a claim made by Major Hawks upon Lieutenant-Colonel Heistand for compensation for his services in connection with the formation of such company and in part settlement thereof, George D. Meiklejohn, Assistant Secretary of War, guaranteed to Major Hawks a substantial position in the Government service, and did appoint him to the position of customs inspector in the Philippine Islands; and

Whereas shortly after his entry upon service as such inspector, by an order dated before the commencement of said service, said Major Hawks was summarily removed from such position:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate and report to the Senate whether the foregoing statements are true, and particularly if Lieutenant-Colonel Heistand was engaged in such combination and was or was not authorized to represent that other Government officials were so engaged with him, and that tariff duties would be adjusted for their benefit; and also whether the Assistant Secretary of War has used Government positions for the purpose of paying private debts of any officer of the Government, and whether the salary of such position was charged against funds arising from the Philippine Islands; and with full authority to said committee to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and employ a stenographer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. My colleague [Mr. THURSTON] is not in the Chamber this morning, and I think if he were here he would prefer that the resolution should go over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over under the rule, upon the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases requiring an appropriation by Congress, not heretofore reported at the present session.

THE OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 30,000 copies of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the House Committee on Agriculture, together with the briefs submitted relating to House bill No. 3717, 20,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 10,000 copies for the use of the Senate. The usual number shall not be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 28th ultimo, approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 95) to provide for the refunding of certain moneys illegally assessed and collected in the district of Utah;

An act (S. 227) for the relief of the Continental Fire Insurance Company and others;

An act (S. 880) for the relief of L. O. Maddux, doing business as Maddux, Hobart & Co.;

An act (S. 6050) to create the eastern division of the northern Federal judicial district of Georgia, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 157) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to remove from the files of the Department of the Interior certain letters to be donated to the State of Iowa.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had, on this day, approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution;

An act (S. 3481) to permit certain burials of the dead in the lands of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

An act (S. 5014) to authorize the Fourth Pool Connecting Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 159) extending the time within which certain street railroads in the District of Columbia may be constructed.

LETTERS OF JEFFERSON ON CUBAN ANNEXATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. HANSBROUGH on the 18th ultimo, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed to send to the Senate copies of letters written by Thomas Jefferson to President Madison and President Monroe concerning the annexation of Cuba.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Is the Senator who introduced the resolution present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair he is not.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; the Chair rules as a matter of parliamentary law that he is not present, which I think is entirely correct; and I hope the resolution will go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over, retaining its place.

AUTOMATIC CAR COUPLERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from further consideration of H. R. 10302, an act to amend an act to promote the safety of employees, etc., by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, etc., approved March 2, 1893.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I hope this resolution to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill will not be adopted, and I express this hope for the reason that I do not think such a course ought to be pursued with reference to that committee.

The Senator from South Dakota will undoubtedly say that there have been two or three attempts to have a full meeting of the committee, which failed. That is true. At the same time it so happened that on each occasion when the committee had been called together, almost all of its members have been engaged in other committee work, which they could not leave. The result has been that there has been recently no committee meeting with a majority of members present to consider this bill.

I do not think, however, the Senator from South Dakota ought to desire that the committee should be discharged on that account. The committee has been doing its duty as well as it could. I have been anxious that this bill should be reported, but I found on close examination that there ought to be amendments to it. At one time I undertook to get a poll of the committee in the Senate, so as to avoid delay, but it so happened that I failed to get a majority of the committee in favor of the report, as I expected to be able to do. I found that there were amendments desired, and so I had the bill recommitted to the committee for further consideration.

There is, however, nothing in regard to this matter, I think, which justifies the Senator from South Dakota in asking that the committee be discharged from the consideration of the bill. I am still hoping to get a full meeting of the committee when the burden of the work of other committees is disposed of by bills pending before them being reported to the Senate. I still hope we shall have a committee meeting in time for the proper consideration of the bill, so that it may be reported in the regular order and amended as it should be.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, this Congress expires on next Monday at noon. This committee have had this bill in their hands for over two years. On January 17, 1898, I introduced this bill in the Senate and it was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. On February 16, 1898, I introduced a resolution which the Senate passed——

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator does not mean to say that he introduced this bill? The bill to which he now refers is a House bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will give the history of the bill before I conclude my remarks.

Mr. CULLOM. I want the matter to be correctly understood.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I introduced a resolution on the 16th of February, 1898, to which what I shall now read is the response:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, February 16, 1898.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of December 7, 1897, "a list of the railroad companies of the United States that have complied with the requirements of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, requiring the use of safety appliances on cars and engines; also a list of those companies which have partially complied with the requirements of said act, and a list of the companies that have taken no steps to comply with the same; also the number of persons in the employ of the railroad companies of the United States killed or injured each year during the last five years, and the number so killed or injured in the employ of each railroad company," is hereby transmitted.

Respectfully,

MARTIN A. KNAPP, Chairman.

Then follows a table showing the number of men killed for the five previous years; that is, for the years 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, and 1897. It shows that the total number of men killed during those five years was 5,954, and the total number of men injured was 138,403. It shows that in the year 1897 the number of men killed was 1,732 and the number injured 27,623; in 1896 the number killed was 1,861 and the number injured 29,969; in 1895 the number killed was 1,811 and the number injured 25,696; in 1894 the number killed was 1,823 and the number injured 23,395; in 1893, before the safety appliances were used, the number killed was 2,727, the number injured 31,724. Although the number of men employed increased the number of men killed and injured decreased, as the result of the passage of the legislation which required safety appliances.

Mr. President, all we asked in that bill was this:

That when any collision of trains, where one of the trains is a passenger train, or both the trains are passenger trains, shall occur on a railroad of any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce by railroad, or where any passenger train, or any part of a passenger train, accidentally leaves the rails of the road, it shall be the duty of the general superintendent, or general manager, or other officer in charge of the movement of trains on said road, immediately thereafter to transmit a full and detailed report, under oath, of such accident, and the causes thereof, so far as known, to the Interstate Commerce Commission at their office at Washington, D. C.

This was a bill that I introduced in 1898. I followed it up with the resolution calling for statistics upon this subject.

The Interstate Commerce Committee have never reported this bill, although it has been in their possession now for three years. At the last Congress, the House of Representatives passed a bill which is now before the committee. It came to this body some time last spring. It has been before the Committee on Interstate Commerce all winter and during this entire session, and we can not even get a report upon it.

The representative of the Locomotive Engineers and Firemen in this country, Mr. R. H. Fuller, has been here for weeks trying to secure a report. He has been importuning the Committee on Interstate Commerce, simply for what? Simply that they shall pass a bill requiring the railroads to file with the Interstate Commerce Commission a statement of the number of men they kill, or that are killed in their employ, the number injured, and the causes. They are important statistics. Why any railroad should object is more than I can understand. Why it should take the Committee on Interstate Commerce three years to consider this subject, and why they were unable all this winter to get a meeting at all is more than I can understand, unless the railroads want to defeat the measure and control the committee.

I ask to have the Secretary read the testimony of R. H. Fuller, legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, April 23, 1900, on the bill (S. 3604) to amend an act to promote the safety of employees, etc. I ask to have the Secretary read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

MR. CHAIRMAN: As the representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, Order of Railway Conductors, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, I would respectfully ask your favorable consideration of S. 3604.

The object of this bill is to require common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to report under oath to the Interstate Commerce Commission the details of all accidents to passenger trains, passengers, and employees. This information can not be obtained by the present law, and it is impossible through the present plan of collecting information to make proper classifications of injuries and their causes.

For instance, an employee whose duties are mostly the coupling of cars may get injured or killed by being knocked off a car. In many instances the cause of such accident would be reported to the commission as "coupling cars:" reported so for the reason that the man's duties were those of coupling of cars. Or a switchman may, while making a coupling, get a foot caught in a frog, guard rail, crossing plank, or a hole in a platform, and be run over. The cause of this injury would be reported as "coupling cars," for the reason that he was coupling cars when he got his foot caught; but the real cause of the injury was getting his foot caught. A trainman may be knocked from the top of a train by the sudden application of the air brakes, caused by the bursting of a defective air hose or the train separating on account of a defective coupling. This accident would be reported under the head of "falling from trains," when the real cause of the injury was a defective air hose or a defective car coupling.

Then, too, a trainman may be either permitted or required to go out on duty without having had an opportunity to get sufficient sleep between trips. He may go to sleep and allow his train to be run into by another train, killing and injuring several of his fellow-employees, or, if it be a passenger train, several passengers may be killed or injured. All of these injuries would be reported under the head of "collisions," when the actual cause of them was that the company had either permitted or required this trainman to go out on duty when it well knew that he had not had sufficient time to rest after arriving from his previous trip.

I have had copied, and herewith submit to you, two verdicts of coroners' juries in cases where two men had been killed on the same road within a period of thirty-six days on account of the train crews being permitted and required to go on duty without sufficient time for rest and went to sleep and allowed their trains to be run into by other trains.

And in addition to the two men killed in these cases four others were seriously injured. If any of the members of your committee would take the trouble to go to the office of the Interstate Commerce Commission and examine the reports of this road for the year 1899, they will find there will be no detailed accounts of these accidents, and the causes of these two deaths and four injuries will be reported as "collisions" or "other causes."

We believe if the common carriers are required to report the details and causes of accidents to the Government it will contribute considerably to the safety of travel and employment on railroads, inasmuch as the companies will dislike very much to make reports of accidents the causes of which reflect more or less upon their management; and consequently they will take extra precautions against accidents.

We believe, too, that in order to further reduce the number of injuries, both by legislation and other means, we must first know the causes, so as to be able to go about it intelligently.

I am unable to perceive why there should be any serious objections made by the companies to the passage of this bill. I do not think there will be any by those managers who would like to see accidents reduced to a minimum.

So far as the work is concerned in making these reports to the commission, it will require very little extra labor on the part of the roads, for all the information necessary to make such reports is now collected and kept on file in their offices, it being the practice of officers of the roads to make thorough and searching investigations of all accidents of trains and injuries to employees and passengers, and this bill only asks that they give the Government a copy of the information that they have already on file in their offices.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I have petitions here asking for the passage of this bill. These petitions state that the bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce a year ago, on the 14th day of March, the bill having come over from the House of Representatives, and that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers has been insistent ever since that the bill should pass. I think it is the most justifiable case I know of for discharging a committee which can never get a quorum. I have no criticism to make of the chairman of the committee; but this committee will not operate; the members will not attend meetings. The questions presented to this committee are not of enough importance, it would seem, and therefore the committee ought to be discharged from the consideration of this bill, and then the committee itself ought to be discharged and a new committee formed of men who will attend to their duties. I should think the chairman of the committee himself ought to bring in a resolution to that effect, so as to get a committee that will perform its functions. It is a great and important committee, which came into being as the result of the efforts of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I should think he would be tired of having a committee composed of men who will never meet.

The petitions which I have here are largely from West Virginia. I am not going to put them into the RECORD, because they attack the Senators from West Virginia for not having acted in this matter.

These petitions are from lodges of locomotive engineers and firemen. One is from Richard Wyatt Lodge, No. 544. In this petition they go on to give the reasons why this bill should be passed. This lodge is located at Point Pleasant, W. Va. Another is from Hinton, W. Va., from the lodge of locomotive engineers there. The statements are all under the seal of the lodge, urging the passage of this bill. Another contains resolutions of the lodge at Martinsburg, W. Va., urging the passage of Senate bill 3604; another is from Sewell, W. Va., urging the passage of the same bill. These men go on to say that it is a matter of great importance to them—to the locomotive engineers and to all men employed by the railroads—that this bill should be passed; and they think it will assist in preventing accidents, and therefore make life more secure in this hazardous employment.

I have also a resolution passed by the W. B. Ryder Lodge, No. 232, at Hinton, W. Va.; another resolution from a lodge at Point Pleasant, W. Va.; another from Grafton, W. Va., also urging and arguing why this bill should pass; and I have another from Lodge No. 477, which is also located in West Virginia.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that what we ought to do is, without any resistance on the part of this committee, to discharge it from the further consideration of this bill, place it upon the Calendar, and then proceed to its immediate consideration. It is a short bill, it has passed the other House, and the bill will die if it does not pass between now and Monday next. I can see no good reason why the bill should not be taken up and passed now.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, we get in the Senate, in the press, in magazines, and in private letters a great many wild schemes for the regulation of great business enterprises, and especially for the regulation of railroads. Many of them are taking and plausible, as first stated, but if they were adopted they would destroy vast properties, they would destroy the value of the great carrying systems of the country, and in that way injure the whole country, not merely the business and trade, but an instrument of the greatest value and importance to the poor people. Many of those schemes are fraught with great public danger, and the best way to prevent them finding public favor is to hold these great business corporations to a strict performance of their public duties in plain cases.

One of their public duties, the clearest and possibly the plainest case, is that of having care and consideration for human life, whether it be the lives of passengers or the lives of the vast number of intelligent men who are in their employ, It is of immense importance that they should have intelligent men in their employ, and that their employ should be an object of desire for skillful, honest, sober, and temperate men, good citizens, and heads of families. That it may be an object of desire, it ought to be known that the railroad companies are as careful of the lives of these men as they would be of the lives of their directors. I do not mean to propose it—though I do not know but my friend from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] would, if he got a chance—but nobody doubts that it would add 50 per cent to the safety of passengers and workmen on our railroad trains if a railroad director were required to be tied in front of the engine of every passenger train. If they had that care for other lives that they would have for their own we should get some improvement.

The statistics of the injuries and loss of life to railroad employees are terrible; and this mild measure, that merely requires the return which is required, I suppose, in every State in regard to carriers engaged in State commerce, it seems to me is one that no reasonable railroad man ought to object to. I think that it ought to go further, and I wish somebody in the next Congress might introduce, and that this great committee might favor, a proposition such as prevails, I suppose, in nearly all the States in this country, that wherever there is loss of life on a railroad engaged in interstate commerce there should be an inquest like the ordinary coroner's inquest, which applies to every case of violent loss of life in England, and has in this country from the beginning. There should be an inquest conducted under the direction of the United States district attorney for the district, the result of which should be reported either to the Attorney-General or to the Interstate Commerce Commission. So that if there were time now to pass a bill, or to amend this bill, I should like to have such a provision added to it.

I do not mean for a moment to join in any criticism of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I know nothing about the history which the honorable Senator from South Dakota has narrated; but as this great question is up, I wanted to state my opinion.

There was a proposition some years ago——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I will give way in a moment.

There was a proposition some years ago to require the railroads engaged in interstate commerce to adopt certain precautions in the way of safety in coupling cars—one of the most dangerous things in the railroad service—and I think it was finally adopted. I introduced originally, at the application of some very intelligent constituents of my own, that measure when it was first brought up here; and there was certainly nothing that could be called alacrity on the part of some of the great railroads in responding to that demand.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator will allow me, I merely wish to furnish the information that that law was carried out by the railroads at an expense of $125,000,000.

Mr. HOAR. Well, if it had been at an expense of $1,125,000,000 it would have been cheap if it saved the lives of 5,000 American citizens.

Mr. SEWELL. I only say that that was done.

Mr. HOAR. I understood, and I said so; but I say now that, while it was done, the proposition was by no means received with alacrity on the part of some of the great railroad systems of the country.

I am no enemy of railroads. I never would be for a moment engaged in a demagogic attack upon them, as the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] must know, if he knows me; but I say again, if you want to crush out wild socialistic, demagogic, political schemes and attacks on great business industries and interests in this country, those great interests must, in their turn, remove all reasonable and proper causes of complaint.

There are, I suppose, nearly a million employees—I do no know but more—in the service of the railroads of this country. They are a class of citizens who are far above the lowest class in this country. They are the equal of anybody in sobriety, in industry, in courage, in their intelligence, in their discharge of all the relations of life. They are the best, or as good as the best—I will not say "the best"—but as good as the best American citizenship that we have got, and the question whether 5,000 lives of those men are sacrificed needlessly every year is a grave question, deserving the attention of the statesmanship of the country, even in its highest legislative Chamber.

I say again, that we ought not only to require these returns, but we ought to require an inquest in every case of loss of life, under the Government's authority, as the common law required in England and in this country from the beginning in other cases; and that if instead of costing $125,000,000 a year, it should cost $1,125,000,000 a year, it would be cheap if it saved the lives of our citizens.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I do not care for the moment to discuss this particular measure or the action of the committee. I am a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and, in common with other members of that committee, have been engaged upon conference and other duties relating to other branches of the public service, but I am unwilling that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] should make a statement to this Senate that would intimate that the managers and directors of the great railroads of the country are careless and inhuman men, who view with indifference the destruction of the lives of their employees.

If certain Senators had stated on the floor of the Senate that if we all knew that if directors were tied in front of their locomotives the loss of life would be less, nobody would have minded that, for everybody would have known it was an absurd and ridiculous statement, but for the Senator from Massachusetts to intimate that people having in charge these vast interests are indifferent or careless to human life is a statement that must not go unchallenged. Does not the Senator from Massachusetts know that every man in charge of these great interests devotes his constant care and time and skill and attention to the preservation of the lives of his employees? Ninety per cent of the accidents which occur on the railroads of the country are caused by the negligence of co or fellow employees. In spite of all the efforts of the railroads to secure not only the lives of their passengers, but the protection of the lives of their employees, it is impossible to prevent men from becoming careless.

The Senator refers to the adoption of the safety appliances that were compelled to be put upon the cars. Mr. President, there were only two objections—first, the great expense, and second, the impossibility of finding patents that would be universally applicable which would, in the opinion of the most skilled mechanicians, best secure the safety of the employees. The trouble comes not with the inhumanity of railroad employers; it comes largely from the carelessness of their employees. It was in testimony before the commission that road after road furnished for its switchmen the sticks with which to couple cars so that it could be done with safety, and they never could get them to use them. They are a brave, reckless, careless lot of fellows, and the carelessness is bred by freedom from accident day after day, until finally some day they are caught in a frog or caught between cars and the accident comes.

The Senator from Massachusetts says there should be inquests, even if it cost a thousand million dollars a year to do it. Mr. President, there is not a railroad accident of the most unimportant character on any reputable road in the country where from the lowest to the highest everybody is not interrogated and compelled to make his report, and where the railroad management is not informed as to the cause of the accident, and it is done at enormous trouble and enormous expense. There is not an appliance that will help to save human life that the railroads are not quick to adopt.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to interrupt him at this point?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. So far as I know, the laws of all the States of the Union require reports of this character to be made to their railroad commissions.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And if they did not they would——

Mr. ALDRICH. The company would make them anyway.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If they did not, the companies would make them anyway.

But, Mr. President, what I rose to object to was the suggestion that men who manage railroads are a great, bloated, indifferent, inhumane lot of men who are willing that their switchmen and their brakemen and their conductors shall be run over day after day, provided only their pockets can be filled with dividends. Mr. President, they are like the rest of us. They are men of ability or they would not have their places, and if they were not men of character their stockholders would not intrust them with the management of these great interests; and I resent, Mr. President, the suggestion made that railroads are so conducted that human life would be safer if their directors were tied in front of the locomotives.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to say one word. The suggestion which my honorable friend the Senator from Colorado resents is a creature of his own heated imagination. No human being has said any such thing as he explodes about, like Vesuvius, though with all the gas and none of the lava. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, he says and I say that the railroad managers of this country are in the main humane, careful men, who respect human life. Nobody doubts it. They are not only humane, but human, and it is the tendency of all human nature, when it is charged with great money-making responsibilities, to get careless about other things and careful of the money-making, and the experience of all mankind shows that the strictest legislative safeguards are necessary against that tendency.

While the Senator from Colorado was speaking the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] got up to say that the precise thing which I said ought to be done in the matter of interstate and international commerce was done in every State in this Union in regard to other commerce.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me, there is no question of State or interstate commerce involved here. The accident must be in some State, and under the jurisdiction of some State, and the reports are made to the State authorities.

Mr. HOAR. I differ with my honorable friend who thinks there is no question of interstate or international commerce here. I think, so far as relates to merely interstate or international commerce, the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States deprive the States of the power to make the precise regulation which is in question. Whether they are in force or not, they are not lawfully and constitutionally in force.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator mean to say that Congress has any jurisdiction over accidents to property or to life in the States, especially to life?

Mr. HOAR. I do mean to say that when interstate or international commerce is being conducted by a common carrier, we have the constitutional authority to require of that common carrier proper safeguards for life and limb; and we have asserted, and the committee of which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is chairman have again and again asserted, our right to exercise that jurisdiction.

But I desire to go back to what my bellicose friend from Colorado has been saying. One of the best railroad engineers—I speak now of the engineer who manages the locomotive—I ever knew, a man who was respected in the community where I dwell for more than fifty years, as an engineer on the Boston and Worcester Railroad in old times, a native of the town where I was born, said that he was entirely unmanned when his wife or children were on the train that he was conducting. The anxious responsibility when a man has the life of those who are dear to him at stake is very different from the feeling of the man who has been thirty or forty years in such a business, looking out for the dividends. Everybody knows that in regard to steamboats, the local steamboats and the international steamboats that carry passengers, we require the most constant and strict regulation by Congress in regard to security for life and limb. Everybody knows that but for our inspections and our strict laws the risk of passengers at sea and on our rivers would be doubled and trebled. Does anybody doubt that the owner of the Western steamer has not a humane regard for his passengers when he is on board and the captain is racing with a rival and he puts a negro to sit on the safety valve? My usually sensible friend is utterly preposterous this morning.

We have a right to require, and it is our duty to require, of the great international transportation lines that carry passengers, the strictest security for human life which the wit of man can devise. It is no imputation, either upon the humanity or the integrity of the managers of those lines, to say that they require the support and the stimulant of Congressional legislation. I say again, it is because I respect these men, it is because I have no sympathy with the wild socialistic schemes which would destroy alike their value and their usefulness, it is because great American capital is invested in them, it is because a million of our best laborers are employed by them, it is because they are entitled to the care and protection of the National Legislature, that I say we can best secure to them the value of their property and the security of their franchises against socialistic legislation, and for these, among other reasons, we must hold them up to a strict performance of these duties which are now in question.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I desire to have read by the Secretary a telegram from Baltimore, signed by H. L. Eichelberger, secretary of the Baltimore Federation of Labor, bearing upon this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the telegram will be read. The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BALTIMORE, MD., February 23, 1901.

Hon. GEORGE L. WELLINGTON,
Ebbitt House, Washington, D. C.:

Organized labor is not ignorant at treatment of labor legislation, and urge you to support Senator PETTIGREW'S resolution to discharge committee from further consideration of eight-hour bill and put it on its immediate passage.

H. L. EICHELBERGER,
Secretary Baltimore Federation of Labor.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I desire to say in regard to the telegram that without it I should have supported the resolution of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. I am not prone to find fault with committees. I believe that very frequently the very fact of their not reporting upon measures is for the benefit of the country. But there is in this Congress an evident determination that there shall be reports upon measures which favor certain classes of people in this country and that there shall not be reports upon measures which favor other classes in this country. There was no difficulty in having reported to the Senate a bill giving ship subsidies. Was that in favor of labor or of capital? Primarily it was in favor of American capital. There was no difficulty in the last hours of the Congress in having put upon an appropriation bill the report of a committee in the shape of an amendment which is in favor of imperialism as against American labor. But notwithstanding the fact that these bills have been before the Committee on Labor in the Senate for over a year, there has been no report and there is no evidence of a report, and these people charge that there is somewhere an influence which prevents even a meeting of the committee to make an investigation of the matter.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WELLINGTON. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator tell the Senate why during the past three years there has been no report from the Committee to Establish the University of the United States upon the national university bill?

Mr. WELLINGTON. I will tell the Senator if the Senate in this connection seems to want the information.

Mr. KYLE. Is this not a parallel case?

Mr. WELLINGTON. It has nothing to do with this question. If you wish to drag the University of the United States into this matter, then I will reply with a question. Why is it that for a century this scheme has lain dormant and it has been impossible to secure action by Congress at any time?

Mr. KYLE. If the Senator desires me to reply, I will say it is precisely for the same reason a great many important questions sleep in committees. The committees do not want to pass them. That is all.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Did the committee desire to pass it when the Senator from South Dakota was chairman of the committee?

Mr. KYLE. They did not desire to do it.

Mr. WELLINGTON. They did not desire to pass it. They do not desire to pass it now, and the Senator is honest enough to say so.

Mr. KYLE. I presume that is the case with the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Then, I will say to the chairman, why was not the committee manly enough to do that? Why does not the chairman appear before the Senate and say, "We do not desire to make any report upon this proposition?"

Mr. CULLOM. To whom does the Senator refer? To what committee does he refer?

Mr. WELLINGTON. I refer to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CULLOM. Oh.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I do not refer to the Senator from Illinois. I think I have been plain enough in speaking about the matter.

Mr. KYLE. I will gladly reply.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I shall be very glad to have him do so.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator from South Dakota is not the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I have made no accusation against the Senator, but it is against his committee. If he chooses to shoulder the responsibility for his committee, of course it must go against him.

Mr. KYLE. I desire to repeat that I am not chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Certainly not; but it is upon the labor question we are talking just now.

Mr. KYLE. I beg pardon, but we are discussing the question relating to the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. WELLINGTON. You were finding fault with the committee to establish the University of the United States.

Mr. KYLE. Certainly; and I think it is a dead parallel to the question under consideration. The Senator from Maryland refused to report a bill when nearly all the great universities of the country demanded that he should report it.

Mr. WELLINGTON. The Senator does not refuse to report the bill—emphatically not. The Senator made every endeavor to report the bill, but the committee would not do so.

Mr. KYLE. Why not report it?

Mr. WELLINGTON. The committee will not do so.

Mr. KYLE. That is exactly the situation with reference to this bill and also the one before the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Now, then, if the Senator from Illinois desires to enter this controversy, I have just this to say to him——

Mr. CULLOM. I have no desire to enter the controversy as to any other committee, but I do wish to have something to say about my own committee.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Very well. Do I understand that this measure is before the Senator's committee?

Mr. CULLOM. What measure?

Mr. WELLINGTON. This matter of the labor question.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly it is.

Mr. LODGE. This bill is.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill is before that committee.

Mr. KYLE. Not the eight-hour labor bill.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I am talking about the eight-hour labor bill. I understand the motion of the Senator from South Dakota to be to take that measure out of the hands of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. It is, with what measure are we dealing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A resolution touching the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will inform the Senator, if he desires, that it is House bill 10302, to amend an act in regard to safety appliances on railroads, and requiring the companies to furnish a statement to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the accidents which occur and the causes.

Mr. WELLINGTON. That is very good; so far as it goes it is all right; but I want before I sit down, right here and now, to emphasize the fact that this telegram is in regard to the general legislation and the general condition, and that what applies to one committee applies to all committees having these measures in charge.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I dislike very much to continue this discussion, but I do desire to say a few words. I assume that there is no Senator here who can justly charge me with indifference to the interests of the people in connection with railroads, or to human life in whatever engagement it may be employed. Neither do I want it understood that I have no disposition to enact such legislation as will be in the interest of that great body of men employed by the railroads, numbering, as has been stated here, perhaps over a million. But, on the contrary, I have had, and do have now, a great desire to do what seems to be the best for them in the premises consistent with the public interest generally.

This question, it is true, has been before the committee for some time, and it is true that the committee has never agreed upon a bill; and in that committee I may say truthfully, I think, and with propriety, there have been grave questions involved in bills referred to the committee which have taken the time of and created earnest discussion among the members of the committee very many times in their sessions.

Those questions have been of such a character that it has seemed to be almost impossible for the committee to agree upon some of the measures referred to the committee by the Senate; but we have done the best we could, and because the committee so far have failed to agree upon this bill is no reason, in my judgment, why the bill should be taken out of its hands and brought into the Senate for consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Is it not true that a majority of the committee are against the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I am not able to say whether it is or not. I hope not. I have been hoping from time to time to get a favorable report upon some bill on this question. I think that the majority, perhaps, of the committee are not in favor of the bill as it comes from the House, because, in my judgment, it can be greatly simplified and enlarged at the same time in the interest of the people who are employed by the railroad corporations of the country.

What I have desired to do was, in the language of the Senator from Massachusetts, to perfect a bill so that when it is reported and passed through the Senate it will cover every phase of the case that ought to be covered by legislation. The bill that is sought to be brought before the Senate is an imperfect bill. It was drawn, I suppose, by some representatives of labor, and they have their own ideas of what ought to be enacted; but when it comes to enforcing the bill it requires unnecessary work and does not cover all the interests that ought to be covered by it.

All that I desire to say is that the Committee on Interstate Commerce have desired to do their duty. They have no disposition to shirk responsibilities, but the class of questions which come before that committee are always of a character that seem to justify and result in differences of opinion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me for one moment?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have in my hand a copy of this bill, from which it appears that the Senator from Illinois reported this bill with amendments on the 22d day of February last. I wish to ask him if I am correct in supposing that it has been recommitted to the committee since that time?

Mr. CULLOM. It was recommitted. I desire to explain, as I did in the beginning——

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not hear that, and I should like to know why it was recommitted.

Mr. CULLOM. A majority of the committee failing to attend a particular meeting, and desiring on my part to secure the passage of a bill, I undertook to poll the committee in the Senate, and I thought I had a majority of the committee in favor of it; but afterwards I found that I did not, and my own honor in the premises required that the bill should be referred back for further consideration, and so it is now before the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I see.

Mr. CULLOM. I assure the Senator from South Dakota that I will make an effort again to get a meeting of the committee, so that we may be able to perfect the bill, and I hope we will be able to pass it before this Congress shall adjourn. I desire to do it. I have been for a bill on this question from the beginning, and several Senators on the committee have been for it just as it is. I think the bill ought to be perfected before we bring it in and ask the Senate to pass it.

Mr. ALLEN rose.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to ask me a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I thought the Senator from Illinois had concluded. As a member of the committee, I desire to submit some remarks before the resolution is passed upon.

Mr. CULLOM. I have not quite concluded. My own opinion is that we can pass this bill before the session adjourns and get it into a law if the House will act upon it promptly; and when we do we will have something that will be of some value to the laboring people of the country and not unnecessarily impose work upon the railroads or the Interstate Commerce Commission either. That is all I desire to say. I do not wish to shirk any responsibility that is put upon me in any direction whatever.

Mr. ALLISON. I have allowed this matter to run on for some time, and I appeal now to the Senator from South Dakota, after the assurances made by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to allow his resolution to lie over for a day without losing its place; and then I will ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I can not comply with the request of the Senator from Iowa. The Congress ends in a very few days. I have tried to have this measure considered, and all we ask now is a vote. All we ask in regard to legislation is this:

That where any collision of trains, where one of the trains is a passenger train, shall occur on a railroad of any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce by railroad, or where any passenger train, or any part of a passenger train, accidentally leaves the rails it shall be the duty of the general manager or other proper officer of such common carrier to transmit a report, under oath, showing in detail the nature and causes thereof, to the Interstate Commerce Commission at its office at Washington, D. C. It shall also be the duty of the general manager or other proper officer of any such common carrier to make to the Interstate Commerce Commission a monthly report, under oath, of all accidents which may occur to its passengers or employees, whether attended with loss of life or personal injury, and such report shall state the causes and circumstances connected therewith.

That is all we want. This bill has been before the committee since last June, and they will not report for or against it. It seems to me this matter ought not to cause debate. The committee ought to have reported the bill in a day. It ought to have passed long ago, and the representatives of the railroad employees have been here ever since, all this session, importuning this committee to report for or against. It will not do either one. Now, we are going to adjourn in two days, and they want more time.

Mr. CULLOM. There are bills in other committees which are older than this one.

Mr. PETTIGREW. They ought not to have it, and I want a vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the motion to discharge the committee will not prevail.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from South Dakota desires a vote. I ask that a vote may be taken upon the resolution without further debate.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I object to the request for unanimous consent. If you are going to take a vote——

Mr. ALLISON. I give notice that very soon I shall move to take up the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not understand how, having stood on my feet for five minutes before the Senator from Iowa arose, he got the floor and I am not recognized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. ALLEN. I am entitled to the floor when I rise and address the Chair, under the rule.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to yield to me for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say that before the Senator from Nebraska rose I also rose and was recognized by the Chair. There was no intention on my part to deprive him of the opportunity to make some remarks, if he desires to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. I addressed the Chair, and stood here all during the remarks of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. ALLISON. I also was standing.

Mr. ALLEN. I beg the Senator's pardon. He was sitting down. I was watching him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to say a word respecting this matter. Being a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I think I am entitled to at least a word of explanation.

I think the chairman of the committee has undertaken to do his duty conscientiously and well. I have during this session been summoned to that committee, I think, three times for the purpose of considering this very measure. Each time I have attended, and each time I have failed to find anyone but the chairman there.

I am well persuaded, so far as my knowledge of the state of sentiment in the committee is concerned, that there is no hope or expectation of getting a favorable report from the Committee on Interstate Commerce upon this bill. I am well satisfied the majority of the committee are against the bill, and it will not be reported, and that the only way for the Senate to consider it at this session of Congress is to adopt the resolution of the Senator from South Dakota and bring the bill before the Senate and put it on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LODGE. This is a resolution to discharge the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A resolution to discharge the committee. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll and called the name of Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I simply desired before voting to say that I shall vote against discharging the committee, for the reason that having carefully read the bill I can not conceive of any possible good that can come from its passage.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Is debate in order?

Mr. HOAR. My colleague rose before the name of the Senator from Rhode Island was called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No answer has been made. Debate is still in order.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to say that I am very loath to vote to discharge any committee of this body; but it seems to me that this is a most reasonable bill. I can see no possible harm in it.

Many years ago I took great interest in what is known as the car-coupler bill, and did what little I could to promote it. In the investigations then I found that in one year there were 25,000 railway employees killed and wounded—as many as fell in one of the greatest battles in the world. It seemed to me that that was a subject to properly engage the attention of Congress, and I advocated the car-coupler bill on that ground. I do not think that railroad men are inhuman. I know they are as desirous to save life as anyone else, but they naturally are averse to expense, and they opposed that bill. It finally became a law.

Now, this is a very much less troublesome measure than that. It is merely a demand for information as to accidents. It may be possible that legislation can diminish them when we have the statistics properly presented. It may be that legislation will be futile to do anything. But it certainly is not unreasonable that we should have the facts before us. That is all that is asked in this bill. I can not see the slightest injustice to any railroad or to any corporation. I can see the possibility of great good to large bodies of men.

The Senator from Iowa asked unanimous consent that a vote might be taken on the resolution. It was objected to. It would have stopped debate and we could have passed upon the measure then and there, and then gone on to the other great business.

Mr. President, I should not have said even this much if we could have had a vote on the question; but as it is I am obliged to vote to discharge the committee, for I think it is a reasonable measure, and if we refuse and vote down all reasonable measures, beware of the unreasonable ones.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am very anxious that this resolution should be voted upon before 1 o'clock; but I think I ought to take the time of the Senate to say that it is my belief, with all due respect to the chairman of the committee, that the committee, of which I am myself a member, should be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the Senate should now vote upon it.

It is not a bill to tie directors in front of the locomotives, and it is not a bill about car couplers or automatic brakes. It is something very simple. It is a bill which provides that when there is an accident the railroad managers shall make a report as to the causes of the accident; and there is a provision in the bill that the report shall never be used in a suit against the railroad company or any person for damages. Now, what is the harm in that bill? None whatever, Mr. President; and it does not need to be amended in order that we may run the risk of having it embargoed and defeated in the House of Representatives.

The members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce have been engaged in many other things this winter, and we have not been able to get the bill reported, but the other day the chairman, thinking he had a majority of the committee polled in favor of the bill, reported it. Subsequently, finding a mistake had been made, he had it recommitted, and we have tried to get a meeting since. At a meeting called for day before yesterday or yesterday there was no one present but the chairman and the Senator from South Carolina and myself. No one else would come; not that they stayed away on purpose. The Senator from Rhode Island was very busy upon an important bill; the Senator from West Virginia was equally busy in the public service, and they did not come.

Now, Mr. President, what is the harm in taking the bill out of the committee and voting on it? What is the harm, I ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, in taking the anti-trust bill out of that committee, where there is so much division of opinion, and bringing it before the Senate, when it is a House bill? These are House bills, Mr. President, and the Senate ought to vote upon them before next Monday at 12 o'clock. What is the harm in it?

Mr. CULLOM. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. In one moment. I hope the chairman, who is in favor of the bill, will let it come before the body for its passage, that the one million railroad employees in this country and the tens of millions of passengers who ride upon the trains may get the benefit of this work of his between now and next Monday at noon.

Mr. ALDRICH obtained the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island has been recognized.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, from the earliest history of the Senate it has been necessary to have standing committees to consider certain subjects. There is no other way in which the business of the Senate can be properly carried on that I know of. The plan which seems about to be adopted, or is suggested, of discharging committees because certain individual Senators think the committees have not properly considered subjects or have considered them too long, or that the judgment of the committees is not in accordance with their judgment, is one which is utterly destructive of the order of the business of the Senate, and should not be indulged in.

The Senator from Massachusetts is very free to discharge another committee, but when a suggestion is made to discharge his own committee from a bill which has been before the committee, he is found voting against it. He would not like at all to have subjects taken from his committee upon the motion of the Senator from South Dakota or of any other Senator.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. I decline to yield at present.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator made a statement about me.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will give the Senator a chance to speak after a while, but not now.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has made a statement which——

Mr. ALDRICH. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island is entitled to the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. HOAR. But, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island declines to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ALDRICH. The junior Senator from Massachusetts would not like to have important matters taken from his committee simply because the Senator from South Dakota or some other Senator should not agree with him as to some matter of public policy.

As to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which I am a member, the chairman of that committee has been necessarily absent from the Senate and from the city for a long time. He has called three or four meetings of the committee within the last two weeks. I was not able to attend the meetings of that committee because I was engaged in more important business, or what seemed to me more important business, elsewhere and it was not possible for me to be present. I know that the Senator from Colorado and other Senators were so engaged that it was impossible for them to be present.

So far as I am concerned, I am quite willing now to attend a meeting of that committee and consider this proposition or any other; but this revolutionary method which is insisted upon here to discharge committees because members of the Senate do not agree with the committee or have some purposes of their own to try to force legislation through the Senate which is not agreed to by the majority of the committee is to be suggested and advocated for the first time.

Now, if I have done any injustice to the Senator from Massachusetts, I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Rhode Island did me a great injustice. I spoke and voted, or I should have voted if the vote had come—I am not sure that it did—in favor of the resolution to discharge the committee of which I am chairman from the matter to which he refers.

Mr. ALDRICH. Was that because he believed the Committee on the Judiciary were not competent to deal with the question which was before it, or because he did not agree with the majority of that committee as to what should be done?

Mr. HOAR. My honorable friend stated to the Senate, under his responsibility as a Senator, that I opposed discharging my committee; and having informed him that I not only did not oppose it, but favored it and spoke in favor of it and said that I was delighted that the motion was introduced, when he is informed of that he does not take back his statement and turns around and wants to know what my motives were.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Colorado made the statement.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask what motion it was to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary that the Senator from Massachusetts favored. Was it the motion I made to discharge the committee and take up the anti-trust bill?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understood the Senator to oppose it. One thing I know is that while that motion was pending the time was taken up in the Senate, and it was talked until the expiration of the morning hour and no vote was had, and I believe it was deliberately done.

Mr. HOAR. I gave notice to the committee and to its members that I should make the motion which the Senator from Arkansas made. When he made it I was absent in Massachusetts and telegraphed to him and my colleague and one or two other members of the Senate, praying that it might stand for a day until my return. When I got back I rose in my place and said I was delighted that the motion had been made and I hoped it would pass. The Senator will find all that in the RECORD. Now, that is what happened.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I confess myself to be astonished. I hope the Senator will now give notice that he will move to discharge that committee to-morrow, so that we can have a vote on that subject.

Mr. HOAR. There is a motion pending.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is on the Calendar and has to be taken up by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senator was so full of his most worthy and excellent purpose that undoubtedly he did not listen to what I said. I told the Senate that the failure of the Judiciary Committee to vote on that matter was one of the great disappointments which had happened to me lately; that I regretted it exceedingly, and that I was glad the motion had been made and should support it. I gave a narrative of what had happened, and stated my reasons for supporting the first and the last sections of the bill and my reasons for hoping that it would be amended by striking out other sections.

Now, the Senator from Arkansas does not wish to do me any injustice, any more than my friend from Rhode Island, who spoke with some warmth, but who would be the last in the world to have made a misstatement. If this debate continues I will get the RECORD and read what I said before.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to interrupt the Senator. I certainly do not intend to do the Senator from Massachusetts any injustice. I heard the Senator, as I thought, object to discharging the committee and to taking up the bill. I did not hear the statements by him, though I have no doubt they were made by him; but what I do know is that the entire morning hour was talked out and we failed to get any vote at all. If both sides were willing to vote for it, it is most amazing to me that a vote was not had. I know I took no time to delay it.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I only want to say another word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. I had not quite finished.

Mr. CULLOM. Excuse me.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Massachusetts certainly can not think that I would do him an injustice. I had supposed that he was opposed to having his committee discharged from the consideration of that measure. I could not understand that he was not. But as I understand the Senator's statement, he is not in favor of the House bill, and does not expect or desire that the Senate should pass it.

Mr. HOAR. What House bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. The anti-trust bill.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; I am. I want to have one. I said, if the Senator will pardon me, that I had consulted the representatives of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the representatives of the Federation of Labor, and that they had agreed with me that certain sections of the bill were undesirable; but that the first and the last sections of the bill, which they were satisfied with, ought to pass, and I have a letter from one of them now in my possession repeating that. So the bill, as I proposed to have it passed, would be entirely satisfactory to them. All that I stated, except this little matter of the letter in the Senate, and I used the phrase, I remember distinctly, that I was delighted that the motion had been made. My friend from Connecticut, one of the strongest opponents of some parts of that bill, and who pointed out his objection in the debate in the Senate, will confirm me in my statement, not only that I earnestly supported that motion, but that I had given notice to members of the committee that I should make it if nobody else did.

Another matter, Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think, certainly, justice ought to be done to the Senator from Massachusetts. He did certainly say in his speech that he would support the motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have attempted to do justice to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Now, Mr. President, we have thirty or forty hours of this legislative session yet remaining. There is not a member of the Senate who does not know that these motions to discharge committees from the consideration of contested legislation can not in the nature of things result in anything effective for the benefit of the measures suggested. There is not a member of the Senate who does not know it. The Senator from Massachusetts knows as well as I that if his Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from the anti-trust bill there is no possible hope of passing that bill at this session. The Senator from South Dakota and other Senators who favor discharging the Committee on Education and Labor from the proposed eight-hour law know perfectly well it is not possible for that measure to be considered at this session.

If members of the committees, chairmen or otherwise, who are desirous of discharging their own committees and other committees simply because their individual views have not been carried out by the committees should have their way, there will be nothing done at this session of Congress except to discuss measures which can never be finally voted upon.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I simply want to add one word. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has been talking very vigorously against retaining the bill where it is in committee, and he instances his own action with reference to the automatic car coupler bill, about which we had some legislation some time ago. I want the Senator to know, if he does not, that I had charge of that important measure myself, and I claim a good deal of credit for doing something for the railroad employees of this country in securing its passage and enforcing it as a law.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I am quite aware of that. My reference was simply to my interest in the subject. I know the Senator's friendship for the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I only want to emphasize the fact that I have no disposition whatever to interfere with proper legislation, but I do insist that this bill ought to remain with the committee for its consideration, and, so far as I am concerned, I am ready to call a meeting of the committee this afternoon and consider it, and see whether we can not get a bill here that will be satisfactory and will take no time in its passage finally.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I am a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee having charge of this bill, and I have heard this debate going on for more than an hour, all the time hoping it might end so we could get a vote. I feel obliged, in view of certain statements, to say a word. The chairman has ably defended the committee, and shown why this resolution should not prevail, and I want to join him in resisting the passage of the resolution and the discharge of the committee—though with suitable amendments I am in favor of the bill.

In the first place, this is a bill from the House. It came to the Senate last session, I believe, and a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was appointed by the chairman to consider the bill and report to the full committee.

The chairman of that subcommittee was the late lamented junior Senator from Iowa, Mr. Gear. We all know that he died during the recess of Congress, and no member of the committee has been appointed to fill his place as chairman. I mention this fact because the impression has gone out that I should have gone forward and reported the bill because I was a member of the subcommittee. I had no more power to consider and report the bill than any other member of the committee.

I have always stated to the chairman and to the members of the committee that I favored the bill if it could be properly amended. It is an important bill and should have careful consideration. Its importance is tested by the interest that it has aroused in the Senate. But I submit, Mr. President, that a bill of this importance should not be passed without the consideration of the committee and a report thereon; and it should, before report, have at least fair consideration by the full committee. The Senate works through organized committees; wisely so. Now, the committee has had no opportunity to consider fully and fairly the bill. At no meeting of the committee at this session has there been a quorum, and the reasons for no quorum have been suggested time and again by the chairman.

I regret to see a disposition to discharge an important committee like this from the consideration of a bill that it has not had the time or opportunity to investigate. We had one meeting of the committee, I believe, at the last session of Congress, in which parties favoring the bill were heard, and among those who appeared in favor of the bill was Mr. Moseley, secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and some one claiming to be a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

If we are to have committees to take charge of important bills and report on them, let the best consideration be had that a committee can give to the subject. I believe with proper amendments this bill will pass the Senate, but the committee ought to have an opportunity, and Senators who are on the committee and on the subcommittee ought to have a chance, to discuss the provisions of the bill and make suggestions and proper amendments, and not rush it through by having the committee discharged in this manner and the bill passed without thought or proper consideration in the dying hours of the Senate.

I believe all the Senators on the committee desire and that the Senate desires the best possible administration of railway matters in the interest of human life and are willing and anxious to pass any law that will minimize accidents, injuries, and loss of life, and I believe railway officials favor any measure that will prevent accidents. And just here I wish to say to the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts that it is not necessary to tie a director on the engine when in motion to save human life or to prevent accidents. The locomotive engineers run the trains, and not the directors and railway officials, and the engineers are just as particular and careful about preventing accidents and preserving human life as are directors of the railroads, and I was shocked and surprised to hear from such a respectable, wise, and conservative source such a suggestion. I am at a loss to know what the Senator meant, for usually he is not given to making reckless or improper statements.

Mr. HOAR. It was a mere jest, and I am surprised that anyone should take it seriously.

Mr. ELKINS. I am glad to have the Senator say it was a jest, but let me tell the great Senator from Massachusetts that it is too serious a subject to jest about.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to plead guilty, however, on two points. It was not only a jest, but a plagiarism from one of the most conservative men who ever lived in this country—the late Richard A. Dana—who, after a railroad accident in Massachusetts, suggested in some public place that if there were a director tied on the cowcatcher of every engine it would diminish the number of railroad accidents. I had no expectation that anybody would take it seriously.

Mr. ELKINS. I am glad to have this explanation from the Senator from Massachusetts, because I was pained to hear that he could seriously make such a suggestion. I know he is not a railroad director, and I know he would not want to be tied on an engine if he were. I also know he is not familiar with the operation of railroad trains. If he were, I venture to say he would give this bill more careful consideration. And I beg the Senator will allow me to say further that the railway officials and directors of this country are as humane as the Senator himself and desire in every way possible to diminish accidents and prevent the loss of life.

In addition to their feeling for humanity and their deep interest in their employees and desire to preserve their lives, and with whom they are generally on the best of terms, there is still another reason that does not appeal to the senior Senator from Massachusetts, unless he has more stock in railroads than I think he has, and it is that every railroad accident causes a direct loss in money to the railway company.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody would seriously propose to tie my honorable friend from West Virginia there, unless somebody thought that no railroad locomotive would have power enough to penetrate him, or that probably it would add to the safety of the passengers by having a good, honest cushion before the engine. I do not see that anybody could propose it for any other purpose.

Mr. THURSTON. The Senator would not tie him on a fast train.

Mr. HOAR. No; I would not tie him on a fast train.

Mr. ELKINS. It is a relief to me in this discussion to thoroughly understand the Senator from Massachusetts, because this is a most serious subject; and I am glad on his own account and for his great reputation that he has said what he has and relieved the Senate from a most painful impression.

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. ELKINS. The suggestion is made to vote, after many Senators have expressed themselves, and particularly the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], without interruption from anyone; and while he and other Senators who so earnestly desire the Interstate Commerce Committee to be discharged in disgrace as incompetent, were speaking, I heard no one demand that this discussion should close. I never wished to discharge his committee from the consideration of any bill before it because of delay, and I was a little surprised that the junior Senator from Massachusetts should support this motion to discharge the committee.

Why should we have a vote? Why do you want a vote so soon to condemn a committee and pronounce upon it a judgment of incompetency? I have a good deal to say on the subject of this resolution before it passes the Senate, and I have listened to every Senator here with composure and with interest; and I hope I may be still further indulged, even if at the close of what I may say the Senate should join in the condemnation and disgrace of the committee, so much desired and wished for by the junior Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from South Dakota. Do give the members of the committee a chance to be heard, especially our able and distinguished chairman. No chairman of a committee wishes his committee discharged from the consideration of a subject over which it has jurisdiction.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator allow me a question? Does he intend to talk until the morning hour has expired?

Mr. ELKINS. When does it expire?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It expires at 1 o'clock, and this resolution goes to the Calendar if the Senate is unable to vote on it before that time.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I do not know anything about the morning hour, or what the rule is. I do not understand the rules like my friend from South Dakota does, who has served so long and so ably in the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, as was stated by the Senator from Colorado, there is not an accident that happens on any railroad in the United States where the testimony is not taken instantly and on the spot, and an accurate report made of everything that occurs on the spot.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ELKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Senator from West Virginia will pardon me, I ask him if he knows what has become of the six or eight reciprocity treaties that have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for consideration. Why have they not been reported?

Mr. ELKINS. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for making that suggestion, and in due season I think there may be a motion to discharge his committee from the consideration of the reciprocity treaties, as he is such a staunch supporter of the policy of discharging committees before they can reach a conclusion on a bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. We will all vote for it.

Mr. LODGE. I hope when the Senator makes the motion he will make it where it belongs, in executive session, as it relates to executive business.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, as I was stating, every accident is reported. In the first place, all railroads require it; and in the second place, the State laws require it. Now, there is no objection to giving this power to the General Government if by doing so we can in any way help prevent accidents and injuries to life and property; this is what everybody desires. But I state now that the bill is defective. My colleagues on the committee, and especially the chairman of the committee [Mr. CULLOM], who has served so long and so honorably in the Senate, has had more experience in the matter of railroad legislation originating with the Interstate Commerce Commission than any other member of this body, declares to the Senate that the bill is defective and that it should be amended; that in the interest of the railroad employees and in the interest of the railroads it should be amended. He reported the bill with some amendments, but not the one which I desired.

The chairman of the Interstate Committee [Mr. CULLOM] has had more experience than any other member of this body in respect to this kind of legislation, and he objects to the bill.

Now, Mr. President, I want to state to the Senate, as a matter of information, that the reports of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in the consideration of this question at the only meeting we ever had, were brought into the Interstate Commerce Committee, and they were there analyzed, and the advocates of this bill then and there declared that they were good, ample, and sufficient even without this law; that this law was not required to compel the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to go further in making reports. The only complaint made by the advocates of the bill was that some other railroads did not report as fully and as accurately as the Pennsylvania Railroad Company did. I, as a member of the subcommittee, stated that if we could draw an amendment that would require the reports of other railroad companies to be made with the same care and the same accuracy as the reports made by the Pennsylvania Railroad this would be all that could be desired.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to make an appeal to the Senator from West Virginia to let us go to a vote before this resolution has gone to the Calendar.

Mr. ELKINS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not understand him.

Mr. ALLEN. There are only about three minutes before it will pass to the Calendar. The discussion will end, and we shall not have the privilege of voting on it.

Mr. ELKINS. When has it ever been suggested in this Chamber? When has any Senator had the temerity to ask the Senator from Nebraska to cut short his speech for any purpose whatever? Why, sir, the Senate would have been filled with a flood of oratory for hours afterwards following such a suggestion. He would have regarded it as an invasion of his sacred rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota has done me the justice to read a number of petitions from my State favoring the passage of this bill, but not in its present form, as I am informed and believe. I have also had a number from my State, and I am just as solicitous as the Senator from South Dakota and the two Senators from Massachusetts that railroad passengers and railroad employees shall now, hereafter, and forever have all the safeguards that can possibly be thrown around them by this bill or any other.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. ELKINS. The junior Senator from Massachusetts says let us have a vote. I ask him if he has ever read this bill? Has he ever considered it?

Mr. LODGE. I have read it.

Mr. ELKINS. Then I am surprised that you want to vote upon it in the imperfect way it is presented here.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will meet with many other surprises if he keeps on.

Mr. ELKINS. Not now, on this subject. I am surprised this discussion has taken the turn and scope it has. Mr. President, Senators talk as if railroad presidents and directors were indifferent to accidents and the loss of human life and did not desire to prevent both. This is an unjust and outrageous charge to bring against an able and conscientious body of citizens of the country.

Mr. President, every accident on a railroad costs the railroads something, often from one thousand to a hundred thousand dollars; sometimes the cost reaches two and three hundred thousand dollars; and it is utterly absurd to talk about indifference on the part of directors and railroad officials to accidents. They do everything in their power now to prevent them, and are doing so every day. Dismissing the question of heart, conscience, and humanity, self-interest compels them to this course. The appeal to prejudice or the attempt to stir up strife between railroad employees and railroad officials for political or any other purpose, or to gain popular favor, is unwise and unpatriotic, especially in the Senate Chamber of the United States. Now, Mr. President, I am ready and willing, as I have always been, to favor this bill, with proper amendments; but, while this is the case, I am unalterably opposed to this resolution to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill, thereby putting the cloud of incompetency over it.

Mr. President, I have said something about the character of railway officials and directors, but I would do myself an injustice if, in this connection, I did not bear testimony to the high character, orderly conduct, and good citizenship of the million of railway employees in the United States. There is no better body of citizens, no more loyal and intelligent set of people in the world; and the thought that every Senator here would not be willing to do justice to railway employees and do everything in their power to protect their lives and preserve them from injuries by railroad accidents is simply absurd.

I believe that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers especially favor this bill. They are amongst the most conservative, intelligent, and law-abiding citizens. I have in this order many friends in my State and in almost every State in the Union. I respect their judgment, their intelligence, and their wishes, and, so far as they are concerned in this legislation, I want to meet their wishes. I am sure that they do not desire the bill passed without careful consideration and without its provisions do justice, not only to themselves, but to the owners, officers, and directors of railroads and the public generally.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3450) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be formally laid aside that I may ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I make that motion. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. [Putting the question.]

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which we have just been discussing.

Mr. LODGE. It has gone to the Calendar.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It has gone to the Calendar. It is resolution numbered 577.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution the title of which will be stated.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW on the 26th ultimo, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from further consideration of H. R. 10302, an act to amend an act to promote the safety of employees, etc., by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, etc., approved March 2, 1893.

Mr. FORAKER. I intend to vote for that bill when it comes back here perfected by the committee, but until then——

Mr. LODGE and others. Debate is not in order.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the motion be laid on the table.

Mr. HOAR. That is not in order.

Mr. FORAKER. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have a right to a direct vote on my motion, under the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CLAY. I understand that, but I rise to a question of order. I understand the motion of the Senator from South Dakota is to displace the appropriation bill, the pending order of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in the nature of debate, and not in order. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SEWELL. The resolution has gone to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to take it from the Calendar and pass it. The motion is in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Chair, I think, did not state the question quite clearly. The question is upon taking up the resolution, not upon its passage.

Mr. CHILTON. The question is not upon passing the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD some extracts from my remarks when the motion of the honorable Senator from Arkansas to discharge the Judiciary Committee of the anti-trust bill was discussed on Thursday, February 21, of the present year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. HOAR. I have myself never for a great while felt more regret about anything than that the majority of the committee, not voting on party lines at all, did not agree with me in this view. * * *

Let me say further, before I sit down, what I think I should have said, that I had notified my brethren on the committee that I would myself bring this matter up in the Senate. Personally—not as the organ of the committee—I shall be delighted if the motion of the Senator from Arkansas shall be adopted and the bill shall be passed. * * * If any member of the Senate can suggest, in the short time we have left for legislation, a reasonable solution of this trust difficulty which will go further than that, I shall be glad to have that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We all seem to be agreed that this matter ought to be considered. * * *

Mr. HOAR. I expect to vote for the Senator's resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is all I ask for, Mr. President—a vote at this time.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. Not seeing him in the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN] who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY] who is absent. I do not know how he would vote, if he were present. If at liberty, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BATE. My colleague [Mr. TURLEY], if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER. The senior Senator from Tennessee informs me that if his colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. I inquire whether he has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Illinois has not voted.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. TURNER's name was called). I am requested to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate, and that he is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MALLORY (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Vermont has not voted.

Mr. MALLORY. I have a general pair with that Senator, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. BATE. As has been already stated, my colleague [Mr. TURLEY] is necessarily absent to-day, and is paired, as has been stated, with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is absent. Under the circumstances I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that we exchange pairs, so that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], with whom he is paired, may stand paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I agree to the transfer and will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Allen,	Clay,	Jones, Nev.	Teller,
Bacon,	Culberson,	Lindsay,	Tillman,
Bate,	Daniel,	Lodge,	Vest,
Berry,	Harris,	Martin,	Wellington.
Butler,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Rawlins,
Clapp,	Jones, Ark.	Taliaferro,

NAYS—36.

Aldrich,	Dolliver,	Kyle,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Elkins,	McComas,	Scott,
Bard,	Fairbanks,	McCumber,	Sewell,
Beveridge,	Foraker,	McEnery,	Shoup,
Chilton,	Frye,	McMillan,	Simon,
Clark,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Thurston,
Deboe,	Hawley,	Pettus,	Wetmore,
Dillingham,	Kean,	Platt, Conn.	Wolcott.

NOT VOTING—27.

Baker,	Hale,	Mason,	Quay,
Burrows,	Hanna,	Money,	Spooner,
Caffery,	Kearns,	Morgan,	Sullivan,
Carter,	Kenney,	Penrose,	Turley,
Cockrell,	McBride,	Pritchard,	Turner,
Depew,	McLaurin,	Proctor,	Warren.
Foster,	Mallory,	Quarles,

So the motion of Mr. PETTIGREW was rejected.

UNLAWFUL TRADE RESTRAINTS AND MONOPOLIES.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I desire to give notice, in view of certain statements made to-day, that to-morrow, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall move that the Senate take up the resolution to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10539) to amend an act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890.

SENATOR FROM NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. ALLISON obtained the floor.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from North Carolina several days ago gave notice that he desired to submit remarks upon some matter pending. Without knowing how much time would be consumed this morning during the morning hour, I agreed to yield to him. I feel bound by that promise, and I hope the Senator will be as brief as possible under the circumstances.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a short time in order that I may submit some remarks in regard to the motion of my colleague [Mr. BUTLER] to refer the credentials of Hon. F. M. Simmons, Senator-elect from my State, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I had not intended to refer to political conditions in North Carolina during the present session of Congress, but since my colleague has seen fit to make the motion in question, I deem it proper that I should briefly review existing conditions in that State, as well as the incidents which led up to what the Democrats are pleased to term a revolution.

One would naturally suppose that the people of every State enjoy the benefits of a republican form of government, but I regret to state that such is not the case in the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

Article 4, section 4, of the Constitution of the United States provides as follows:

> The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

The foregoing is explicit and leaves no doubt as to the duty of Congress with respect to the matter. The language of the Constitution is mandatory, plain, and unequivocal, but for some cause or other there is a disposition on the part of many to acquiesce in that which, in my judgment, will sooner or later undermine the foundation of the Government of the United States.

In 1894 the Republicans and Populists of North Carolina combined their forces in opposition to the Democratic party and succeeded in carrying the State by a large majority, securing control of both branches of the general assembly. For years prior thereto the Democratic party had been in absolute control of all branches of the State government, and in possession of the election machinery in every county in the State.

The Republicans and Populists, in 1895, enacted an election law that was perfectly fair in its provisions, it being provided, among other things, that the chairmen of the respective parties should have the right to select those who were to represent them on the election boards.

In 1896 the anti-Democratic forces again prevailed, electing all the State officers, consisting of Republicans and Populists, and in this connection I desire to say that we have never had our State affairs administered in a more satisfactory manner than they were under the administration of Governor Russell. The credit of the State was greatly improved during his administration, and not a dollar of the State's funds was unaccounted for when the government was turned over to the Democrats on the 1st of January.

The Democrats in 1898, realizing that a great majority of the people of the State were opposed to their policy, and knowing full well that anything like a fair expression of public opinion at the ballot box would mean their complete defeat, deliberately organized a systematic campaign of intimidation and violence (resulting, in some instances, in bloodshed) which has never had a parallel in any section of the country. Not only were the negroes in eastern Carolina denied the right to vote, but thousands of white men in the middle and eastern sections of the State were so completely terrorized that they refrained from voting, while many of them, by coercion, were induced to vote the Democratic ticket.

The adoption of such unlawful methods resulted in giving the Democrats a good working majority of the legislature at that election; and, among other things, they enacted an election law which was prepared with the sole view of enabling that party to overcome the large majority that was against them in the State. The legislature did not adjourn at the end of sixty days, as is provided by the Constitution, but took a recess until the month of June, 1900, and it was stated in many of the Democratic papers that a recess had been taken with a view of impeaching the governor and the judges of the superior court under certain contingencies; and this fact was from time to time referred to by many Democratic papers for the purpose, as I believe, of intimidating the governor to such an extent as to prevent him from taking such steps as were necessary to secure the proper enforcement of the law, and I am also inclined to the opinion that these rumors were intended to intimidate the judges to such an extent as to prevent them from granting the remedies to which we were entitled under the law, before the amendment, in relation to mandamus, which is hereinafter referred to as having been adopted by the legislature at its June session.

Some time prior to the meeting of the legislature in June, a conference of Republicans, consisting of Hon. R. Z. LINNEY, Hon. W. P. Bynum, Hon. A. E. Holton, and myself, was held in the city of Greensboro, and it was decided, among other things, that although the new election law gave the registrars unlimited discretion as to what names should be placed upon the registration books, we could by mandamus compel them to place on the books the names of all parties who, under our constitution, were qualified electors, but, unfortunately, the result of our deliberations became known, and when the legislature convened in June, the following sections in regard to mandamus and injunction were enacted:

SEC. 88. That upon any application being made, or any action or proceeding of any kind commenced or had, before any judge of any court in this State, for a mandamus or any order in the nature of a mandamus, injunction, restraining order, or order in the nature thereof, to compel, prevent, prohibit, or restrain the performance of any act in respect to his duties against any officer or officers provided for in this act, the matters stated in the affidavit, petition, or complaint, upon which such application is based or action or proceeding had, shall be taken and deemed to be denied, and no judge shall issue any such order, temporary or otherwise, until the facts have been submitted to and found by a jury at a regular term of the superior court of the county in which such officer resides. No such order shall be made or issued upon any case agreed, or upon facts found by a jury at a special term.

SEC. 89. That when a jury has found the facts, and any judge shall issue a mandamus or order in the nature of a mandamus, injunction, or restraining order, or other order in the nature thereof, to compel, prevent, restrain, or prohibit the performance of any act in respect to his duties against any officer or officers provided for in this act, such officer or officers shall have the right to appeal from such order to the supreme court, upon giving bond in a sum not to exceed the sum of $100, conditioned to pay to appellee all such costs and damages as may accrue by reason of such appeal. The said bond shall be received and approved by the clerk of the superior court. A deposit of money of the amount of the penal sum named in such bond shall be received by the clerk in lieu of such bond. And upon filing such bond or making such deposit, such order shall be vacated until affirmed by the supreme court, and until so affirmed the election officer shall proceed to perform the duties imposed by this act notwithstanding such order.

SEC. 90. That all laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed, and the law regulating elections as contained in this act shall be construed as above and not in connection with any existing provision of law for regulation of elections.

This is the first instance, in so far as I am informed, wherein any political party has ever attempted to modify or abridge the writ of mandamus. With the exception of the writ of habeas corpus, mandamus is the most sacred writ that can be issued by the courts. It is intended to afford a remedy when it is sought to deprive the individual of his property or any of the rights guaranteed by the laws of the land, while the writ of habeas corpus is intended to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of his liberty. These writs constitute the most speedy and effective remedies that are afforded to the citizen by the courts, and while I am not prepared to say that the legislature does not possess the power to modify the writ of mandamus in some particulars, at the same time I am quite sure that there can be no question that the adoption of the provision as a part of the registration act under which our election was held renders the election void, from the fact that its provisions render it possible to prevent the elector from exercising the right of suffrage, and while the authority to limit its application in general may not be questioned, at the same time any effort to apply its provisions to a registration act as contemplated in section 88, is clearly in violation of the State constitution, which fixes the qualifications of voters and guarantees the right to vote to all men who qualify themselves in accordance therewith.

Section 35, article 1, of the constitution of North Carolina, among other things, provides:

All courts shall be open, and every person having an injury done him in his lands, goods, person, or reputation shall have remedy by due course of law, and right and justice administered without sale, denial, or delay.

It will be observed by reading the foregoing section that the bill of rights of the constitution of my State provides that all courts of the State shall be open at all times for the purpose of granting such remedies as are necessary to secure to the citizen substantial justice in all matters that affect his person, property, or reputation, and that such remedy shall be granted without delay.

A registration act to be valid must be a thing of regulation simply, and the regulation must be necessary and reasonable; it must be to secure and facilitate the right of suffrage and not impair, abridge, or destroy it; registration must be subordinate to suffrage and not its master and destroyer.

In Paine's Law of Election (page 300) is the following:

The question whether a legislative provision is or is not constitutional, its validity always turns upon the question whether it is or is not a reasonable and convenient regulation of the right to vote, or is, under pretense of regulation and abridgment, a subversion or restraint of that right.

Judge Cooley thus states the law at page 757 of his work on Constitutional Limitations:

All regulations——

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I simply desire to ask a question. I would ask the Senator from North Carolina to tell me from what decision he was reading. I could not hear him distinctly.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I read in the first place from Paine's Law of Election, page 300.

Mr. MONEY. I could not understand the Senator.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I was also about to read from Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, page 757.

Mr. MONEY. I did not catch the decision. I understood the Senator to quote a decision of some court.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator please tell me what that was?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir; I will read it.

Mr. MONEY. I want the reference.

Mr. PRITCHARD. If we could have order in the Chamber, Mr. President, perhaps I could make the Senator understand me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. PRITCHARD. From Paine's Law of Election I read the following:

The question whether a legislative provision is or is not constitutional, its validity always turns upon the question whether it is or is not a reasonable and convenient regulation of the right to vote, or is, under pretense of regulation and abridgment, a subversion or restraint of that right.

Judge Cooley says in his work on Constitutional Limitations:

All regulations of the elective franchise, however, must be reasonable, uniform, and impartial; they must not have for their purpose directly or indirectly to deny or abridge the constitutional right of the citizen to vote or unnecessarily impede its exercise—if they do, they must be declared void.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will excuse me for interrupting him, I thought he was quoting from a decision, not from a textbook.

Mr. PRITCHARD. No, sir; but I do cite a number of decisions in this connection.

Mr. MONEY. May I be permitted to ask the Senator if his speech will appear in the RECORD to-morrow?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir; it will all appear in the RECORD. I cite a number of authorities, but in order to get through rapidly I have omitted reading some of them.

In Page vs. Allen (58 Pa. Report, 338), among other things, Mr. Freeman, in reporting this case in the American decisions, says in a note:

The elaborate dissenting opinions of Justices Thompson and Sharswood clearly enforce the rule that registration laws should not be made so vexatious or so embarrassing as to impede or to discourage the attempt to register.

In the case of Monroe vs. Collins (17 Ohio, 665) it is very properly said:

That the legislation should be to facilitate rather than to impede the right of suffrage. Between the legislative power and the legal elector, no matter who or what he is, the constitutional provision stands as a bulwark for the protection of his right to vote.

In the case of Kenner vs. Wells (144 Mass., 497) we find:

Statutes can not impair the right to vote. Though they may regulate its exercise, every statute regulating it must be consistent with the constitutionally qualified voter's right to suffrage when he claims his right at an election—these statutes may require proof of the right consistent with the right itself, not to abridge or impair the right, but to require reasonable proof of the right.

Any legislation by which the exercise of his right is postponed, diminishing them, must be unconstitutional, unless it can be defended on the ground that it is reasonable and necessary in order that the right of the proposed voter may be ascertained and proven.

Brightly, in his Leading Election Cases, says:

The power to enact registration laws, so as to insure orderly exercise of the right of suffrage within the limits prescribed in Capen vs. Foster, is now generally admitted; that is to say, they must be reasonable and uniform regulations, and not under the color of regulation subvert or injuriously restrain the right itself.

Among the numerous other cases bearing on this point are the following:

Dell vs. Kennedy, 40 Wisconsin, 555.
Steanes vs. Connor, 22 Nebr., 285.
Morris vs. Powell (Ind.) 29 American Law Register, 839, 125 Ind., 231.
White vs. Commissioners of Multnomah Co., 13 Oregon, 317.
Daggett vs. Hudson, 43 Ohio, 548.

These decisions leave no doubt as to the restrictions that are placed upon the legislature when it undertakes to frame a registration act. After the legislature had adopted the sections which I have quoted with respect to mandamus, it was an easy matter for the Democrats to carry the State of North Carolina by any kind of a majority which they might desire to have counted and returned. The provisions contained therein rendered it absolutely impossible to secure an adjudication of the right of the citizen to vote until after the election had been held, which necessarily postponed and deferred his right to such a time as to render it impossible for him to exercise it as provided by the constitution of our State.

Section 15 of the election law reads as follows:

That the registrar of each township, ward, or precinct shall be furnished with a registration book prepared as hereinbefore provided, and it shall be his duty between the hours of 9 o'clock a. m. and sunset, on each day (Sunday excepted), for twenty days preceding the day for closing the registration books, as hereinafter provided, to keep open said books for the registration of any electors residing within such township, ward, or precinct, and entitled to registration. That the said books shall be closed for registration at sunset on the second Saturday before each election. That on each Saturday during the period of registration, the registrar shall attend with his registration books at the polling place of his precinct or ward for the registration of voters.

It will be observed that the foregoing provision for registration is limited to twenty days, and if the citizen should be denied registration (as thousands were in North Carolina at the last election) and should make application to the resident or presiding judge for a mandamus he would be confronted with section 88, which provides that no writ shall issue until the matter has been passed upon by a jury at the next regular term of the superior court, which, in nine cases out of ten, would convene after the twenty days had expired and after the election had been held, to say nothing about the other vexatious and unnecessary requirements that are to be found in section 89, placed there with the sole view of hindering and delaying the citizen in the exercise of a right which is guaranteed to him by the constitution of the State.

It is further provided by section 88 that the court shall not issue a mandamus at a special term, thereby precluding the possibility of the citizen having his right determined in the event that the governor should decide to call a special term for that purpose. This affords us another evidence of the fact that it was the intention of the legislature to place such restrictions in the statute as to render the citizen powerless to obtain relief from any quarter.

It is also provided in the same section that—

The matters stated in the affidavit, petition, or complaint, upon which such application is based or action or proceeding had, shall be taken and deemed to be denied—thus permitting the election official to commit all manner of outrageous offenses, without being required to answer under oath any allegations made with respect to his official conduct.

In divorce proceedings, in many States, it is provided that the allegations in the complaint of either party are to be taken and deemed to be denied, but this provision is intended to prevent the commission of a fraud upon the rights of either party and are placed there owing to the confidential relations that exist between husband and wife. In the present instance, the provision to which I have alluded, was placed in the law in order to enable the unscrupulous election official to commit a fraud and as an assurance to him that the law would guarantee its concealment.

However, there are other provisions in the act which, in my judgment, are sufficient in themselves to render the act in question unconstitutional.

Section 28 provides that each ballot box shall be labeled in plain roman letters designating the officers to be voted for. Section 23, among other things, provides that each elector shall approach the polls from one direction through such passage; and after his ballot is deposited in the box, with as little delay as possible, shall depart from the passage leading from the polls. It is also provided that only one voter shall enter the passage at a time, and no one is permitted to speak or make signs to him, but there is no provision that the judges shall place the ballot in the proper box in the event the voter should be unable to read and write.

These provisions are in the nature of an educational qualification, and are in violation of the State constitution, in that they undertake to add an additional qualification to those prescribed by the constitution of the State.

In discussing this subject Mr. Narr, on suffrage, page 176, says:

The obvious conclusion is that the legislature can not add anything to the qualifications other than those prescribed by the organic law of the State.

The provision in question is a needless and vexatious requirement, which necessarily results in impeding the elector in the exercise of his right to vote.

There are many equally objectional features to be found in our election law, but I am sure that these sections are of such a character as to remove all doubt as to the unconstitutionality of the registration act under which our election was held. And this brings us face to face with a serious proposition, one that has never been passed upon by this body. It is as to whether we shall accept the credentials of one who claims the right to a seat in this body by virtue of having been elected by a legislature whose members were elected under an election law that violates the principles enunciated in the cases from which I have just quoted. In other words, does it not appear from an inspection of these provisions that the registration act is unconstitutional, and if such be the case, would it not necessarily follow that any election held under a registration act containing such provisions is void? If I am correct as to this proposition, the members of the present legislature of my State were not legally elected, and therefore do not possess the constitutional authority to elect a Senator to represent that State in this body. It is clear to my mind that the framers of the Constitution of the United States meant exactly what they said when they provided that it was the duty of the United States to guarantee to each State a republican form of government, and this is the first time in the history of the Government wherein a case has been presented to this body for its consideration which involved the question as to whether or not one of the States of this Union possesses a republican form of government.

I am aware of the fact that in the Turpie case this body held that the State legislature is the judge of the election, qualifications, and return of its own members; but while that is true, in so far as the action of the legislature with respect to the qualifications and election of its members is concerned, at the same time I do not understand that the Senate in that case decided that under no conditions would this body have jurisdiction to inquire into the methods and the laws under which a State legislature was elected. I call attention to the closing sentence of the report made in the Turpie case, which is as follows:

The majority of the committee do not mean to be understood as now committing ourselves to an opinion upon the question whether the Senate can not refuse to seat a claimant who owes his election to a legislative body which is itself the result of fraud or crime—which has overcome the true will of the people—even if it have possessed itself of legislative authority, and of the technical evidence of a rightful character, or whether the judgments of such a body as to the title to seats of its individual members are entitled to any respect whatever. If that question should hereafter unhappily arise, it will be dealt with on its own merits.

Here is an intimation by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who made the report for the committee, that this body would have jurisdiction to institute inquiry as to whether or not a State legislature had been elected by fraudulent or unfair methods. It would be difficult to present to this body evidence to the effect that the Democrats secured representatives from a majority of the counties in that State by intimidation; but when we remember the many outrages that were perpetrated in central and eastern Carolina at the last election, there can be no question as to the fact that the will of the majority of the people of that State was not expressed at the ballot box.

While I am not prepared to offer a remedy, at the same time I deem it my duty, as one of the Senators from that State, to give the Senate such information as I may possess with respect to the unlawful and unwarranted methods that have been resorted to by the Democratic party in order to obtain control of our affairs. However, these are matters which properly belong to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and to that committee, composed as it is of some of the ablest lawyers in this body, I commend this question for its intelligent solution.

The present legislature has instituted impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Furches and Associate Justice Douglas, of the supreme court, both of whom are Republicans, but inasmuch as the matter is now pending before the Senate as a court of impeachment I deem it improper that I should enter into a discussion of the merits of the case, further than to say that the judges are gentlemen of high character and standing, being lawyers of acknowledged ability.

I am informed that certain parties in the city of Raleigh are circulating a rumor to the effect that there exists an understanding between the judges and the leaders of the Republican party in the State, to the effect that the question of the validity of the amendments recently adopted to the constitution of the State, if brought before the court, to declare them unconstitutional and void; and that it is therefore necessary to remove the impeached judges to prevent the undoing of the work of the Democratic party in securing the adoption of the amendments.

In this connection I desire to state that there is not the slightest foundation for any such statement; that it is absolutely false, and a cruel wrong and injustice to these judges, to the Republican leaders of the State, as well as myself. The subject has not been mentioned, either directly or indirectly, to me by any member of the supreme court, and I am of the opinion that there is not a lawyer of any reputation in the State who would be guilty of such unprofessional conduct. I have not had the slightest intimation as to what would be the decision of the judges in relation to this question in the event that they should be called upon to hear the question upon review. It is highly probable that any proceedings which may be instituted for the purpose of testing the validity of the amendments will be begun in the United States court, inasmuch as there is a Federal question involved, and which will preclude the possibility of the State court being called upon to deal with the questions involved.

Mr. MCCOMAS. May I, without interrupting the Senator from North Carolina, ask him whether the newspaper statement is accurate in saying that the charges against the judges who are thus impeached is really in respect of the exercise of their judicial judgment? Is that or not so?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I do not know that I understand the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MCCOMAS. What are the charges upon which the impeachment is grounded?

Mr. PRITCHARD. It is alleged that the judges of the supreme court violated the constitution in issuing a writ of mandamus to compel our State treasurer to pay over certain moneys that were due Mr. Theophilus White, shellfish commissioner. There was a contest in the court as to who was the proper occupant of the office. The supreme court held that Mr. White was entitled to the office. The treasurer refused to pay over the amount due him, and the supreme court issued a mandamus directing the treasurer to pay over the amount found to be due him.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then, if I understand, the ground of impeachment is that in exercising their discretion, which they must do in issuing or refusing a mandamus, they exercised a discretion against the will of the legislature?

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is it.

Mr. McCOMAS. There is no allegation that they corruptly exercised it?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Of course, the articles of impeachment contain allegations to that effect, but as I understand it there is no evidence to sustain such allegations.

Mr. McCOMAS. What sort of a legislature and what sort of a system have you in North Carolina, if that be true?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I leave that to my distinguished friend to say, under the circumstances.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The question is whether under the laws of that State there can be any question as to the right of this man to receive compensation if he were entitled to the office, which the court had decided him to be.

Mr. PRITCHARD. There could not. After the court had rendered judgment that he was the rightful occupant of the office it necessarily followed that he was entitled to the emoluments of the office.

Mr. SPOONER. Then the impeachment, so far as he is concerned, arises out of a disagreement of the legislative body with the supreme court in their decision that he was entitled to the office.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes, sir; they say the judges improperly decided it.

Mr. BUTLER. If my colleague will pardon me, in answer to the question of the Senator from Maryland, I want to make it emphatic that there is not only no charge of corruption in the impeachment, but no newspaper or politician in the State has ever suggested that there was any suggestion of corruption. So there is not even a hint or a suggestion of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was not fortunate enough to hear all that the Senator from North Carolina said, because I have been absent from the Chamber, and therefore I am not in a position to interrogate him intelligently; but it seems to me, as an outsider and a neighbor, that until the senate, which will try the impeachment cases, has acted the mere action of the house in ordering the impeachment, I believe, does not warrant the belief that the judges will be convicted, and that, therefore, we had better wait until we have here something of a concrete character to discuss.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will say to my distinguished friend that if he had been in the Chamber a while ago he would have heard me say that I did not propose to discuss the merits of this question, inasmuch as it is pending before a court of impeachment. I was merely replying to questions that were propounded to me by different Senators.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thought from the tenor of the discussion that there was some imputation upon the integrity of purpose of the North Carolina legislature, and as it is a neighboring State, and I happen to believe, at least, that the members of that body are too high minded and have too much regard for their duties to be guilty of any underhand or dirty partisan action, I said what I did without intending to do more than to defend those people from any such imputation until they themselves have given ground for contrary belief.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator from South Carolina will allow me, I understand now from the statement of the two Senators from North Carolina that the judges exercised their judgment in respect of a writ of mandamus and pronounced upon appeal the right of a person to office, but it is not alleged that in so doing they acted corruptly. For mistakes of law judges necessarily for centuries have been held not answerable. If there is no allegation in the impeachment by the house that the judges acted corruptly, then indeed it is an impeachment by the house differing in judgment from the members of the supreme court of North Carolina, which impeachment itself necessarily impeaches those who make it, because unless a judge acts corruptly or it is alleged that he acts from a malevolent feeling or motive, then undoubtedly it is a case without ground of impeachment. I do not know the facts, but the two Senators from North Carolina say that it is in this fashion.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to admonish the Senator from North Carolina that I yielded only for his observations and not for general debate.

Mr. PRITCHARD. On that suggestion, if the Senators will excuse me, I must decline to yield, because I am talking in the time of another Senator.

Mr. MONEY. Does the Senator from North Carolina decline to yield?

Mr. PRITCHARD. The Senator from Iowa yielded this morning with the understanding that I would be as brief as possible.

Mr. MONEY. I should like permission to proceed for about three minutes, if you please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MONEY. I want to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has not yet yielded.

Mr. MONEY. Very well.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I can not yield unless the Senator from Iowa is willing.

Mr. MONEY. I give notice that I will reply to the Senator from North Carolina at 1 o'clock to-morrow, after the routine morning business shall have been concluded.

Mr. PRITCHARD. The Senator has a perfect right to do that.

Mr. MONEY. I give that notice.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that as soon as the appropriation bill is taken up we can immediately proceed to discuss anything under high heaven, and if the Senate desires to eliminate the unknown quantities in respect of the little dirty linen of North Carolina that is being washed here we had better be allowed to wash it now, because it will protract the discussion and more time will be lost by bringing it up on a set speech than it will simply to get rid of the unknown quantities at this time.

Mr. ALLISON. I am sure the Senator from South Carolina will not ask to interrupt the sundry civil bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. Not at all.

Mr. ALLISON. There will be plenty of opportunity to discuss this question at other times.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I had not intended, as I said at the beginning, to refer to any matter that was pending before the court of impeachment, because I deem it highly improper to do so. I will now say that I have the utmost confidence in the integrity of the gentlemen who compose the senate of North Carolina. Many of them are my personal friends, and I feel sure that when they come to consider this matter they will consider it as judicial officers and as the law requires them to do, and that they will do justice to all parties concerned.

The Democratic party of North Carolina, in its mad rush for office and power, has ignored all rules of decency in its treatment of public affairs and public officials. It was contended by them that what they did in 1898 was a revolution, and I am inclined to believe that such was the case, because many of the acts of the present legislature are revolutionary in the extreme. That body, in its treatment of many public questions, has displayed a spirit of partisanship that ought to put to blush the cheeks of every conservative citizen of North Carolina of whatsoever party.

In the elections of 1898 and 1900 thousands of colored men, as well as a number of white men, who were entitled to vote under our State constitution, were refused registration, and, as a result, a number of registrars were indicted under sections 5508–5510 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and some of them were charged with conspiracy. These cases are now pending in the United States district court for the western district. A number of bills were found subsequent to the last election, but on motion of the counsel for defense they were all continued until the spring term in order that partisan feeling might subside and thereby insure to them a fair and impartial trial. These men were indicted for denying to the citizen a right to which he was entitled under our State constitution and being indicted for violating the laws of the United States they had no right to expect the aid of the people of North Carolina in the conduct of their trial, but in face of the fact that the bills upon which they had been arraigned were found by a grand jury composed of leading Republicans, Populists, and Democrats, the legislature, during its present session, has passed a law which authorizes the governor to employ counsel to conduct their defense and to pay their attorney fees out of the funds in the State treasury. In the first instance, the Republican taxpayers of of the State are compelled to submit to the unlawful methods by which members of their party are denied their constitutional rights, and, in the second instance, they are taxed to raise money with which to pay the attorney fees of the very men who robbed them of their rights. Here we have partisanship of the rankest kind. I have never known any party to permit their greed for office to force them into such an uncompromising attitude before the American people. It only tends to show the character of the methods that are being employed in my State in order that a few Democrats may hold office. It is a blot upon the fair name of the State and places our people in a false attitude, because the majority of the people of North Carolina are honest, conservative, and law-abiding. The rank and file of the Democratic party, in my humble opinion, are not in favor of the unjustifiable methods that are now being resorted to by the members of the State legislature in order to retain control of our affairs in the future.

While discussing this phase of the question I desire to call attention to another bill which has been introduced in the State legislature and which will, in all probability, become a law during its present session. The bill in question is as follows:

SECTION 1. That chapter 16, volume 2, of the Code, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That sections 47, 48, and 52 of chapter 1 of the laws of 1900, enacted at the adjourned session in June, 1900, and ratified June 13, 1900, be, and the same are hereby, amended by adding at the end of each of said sections the words "Provided, That no indictment shall be found or prosecution begun, or maintained, under the provisions of this section or for any violations of the provisions of this act, unless such indictment be found or prosecution be begun within thirty days after the alleged commission of such offense."

SEC. 3. This act shall be in force from and after its ratification.

Section 47 provides that any registrar or judge of election, or county canvasser or commissioner, register of deeds, clerk or chairman of the county board of elections, who shall fail to make returns and perform the duties required of him, shall be fined not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or imprisoned not more than six months nor less than two months, at the discretion of the court, and that he shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500.

Section 48 provides that if any chairman of the county board of elections, or other returning officer, shall willfully, or of malice, neglect to perform any duty, act, matter, or thing required or directed in the time, manner, and form in which such duty, act, matter, or thing is required to be performed in relation to the election and returns thereof, that the person so fined shall be guilty of a felony and fined not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars, and be imprisoned not less than one nor more than three years.

Section 52 provides that any person who by force or violence shall break up or stay any election by assaulting the officers thereof, or depriving them of the ballot boxes, or by any other means, his aiders or abettors shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and imprisoned not more than three months, and pay such fine as the court shall adjudge, not exceeding $100. It also provides that if any person shall interrupt or disturb the registrar while engaged in the registration of voters, or the registrar or judges of election while engaged in holding the election, etc., he shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $50 or imprisoned not more than thirty days.

These provisions were placed in the election law by a Democratic legislature and were referred to by speakers representing that party in the last campaign as an evidence of the fact that they were in favor of a fair and honest election; but I am informed that a number of election officials have already been indicted in the State courts and that quite a number of prosecutions are in contemplation, and in order to shield their henchmen who have deliberately violated the law in order to secure the election of some of the men who now constitute our legislature it is openly proposed to wipe from the statute book by limitation all the provisions by which they can be indicted and punished.

They expend the money of the people of the State to defend those who violated the law for their sake and in consequence of which they are indicted in the United States court, but inasmuch as the State of North Carolina is a party to all prosecutions for violations of law or of offenses over which the State courts have jurisdiction, it seems that our Democratic friends have decided that the only way to protect their political associates who are liable to be convicted in the State courts for violating a law, which many of the present members of the legislature helped to enact, they deliberately decide to pass a general amnesty law, granting a pardon to this class of violators of the law. I can not understand why it is that our Democratic friends should be so anxious about the fate of those who have been indicted, because it is contended by them that they are innocent, and if such is the case they will no doubt be acquitted by a jury of their countrymen.

I have been appealed to by a number of Democrats to do what I could to induce the district attorney to nolle pros the various cases that are pending in the United States court; but I have declined to interfere in these cases, feeling, as I do, that the enforcement of the laws of the United States is intrusted to the courts, and that any interference on my part would be unwarranted. If these men are innocent they ought not to be convicted or punished; but if they are guilty, then they ought to be required to answer the charges on which they are indicted in the State or Federal courts.

The enactment by the present general assembly of North Carolina of an honest election law will protect every citizen of the State in the enjoyment of his rights, and if such is executed then there will be few, if any, violations of the law in the future, and the necessity of indictments will cease. If such a statute is to be enacted, let its provisions be marked in every line with simplicity, for as the law demands obedience, its spirit and meaning should be brought within the intelligence of every citizen if obedience is expected.

The race question is a thing of the past in North Carolina. The colored man has never dominated the affairs of the white man in that State, and he is less inclined now than ever before to engage in political affairs.

The voting population of our State, according to the census of 1890, is as follows:

Total white vote	233,650
Total colored vote	124,107

making an excess of white over colored voters of 109,543.

I am sure that the present census will show that there are not more than 95,000 colored voters in the State of North Carolina to-day, thousands of them having left the State since 1890. But this cry of white supremacy by the Democrats is hypocritical, calculated and intended to deceive the voters of the State.

I call attention to the fact that at the August election in 1900 in 48 counties in North Carolina, wherein one-fourth colored people and more than one-half the white people reside, the Republicans secured a majority of 3,168, and in 50 counties, wherein four-fifths of the colored voters reside and less than one-half the white people, the Democrats secured a majority of 57,140.

Before the last election in North Carolina the chairmen of the Republican and Populist committees in a number of eastern counties submitted for appointment as judges of election a list of names of white Populists and Republicans who were men of high character and standing; but the leaders of the so-called white-supremacy party refused to appoint them and appointed colored men in their stead.

Under our laws judges of election are vested with judicial functions, being empowered to order arrests without warrants and to punish for contempt, and here we have an instance wherein the so-called white-supremacy party furnished us an example of its inconsistency by appointing colored men to positions wherein they are authorized to exercise the functions of a judge.

There is no disposition on the part of the Republicans of North Carolina to keep alive race or sectional questions. The constitutional amendment which was adopted at the August election has passed out of the realm of politics, and it now becomes a question for the courts, and no one is inclined to interfere with an orderly consideration of the question, in the event that it should be presented to the proper tribunal for solution. We have at last reached a point where the living issues of the day ought to be considered by the people of North Carolina without having them obscured by matters that are calculated to create a prejudice in the minds of our people and which necessarily result in the indifferent consideration of all questions that vitally affect our welfare.

It affords me pleasure to say that the Democratic machine of North Carolina is no respecter of persons when the fate of any member of the inner circle is involved. There was a primary held in our State at the last general election for the selection of a candidate to be voted for for United States Senator, and it is boldly charged by some of the best Democrats in the State that the result was secured by fraudulent and corrupt methods.

As to the truthfulness of this statement I know nothing, but the defeated candidate, Hon. Jule Carr, is one of the most highly respected citizens of our State. He has done more to aid the benevolent institutions of the State than any other member of the Democratic party; and, with the exception of Mr. Duke or Durham, I will say that he has done more in this line than any citizen in the State. He is an honored member of the Confederate Veterans' Association of the State, a majority of whom were exceedingly anxious to secure his election, but he could not stem the tide which for the present seems to be irresistible, and he shared the fate of those who have dared to incur the displeasure of the ring.

The present legislature has shown a disposition to legislate so as to dishearten rather than to encourage the many industrial enterprises that are being developed throughout our section and without which there is no hope for us in the future. The time is ripe for the organization of a movement on the part of those who desire to secure the upbuilding of our State and the development of our wonderful resources. We have all the natural advantages necessary to make North Carolina one of the richest States in the Union, but we can never expect to place her in that position to which she is so justly entitled until the conservative business men and the farmers come together with a determination to labor for the attainment of that end.

I desire to thank the Senator from Iowa for his indulgence.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I had intended to submit some brief remarks following my colleague on the resolution to which he has spoken, but I was out of the Chamber on a conference committee during a part of his speech and I desire to read it before speaking, and besides, I do not wish at this time to stand in the way of the appropriation bill being disposed of. I give notice that at a later time, before the end of this session, I will submit a few remarks on the resolution.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10899) to restore to the public domain a small tract of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation in the Territory of Arizona.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said bill.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9829) to provide for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, upon which the committee of conference were unable to agree; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. STEELE, and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 323) granting homesteaders on abandoned Fort Fetterman Military Reservation of Wyoming the right to purchase one-quarter section of public land on said reservation as pasture or grazing land;

A bill (H. R. 3819) for the relief of the widows and children of William Ryan and John S. Taylor, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 5220) for the relief of Charles M. Kennedy;

A bill (H. R. 7571) to prevent the failure of military justice, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7760) for the relief of James Kelly;

A bill (H. R. 10899) to restore to the public domain a small tract of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona;

A bill (H. R. 11161) to refund excessive postage paid on certain newspapers;

A bill (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder;

A bill (H. R. 13707) authorizing the Citizens' Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River;

A bill (H. R. 13801) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902;

A bill (H. R. 13803) to amend section 19 of chapter 252, Twenty-ninth Statutes at Large, approved May 28, 1896;

A bill (H. R. 13850) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902;

A bill (H. R. 13865) relative to the suit instituted for the protection of the interests of the United States in the Potomac Flats;

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 249) providing for the publication of the report of the board of management of the United States Government exhibit at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 259) to regulate the distribution of public documents to the Library of Congress for its own use and for international exchange.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14018) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Under Legislative," page 141, after line 18, to insert:

Senate: For compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate, namely, for 10 clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at the rate of $1,500 per annum, $7,500.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this provision and ask an explanation of it.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the law Senators who are not chairmen of committees are entitled to a clerk at the rate of $1,500 per annum. For the fiscal year, upon examination of the rolls of Senators, it is found that under the present organization of the committees there will be ten Senators who will not be chairmen of committees.

Mr. CULBERSON. Only ten Senators?

Mr. ALLISON. Only ten, I understand. That is the object of the amendment. Of course, if there are more than ten, they would be entitled to employ clerks, who will be paid, but they can not be paid under the appropriation made at this session.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand, of course, that every Senator who is not a chairman is entitled to a secretary under the present law at a salary of $1,500 a year, and he is entitled to a messenger at a compensation of $720 a year. If this provision is intended to carry out that law, I can not so understand it, for it provides:

For compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate, namely, for 10 clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at the rate of $1,500 per annum, $7,500.

Does that propose that ten Senators who may be selected out of the body who have not chairmanships shall have an additional clerk at $1,500 a year while for other Senators there is provided a clerk and a messenger at $720 a year?

Mr. ALLISON. Clerks for certain Senators are provided for in the legislative appropriation bill, I understand, and certain others are provided for here. I had forgotten the provision in the legislative bill for the moment. It is difficult to ascertain exactly the number. For example, if the committees of the Senate are reorganized at the extra session of the Senate probably a portion of this appropriation will not be needed; but if there is not a reorganization of committees at the extra session all of this appropriation will be needed, and it is possible that provision may be required for one or two more clerks; but I think not. I think this provides for every Senator who will not be chairman of a committee under the present organization of the Senate.

It will be necessary before the session closes to adopt the usual resolution at the end of a Congress, which is that the committees as now organized shall continue until the next regular session, or until the Senate reorganizes its committees. So all that machinery will be necessary to make a proper adjustment and arrangement in respect of these clerks.

I think this provision will be ample, no matter what may be done or what may not be done at the extra session. There are 30 annual clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees provided for in the legislative appropriation bill, which will become a law, of course, and here 10 in addition are provided for. If the Senate is reorganized at the extra session of the Senate, it is probable that this appropriation will not be needed. If it is not needed, of course the money can not be used for that purpose. I think, taking the two bills together, the adjustment is a proper one for the convenience of all Senators.

Mr. MONEY. I fully understand the Senator; but I desire to ask him what is the sense of the word "messengers" in this clause:

For compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate, namely, for 10 clerks to Senators.

What is the use of inserting the words "officers, messengers, and others?" It seems to me the word "messengers" is superfluous.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not a superfluous word here, but that is the usual way under which this appropriation is made; and if there are no messengers required other than those already provided for in the legislative bill, I think that surplusage can do no harm.

Mr. MONEY. I do not know that it will, unless there is something that follows it. But I will ask the chairman, if there are 30 members of this body provided with clerks at the salary named—$1,500 per annum—whether there will be any 10 men needed? In other words, I should like to know whether these 10 extra clerks are to go to those who have no chairmanships and yet have private secretaries under the legislative appropriation bill at $1,500 a year?

Mr. ALLISON. For clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees. It has no relation to our adjustment here for the convenience of Senators as respects messengers.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that each Senator is allowed a private secretary, at $1,500 a year, if he is not chairman of a committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Which is this appropriation and the one corresponding to it in the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that private secretaries are provided for in the legislative appropriation bill for each one who is not chairman of a committee.

Mr. ALLISON. They are. There are 30 provided for in the legislative appropriation bill. Now, suppose it should turn out that there are 35 Senators who are not chairmen of committees in the reorganization?

Mr. MONEY. That is exactly the information I want to get.

Mr. ALLISON. If there are 35, then this additional appropriation will apply to that extent to Senators who are not chairmen; and if there shall be 10 more, this appropriation will provide for them. It was the expectation and desire of the committee to provide a sufficient number of clerks to Senators who were not chairmen of committees, whatever may be the result of the reorganization in March or a failure to reorganize until the next regular session.

Mr. MONEY. Then I understand the Senator to say that this is simply provisional, in case there is an excess of 30 Senators without chairmanships?

Mr. ALLISON. If there would be more than 30 Senators without chairmanships, then this is intended to provide for those.

Mr. MONEY. And it is not intended to apply unless they are without chairmanships?

Mr. ALLISON. It can not, under the existing law.

Mr. CLAY. I did not exactly understand the Senator and I do not yet, although he is usually very clear. As I understand it, a Senator who is not chairman of a committee has his clerk at a salary of $1,500 a year and a messenger at $720 per year. That is the law as it stands at this time.

Mr. ALLEN. Practically so.

Mr. CLAY. Now, do I understand that this amendment gives ten Senators who have no chairmanships a clerk, to which they are entitled anyway, as an additional clerk, at $1,500 per year also?

Mr. ALLISON. It does not. Under these two provisions taken together every Senator who is without a chairmanship will be provided with a clerk. Under other provisions in the legislative appropriation bill, the provision as respects messengers, etc., that is already provided for, so that this is only an appropriation to make it certain that every Senator who appears here on the 4th of March and who is not after that time made chairman of a committee will have a clerk at an annual salary of $1,500.

Mr. CLAY. It does not change the present conditions, as I understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not change the present conditions.

Mr. MONEY. There are 66 chairmanships, I am informed. There are only 90 Senators. Therefore there are only 24 Senators without chairmanships. If that is true, and 30 Senators have been provided for, provision has been made for 6 too many. I do not object to this item if I can understand what is proposed here. If it is proposed to give another clerk to 10 Senators and leave out others who will not be chairmen, there will certainly be objection made to it. If there are 66 committees, as I understand there are, although I am not particularly informed about it, then there can be only 24 Senators without chairmanships, and if the legislative appropriation bill provides for 30 we provide already for 6 more than are necessary. I suppose the Senator has the figures there, and he can tell me if I am correct about the statement regarding 66 chairmanships.

Mr. ALLISON. No one can tell what the number of committees will be after the 4th of March, whether it will be 60 or 66. We may have the same number of committees; we may increase the number of committees, or it may be diminished.

These two provisions, taken together, provide for all the Senators who are to be here after the 4th of March, either as chairmen of committees or as Senators, and if there shall be only five or three of the persons herein provided for required, that will be all that will be used of the appropriation. I suggest to the Senator that it is to the interest of Senators to make such provision as will not embarrass Senators who are not chairmen of committees after the 4th of March.

Mr. MONEY. If the number of committees should be reduced, of course there would be more Senators to be provided for who would not be chairmen, but there is not any likelihood of any reduction in the number of committees. If the number of chairmen is increased, which is more likely, then there will be less necessity for this provision.

All I am anxious to know is whether a Senator without a chairmanship, who is entitled to a private secretary, is to have another clerk or not, to the exclusion of other Senators who are in his condition without a chairmanship. In other words, there should be absolute equality all along the line. If I can understand that to be the purpose of this measure, which is obscure, I will raise no objection about it, and I do not desire to raise any. I simply want an understanding about it; that is all.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, the Committee on Appropriations can only take the estimate of the financial clerk, who has charge of these payments and who presented to us this estimate. If it should turn out that we have provided for more clerks than are needed, they can not draw pay, because each Senator is entitled to one clerk and no more, and he can secure no more under this provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 141, after line 23, to insert:

For furniture for the new committee rooms of the Senate in the old Library portion of the Capitol, $21,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 143, after line 18, to insert:

Statue of Washington: For a replica of the bronze equestrian statue of Gen. George Washington, designed by Daniel Chester French and Edward C. Potter, erected in the city of Paris, France, by the women of the United States, $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 143, after line 24, to insert:

Statue of Rochambeau: For the purchase by the Joint Committee on the Library of a replica of the bronze statue of Rochambeau by Ferdinand Hamar, and pedestal for the same, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 144, under the head "Public printing and binding," line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "fifty-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the costs of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Executive Office, and the Departments, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employees, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for rents, books of reference, and all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $4,658,000; and from the said sum hereby appropriated printing and binding shall be done by the Public Printer to the amounts following, respectively, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 146, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "fifteen;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And said sum shall complete all engravings and illustrations for said report, and no deficiency shall be made in this appropriation, and said report shall be confined to four volumes.

So as to make the clause read:

For the United States Geological Survey as follows:

For engraving the illustrations necessary for the report of the Director, $15,000; and said sum shall complete all engravings and illustrations for said report, and no deficiency shall be made in this appropriation, and said report shall be confined to four volumes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 148, after line 13, to insert:

The Public Printer shall print as many extra copies of the monthly catalogue of Government publications as may be needed by the superintendent of documents to supply the same to all who shall subscribe therefor at 75 cents a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 148, after line 17, to insert:

That the catalogue of Government publications, authorized by section 69 of an act approved January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing, binding, and distribution of public documents, shall hereafter be designated as the "Document Catalogue;" and the same shall be prepared and published in one volume biennially, beginning with the Fifty-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 149, to insert:

That there be printed and bound 1,000 copies of the proceedings in connection with the reception of the Webster statue on January 18, 1900, in the form prescribed by law for eulogies, of which 100 shall be for the use of the donor of the statue, 300 delivered to the Senators and Representatives of the States of New Hampshire and Massachusetts, 400 for the use of the Senate, and 800 for the use of the House of Representatives, and that the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to procure a photogravure of the said statue, and photogravures of each of the two bronze panels, and of the unveiling, for insertion in said volumes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. If I may be allowed, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the paragraph we had under consideration a few moments ago, on page 141, beginning in line 19, "for compensation of officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the service of the Senate." The appropriation is for 10 clerks, at $1,500 per annum, and the total amount appropriated is only $7,500. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator to the discrepancy in the sum. I think, instead of $7,500, the sum should be $15,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I take it that the appropriation necessary to cover the remainder will be found in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I presume the appropriation is for only a part of the year. I have no objection, however, if there be any question about it, to inserting "$15,000" instead of "$7,500," in line 23, on page 141, and then if we find it is not needed we can have it changed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Fifteen thousand dollars is the appropriation necessary to pay the ten annual clerks at $1,500 a year. I suppose this appropriation was intended to pay clerks during the session of the Senate, being an average of six months.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not the purpose. Clerks to Senators are paid an annual salary. I have not in mind just now why the aggregate amount there is only $7,500. I move to make the amount $15,000, and it can be corrected hereafter if we find there is any mistake about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the committee amendment, which has been adopted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 150, to insert:

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION, BUFFALO, N. Y.

For the benefit and to the use of the Pan-American Exposition to be held at Buffalo, in the State of New York, from May 1, 1901, to November 1, 1901, $500,000, to be immediately available, said sum to be paid to and be disbursed by the Pan-American Exposition Company under rules and regulations and under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That in the distribution of any moneys that may remain in the treasury of the said Pan-American Exposition Company after the payment of its debts the aforesaid sum so appropriated shall be repaid in full into the Treasury of the United States before any dividend, return, or distribution shall be made to the holders of the capital stock of said corporation: And provided also, That the United States shall not in any circumstances be liable for any debt or obligation of the said corporation or for any payment in addition to the foregoing sum. That as a condition precedent to the payment of this appropriation the Pan-American Exposition Company shall contract to close the gates to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the fair.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that amendment be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What has become of the amendment relative to the Buffalo Exposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] asked that it might be passed over for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to offer one or two amendments to the bill on behalf of the committee. On page 12, after line 16, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

For the establishment of a light-house and fog signal at Point No Point, Chesapeake Bay, Maryland, between Cove Point and Smiths Point, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the committee, I also offer another amendment, on page 76, after line 2, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

For examination of and report on the topography and geology of the territory adjacent to the forty-ninth parallel west of the one hundred and tenth meridian, $10,000, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 17, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "thirteen;" and after the word "thousand," in line 18, to insert "to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended;" so as to make the clause read:

For any special surveys that may be required by the Light-House Board or other proper authority, and contingent expenses incident thereto, $13,400, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. There are two or three amendments passed over, which I ask that the Secretary may now state.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment passed over was on page 68. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over was on page 68, beginning on line 29, as follows:

Provided further, That any person residing within the limits of any forest reservation in Colorado, Montana, Idaho, Utah, or Wyoming, or any person who did reside therein at the time of its creation, or whose live stock had ranged within the area covered by such reservation prior to its creation and still ranges within its limits, shall be permitted to graze live stock continuously throughout the year within the limits of such reservation upon the condition that he will at all times use his best efforts to prevent the starting and spread of forest fires in the locality in which his stock ranges.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Has the amendment of the committee been amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been amended, and was read as amended.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to make a single inquiry about this provision, and that is, who is to judge as to whether a man will "use his best efforts to prevent the starting and spread of forest fires in the locality?"

Mr. TELLER. I suppose the only way is to leave that to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This gives the Secretary of the Interior no authority in the matter. That is what I wish to call attention to.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the Senator from Connecticut that nobody is so much interested in stopping fires as the men who live and graze their cattle on the reservations.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for a moment. I do not know that there is any objection to the purpose of this amendment; but I do think that there should be some safeguard thrown about it, so that the person grazing cattle on these forest reservations should not be his own judge as to whether he is using the proper endeavors to prevent the spread of fires. If this question goes into conference, I hope the chairman of the committee will take it into consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. This amendment was inserted on the motion of a member of the committee, who seems to think that this provision will not prove disadvantageous to the forest reservations. I have great doubt about it myself; and I should be glad to have some member of the committee who advocated this measure in the committee room explain in detail just what it will do and what it will not do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. To make myself perfectly clear, I wish to refer to the language of the amendment. It provides that any person whose live stock has ranged within the area covered by a reservation prior to the setting aside of the reservation shall be permitted to graze live stock continuously, as the language now reads, I believe.

Mr. TELLER. It reads "continuously throughout the year."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The provision continues:

within the limits of such reservation upon the condition that he will at all times use his best efforts to prevent the starting and spread of forest fires in the locality in which his stock ranges.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says it is as much for the interest of such a person as it is for that of anybody else that there should be no fires there. Probably that is true, but when a privilege is granted upon condition that a man will use his best efforts to prevent fires it seems to me there should be some provision as to the regulations prescribing the terms upon which that grazing shall be permitted. I do not know how to amend it, but I think it ought to be amended.

Mr. TELLER. The Secretary of the Interior, by general statute, has general authority over these forest reserves. The Department has provided regulations for the government of these forest reserves, and among other things they have provided that cattle should be grazed only nine months in the year. Every man familiar with the subject knows that no harm is done by grazing cattle there during the additional three months, and that no possible advantage occurs by taking the cattle off during the winter months. There is not anything for the cattle to eat except the dry grass, which cures in that country, and becomes like hay, on account of the aridity of the atmosphere.

To remove the cattle from those reserves would practically destroy the value of the property of the settlers residing within the reserves, who were there before the reserves were made, who can not be dispossessed, and who never ought to have been included in a reserve. Great hardship has been the result of that action, and a great deal of excitement now exists because of an attempt on the part of the Department to remove the cattle belonging to those people. It can not be done; it is an impracticable thing. When one reserve in the State of Colorado was made it had 135 settlers, who went there and who owned the land. They were shut out from any further settlement. Nobody else could go in. They have been left to take care of their schools in a limited way, with no help, as they had a right to expect from increased settlement. In every way it has been a great hardship.

I want to say that practically all those reserves were made against my protest, and almost all of them are absolutely useless for the purposes for which they were made.

I have now on my desk an application, made by a citizen in the vicinity of Cripple Creek, for permission to cut dead and dry timber on a forest reserve. The Commissioner of the General Land Office advised that he should be permitted to do so, but when it went to the Secretary of the Interior some clerk—I do not suppose the Secretary of the Interior ever saw it—decided that it should not be done and gave as his reason that the removal of the dead and down timber would injure the snow supply.

Every man who has ever been in a forest knows that a dead tree lying on the ground does not preserve the snow at all. It happens in this case that the streams upon which these men wanted to cut dead timber furnish not a quart of water for irrigating purposes during the irrigating season. There is not any irrigation on them. They are mountain streams that run out of the mountains close to the river, and by the time the irrigation season commences there is no snow at the heads of those streams at all.

Mr. President, we have been pestered and annoyed by these things to such an extent that our people are very much irritated over them. I myself confess to a great deal of irritation. The State of Colorado has passed the severest possible laws against setting out fires or allowing fires to get out in the timber. This provision may not be perfect, but there was no necessity of putting that clause in it at all. It was put in because the Department had been saying to the men there that if they were given permission to graze their cattle there they must do this, and the settlers have agreed to do it.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] who introduced this provision knows the condition just as I know it, and I know he will bear me out in saying that no harm can come to the Government or to the timber reserves by letting this provision pass.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in reference to the criticism made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] on the phraseology of the amendment I can say little, except that the original law authorizing the creation of these forest reserves provided that the Secretary of the Interior might make all needful rules and regulations for the execution of the law and the preservation of the forests. It has been held judicially that the rules and regulations made by the Secretary, not in conflict with the letter or the spirit of the law, had in and of themselves the force of law. The phraseology was interjected into this amendment, requiring the party to use his best endeavors to prevent forest fires, to the end that, in conjunction with existing law or under its authority, the Secretary of the Interior might make a rule whereby any settler who might be injuriously negligent in this behalf might be excluded from the enjoyment of the privileges contemplated by this amendment. In that respect I think the amendment might be improved.

In reference to the general principle of the amendment, Mr. President, little need be said. These forest reservations were very recklessly outlined. The Lewis and Clarke Forest Reservation in the State of Montana is considerably larger than the State of Connecticut, and two of the reservations which lie side by side, but bear different names, are larger than Massachusetts and Connecticut combined. Within the exterior limits of these reserves, which were run in an arbitrary manner, there are villages, mining camps, farmhouses, well-cultivated fields; and settlers have resided there for many, many years. Their children have grown up; they have been educated; they have been married in the little village church near by. They are estopped from accepting further additions to the community; and by some unheard-of logic the law providing that no other settler shall go in, I am unable to see how the children that may be born on these reserves can get homes near by the old homestead.

By a logic, the basis of which I am unable to comprehend, the Interior Department has provided that the people who have resided there for, in some cases, a quarter of a century, who have their homes patented, and hold a fee-simple title to the land, shall not at certain seasons of the year allow the stock they own to graze on the hillsides near by, but must move the stock off to a great distance out on the public domain, because, forsooth, it is assumed that the eating of the grass under the trees will in some way contribute to the spread of forest fires.

This amendment proposes to render impossible the execution of that ridiculous rule. Where the timber is scattered and the growth of grass luxuriant, the grass tends to aid in the spread of the forest fire rather than to repress it. The amendment can not in any manner injuriously affect the growth of timber; it can not injuriously affect the public interest in any other way, and its effect will be merely to nullify a senseless rule made at the behest of certain forest cranks who make rules to govern these reserves, having only in their minds the Mall or the small parks in the city of Washington. Why, Mr. President, one of these reservations within the State of Montana is over 300 miles long and on an average of over 100 miles wide. There are six or eight thousand people residing within the limits of the reservation.

The rules require that these people should take their milch cows and whatever of stock they have and drive them out 100 miles into some open country beyond at a certain specified, arbitrary, and fixed day in the year.

I am astonished that any man who has passed a civil-service examination or has sense enough to keep out of St. Elizabeth's Asylum has assisted in framing such a rule. I am sure that the Secretary of the Interior never saw it and gave his approval only in a pro forma way; yet this rule has existed and annoyed whole communities and has tended to repress the growth of States. I think the amendment is eminently proper; and it is extremely unfortunate that any Department of the Government has rendered such an amendment necessary.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, I want to indorse the statement made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. We have in Idaho several large forest reserves, one of which is known as the Bitter Root and another as the Priest River Reservation. On these reservations there are several hundred people who had located there prior to the time these reservations were set apart. They own ranches and have stock. Their ranches are not very large, it is true, but they have sufficient land under cultivation to raise a sufficient amount of hay to maintain their stock on the reservation during the winter months. I heartily concur in the statement made that it would be a very great hardship to compel the farmers to remove their stock outside of the boundaries of the reservations at certain periods.

In addition to that, hundreds of miners were on these reservations prior to the time they were set apart. They have got mills, machinery, and post-offices, and are in a very prosperous condition. I trust they will be allowed to get the benefit of this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the amendment is agreed to I wish to amend, at the end of line 7, by inserting "but this privilege shall not be transferable."

Mr. TELLER. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I feel that before this amendment is adopted I ought to call the attention of the committee to the grave dangers which must result, it seems to me, from this legislation.

Forest reserves of vast area—30,000,000 or 40,000,000 acres—have been set apart for the purpose of preserving the forests. In all these reserves there are settlers. As I understand this amendment, the settler has a right to graze that reserve. Suppose a settler takes in the land or takes in the cattle of other people—thousands of them, or perhaps hundreds of thousands of them—it seems to me under this amendment he would have a right to graze that whole reserve, and that we are setting apart really great pastures for a few people who now reside within the area of these reserves to their exclusive use and benefit for all time. I think that the amendment is susceptible of that construction; and it is a very dangerous thing to do.

I know of reservations of 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 acres where perhaps there are 20 or 30 families, and those 20 or 30 families thus become the owners—better than if they were the owners in fee—of the entire reservation. They have no taxes to pay; the Government furnishes its rangers to keep out fires, and those people pasture the cattle of everybody who will come and pay them for taking care of them, or they get a bill of sale, apparently becoming the owners of the cattle, and then graze the entire reservation to the exclusion of everybody else.

Besides that, this amendment provides that live animals may be pastured upon the reservation, and everyone knows that where a reservation is pastured with sheep no new timber will grow.

Not only will they bite off the new trees, but they will trample them under foot, moving in great bands, in compact masses, and those trees which they will not nip off they will cut to pieces with their sharp hoofs. You will destroy every purpose for which the forest reservation law was enacted if you allow the pasturing of sheep within those reservations. Senators may say that a pine tree is a tree which sheep will not eat. That is true, but when the tender pine shoot comes up from the ground the sheep's hoofs will cut it off. Therefore this country will be denuded of its forests.

I hope the committee will find some means to guard against these objections and will frame this amendment so that it can not do harm, so that it can not absolutely ruin and destroy the purpose of the forest reservation law and the forest reservations of the United States. I do not care to discuss the question. I dislike to oppose it, and I am not going to object to the amendment, but I want it framed so as to cover these questions. I believe the forest reservation law was a good one, and that it has been of great advantage to the West, and that we ought to preserve these forests, keep out the fires, and renew the forests as trees are cut down, and they ought not to be made pasturage for a few people.

We had better buy out the rights of those people and pay whatever is necessary to secure a relinquishment of their claims than to enact such legislation as this. There is a reservation in my State, and I would not have that provision extended to my State under any circumstances, and I believe any Senator living in those States where the people want to preserve the forests will find they are justified in getting their State included.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this provision does not give any continuous right. It can be repealed at the next session of Congress. The Senator from South Dakota is imagining some great evil that is going to happen which will never happen. We have not given any rights here to these people except a temporary one, subject to the control of Congress at all times. I know as much about the timber interests and the general interests of my State as the Senator from South Dakota does. He has an entirely different condition in Dakota. He has deciduous forests. We do not have them in Colorado.

I say there is no danger coming to a forest reservation composed entirely of coniferous trees, or anything on it, by the pasture of sheep. To begin with, the sheep, as a rule, do not pasture in the high altitudes. The sheep ranges are in the valleys and the lower country, where the timber does not grow. There is no intention here except to protect the settlers and at the same time protect the timber. The timber is of no commercial value whatever. In a forest reserve which I have particularly in mind—and I hold in my hand a petition of a great number of people who have written to the Department of the Interior to give some attention to their condition, which they never have been able to get—every bit of the commercial timber was cut off years ago.

There is no danger. If the Senator from Iowa desires that the citizen shall not transfer his right, there is no objection to that. These are not the great cattle ranges. It will apply to a few settlers who have perhaps 50 or 75 or 100 head of cattle on a range where practically there is nothing to be done except to raise cattle.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to an article on this subject, found in the Forum of February, 1901. The article is written by Charles Newhall, superintendent of forest reserves in northern and central California, entitled "Sheep and the forest reserves." He shows the capacity of the sheep in the forests to ruin the forests. Where the sheep are, the shrubs and small trees are stripped of every leaf and tender twig, and no new trees come; that if the pasturage is continued, those forests will not be renewed; and that the trees, as they grow old, rot and fall, and leave the forests without timber, the country totally denuded of that class of vegetation.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. RAWLINS. Under the law as it is now in force and administered in my State, a forest reservation is thronged with sheep. The smaller foliage is all eaten up, trampled down, and destroyed and under the warden who is in charge of it timber is being cut and carried away. In other words, the end for which the forest reservation was created is being defeated. I am in favor of this amendment because, while I am opposed to any person having a monopoly, this will accord to the people who live on the reservation and adjoining it the privilege of grazing their milch cows and a few cattle and horses that they may have upon it.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me? Does not this amendment permit anybody, parties who have formerly lived within the boundaries of a reservation but who are now living outside and who may have 50,000 head of cattle to graze them on the reservation free? It applies not only to those who live within the boundaries of a reservation, but to those who have lived inside the reservation and have moved off and now have herds of cattle outside.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to read just an extract from this article by Mr. Newhall:

It is not claimed—

This in answer to the suggestion that the sheep will not eat pines—

It is not claimed that sheep prefer a diet of pine needles, or that they will thrive on it, but when hungry they will take it; and sheep in the mountains often are very hungry. Moreover, and probably worse, what a band of sheep may not care to eat it will trample to death. It is a common saying that "sheep kill more than they eat." Often they will kill more with their hoofs than with their mouths.

A letter from an old sheepman of the southern Sierras tells of a spring, long ago, when he took his sheep to the ranges. He writes:

"I have had experience in the mountains for over twenty years. In 1884 I took my sheep in near some meadows. All around the meadows, that spring, millions of little pine trees from 3 to 8 inches high had sprung up. But when the sheep left the mountains, about the 20th of September, there was not a young tree left. Their sharp hoofs had cut them all off. A horse-rake could have raked up stacks of the little dead trees."

One Sunday I was waiting over at a country tavern. A ranchman of the neighborhood, who proved interesting, lounged up and occupied an end of my bench. He said to me:

"Twenty-two years ago my brother came in on these mountains, and the country was all sheeped off, not a young tree growing. The sheep ate and tramped. Seed would lie till spring, then just as it sprouted and got about an inch high along came the sheep and tramped it to death. Nothing had a chance. My brother got some hogs, bucked against the sheepmen, and kept 'em out, and now the trees are up so thick you can't drive through 'em. Some are 1½ feet through."

One day I overheard this, in substance: "It ain't fair. Cattle are let on the reserves; why not sheep? A steer's heavier 'n a sheep, and its hoofs is bigger 'n a sheep's. If you're going to shut out the herder, shut out the cattleman, too. I say it's class legislation."

The reply was: "No such thing. You're all off. Bigness isn't the question. The point is, a steer's hoof isn't a chisel, and a sheep's is."

The last man was right. If the sheep would scatter in feeding, as cattle and horses do, it would be another matter; less harm would result. But that is not their way. They go in close bands. One will see 2,000 sheep moving in a compact mass across a meadow. That means a live cutting machine, made up of 8,000 closely placed double chisels, each chisel driven home at every stroke by some hundred pounds weight of live mutton, and with the strokes falling so thickly that not an inch of the ground escapes. No small growth can possibly resist a combined mowing and cutting and pounding like that. Nothing is left alive when the machine has passed. If sheep should eat off the year's growth only, one might claim that they have as good a right to it as any other animal. But they do more; they kill as they go, roots and all. There is no chance whatever of reforesting a sheep-infected range. The seedlings can get no start. In many places the native grasses even are killed out.

(2) But the eating and chiseling do not represent all the harm that is laid to the sheep. Aside from the cutting and killing of living things by this 8,000-footed, machine-like band of sheep, what would one imagine its effect to be on the ground itself? The sheep are a plow to the soil when it is dry. When it is clayey and moist the effect is the opposite, the same as that sometimes produced on a small scale in farm economy, when the farmer, having thrown up an embankment for a proposed reservoir, turns in a band of sheep and herds them there until they have tramped the clay floor into a waterproof, stone-like cement.

Whether the sheep in the reserve plow the soil into dust or stamp it into rock-like cement the natural conditions are changed. Now, what must follow when presently the rains fall or a hot day touches the snowdrifts? The blessed water comes, but what can it do? It can not sink where it falls, drop by drop, into mulched and root-bound, mellow soil.

* * * * * * *

Old mountaineers will show many a place where just such things as I have described have happened, in their time, from no other cause, it is claimed, but the coming and going of the sheep. One day I stopped to noon at a cabin larger and more comfortable than the average. The old man whose home it was said to me: "I came here thirty-seven years ago. Thinking of what the country was then, it is now like having come out of heaven into purgatory to live here, for the sheep." The Government had been guarding the region for a year; but it will be many a long year before the country can be what it was when the old man was young.

Then he winds up by saying:

And so it is that on every count the verdict is against sheep.

After going on and reciting the facts, he says:

Is it any wonder that nearly all who know the facts are against them? Is it any wonder that the United States Government has finally taken vigorous action, or that its policy in excluding sheep absolutely from the reserves in the dry and middle belts, and either absolutely or partially in all the other reserves, is deemed a wise policy? Naturally, herders who have used the pasturage unhindered for years are disturbed. It matters nothing to them what the outcome in the future would be, whether the result, here as in other lands, would be desolation and death.

Merchants dependent on the trade of the sheepmen also complain. One of them said to me: "Excluding the sheep means to me a loss in trade of $2,000 a year." Another said: "I should never have bought this place if I had known that the sheep were to be stopped from passing." In one case a small community was so seriously threatened financially that the State legislature was petitioned to intervene. The complaint was that without the tax per head levied on alien sheep the poor and tiny county—perhaps the poorest and smallest in all the States—would not have sufficient income for its official life, and would immediately become bankrupt.

But the majority, in the sheep districts even, are with the Government. I asked a Congressman for his opinion, and I was surprised at the promptness with which he replied: "Without doubt, the majority are with the Government for the exclusion of the sheep." And what is more, it is encouraging to know that the people are with the Government, not only in this one detail of its dealing with the sheep, but that they are with it heartily in its whole broad policy of advance in the forestry work of its great reserves.

And so on, Mr. President. Mr. Newhall, I think I stated, is the superintendent of forest reservations for northern and central California, and he knows.

Now, in the face of these facts are we going to pass improvident and dangerous legislation, so loosely drawn, as this is, that a man, in my opinion, can take in there from other people just as many cattle as he pleases and just as many sheep as he pleases, and thus have better than a fee to these reservations, and absolutely destroy the forests upon them? I say we had better appropriate money and pay these people and have them leave the reservation. Perhaps it is not true in Colorado. I do not know that the reservations in Colorado have any timber upon them that is worth anything. Then limit this provision to Colorado and to that particular class of people, and not destroy the forest reservations for which we passed the law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter into an extended discussion of the forestry question; but as my silence might seem to give assent to what the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] has said regarding the effect of sheep pasturing, I wish to enter a total dissent. He has read from the report of one of the many forest supervisors in the United States, and this one takes the view that sheep should be excluded from all the forests. There are other supervisors who take the other view.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Who are they?

Mr. WARREN. I could name them, but it is not necessary to go down the list of supervisors. Officials of several departments who have made special investigations of the subject have reported that, under proper regulations, sheep and other live stock may be grazed upon forest reserves, not only without injury to the forest growth, but, on the contrary, with benefit. The Division of Forestry of the Department of Agriculture, supposed to be opposed to grazing on the forest reserves, does not contend that sheep injure forests of coniferous growth, but that the only injury done by sheep is in young forests in the lower altitudes, where deciduous growth is starting.

The proposed amendment does not apply to the Senator's State. He asks that it shall apply only to those who desire it. I understand that is all that the amendment comprehends. It takes in those States that desire it.

Under existing law the forest reservations, as they are now laid out, are under the absolute charge of the Secretary of the Interior, and, as the Senator knows, he is not a pronounced advocate of sheep grazing on the reserves; and yet he has found it to be to the interest of the Government to issue permits in given sections of certain forest reserves, and sheep are now grazing there.

While some few of these forest reserves contain only forest lands, most of them are great areas of country, squared out, and the boundaries formed by parallels of latitude or by section lines, and embrace broad tracts of grass lands that have never grown timber and never will. On some of these forest reserves a man may ride all day without seeing a tree. There are forests from which sheep should be excluded; there are forests from which cattle and horses should be excluded. This amendment does not propose to interfere with any of these.

I submit, in the first place, that none of the forests in the State which I have the honor in part to represent are of such character that they would be injured by the pasturage of sheep. The forest reserves in that State are composed of over 50 per cent open country, in which no forest has ever grown and none ever will, and it is nonsense to talk about excluding live stock from those parks and open acres, because, forsooth, doctrinaires have proposed it, and because there has been a great country squared off into a forest reserve, embracing open grazing country, as well as ridges covered with trees.

Of one of the reserves in Wyoming—the Big Horn Forest Reserve, which comprises 1,250,000 acres—an expert of the Geological Survey, who made a personal examination of the physical conditions of this reserve with a view to determining whether or not sheep grazing was injurious to the forests it contained, said in his report:

I have been informed that in the regulations governing timber reserves it is the purpose to prohibit the pasturing of sheep because it is believed that they eat off trees just springing up and also gnaw the bark of young trees and kill the growing timber.

I have had excellent opportunity to look into this. I have found sheep in almost every park in the mountains, and I have examined most carefully through the timber surrounding the parks after they had been occupied by sheep in every part of the reserve, and I have been unable to find the least evidence of the correctness of this belief. I have been unable to find so much as a single leaf or twig of a pine or spruce tree, large or small, which has been bitten or touched by them, or the smallest mark or the least abrasion of the bark on any pine or spruce tree of any size, caused by them. Hence, so far at least as this reserve is concerned, I am obliged to testify that this charge against the sheep is not well founded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, line 3, after the word "wells," it is proposed to insert "in arid and semi-arid sections," and after the word "hundred," in line 7, to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, and for the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semi-arid sections, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources of said sections, $150,000.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I gave notice that I would offer an amendment to take the place of the provision just read, and I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota does not offer it to the amendment proposed by the committee?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer it as a substitute for the entire paragraph on page 77.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question first will be on the amendment offered by the committee. If there is no objection, it will be agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I move to strike out "one" and insert "two" where it says "one hundred and fifty," so as to make the amount "$250,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, strike out the word "one," before the word "hundred," and insert "two," so as to read "$250,000."

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi will pardon the Chair for one moment. The Senator from North Dakota, the Chair understands, moves to strike out the entire paragraph?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move to strike out the entire paragraph and to insert the amendment which I send to the desk as a substitute therefor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendments offered to perfect the clause will take precedence, of course.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to speak to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana moves to amend a portion of the matter proposed to be stricken out. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, before the word "hundred," strike out "one" and insert "two," so that it will read "$250,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment may be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope if that is done the committee amendment to insert "and fifty" will be rejected. I will not object to increasing the amount to $200,000, but I object to its going beyond that sum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana moves to insert "two" in place of "one," in line 7. Without objection, that amendment will be agreed to, and the amendment of the committee proposing to insert the words "and fifty" will be disagreed to. Without objection, it is disagreed to.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I have desired to be heard on the first amendment inserting the words "in arid and semiarid sections." I do not think the amendment made by the committee should stand. I think the text as prepared by the House is what was intended should be the law. This provision for gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States meant exactly what it said—for the United States, and not for a part of it, and a very small part of it. It was not only intended to discover underground currents in the arid, but also in the rainy sections of the United States. The provision for gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States can have no relation whatever to the arid or semiarid regions of the country. The intention of that paragraph is to determine the capacity of streams in the rainy sections of the country, not in the arid or semiarid sections, for use in the manufactures of the country.

It is particularly desirable in some of the Southern States, where the efficiency of a stream, its power for mills, is unascertained. I have an instance in mind where a cotton mill was proposed to be erected in the State of Georgia, but because the capacity of the stream upon which it was to be located was unknown and could not be certified to by competent authority the capital that was prepared to invest did not invest. Upon subsequent investigation and test of the stream it was found to be ample. Now, this provision was intended for that purpose as much as anything else. It was not simply to discover the possibilities of underground currents in arid or semiarid regions.

I am very glad the Senator from Montana has made the proposition to increase this by a hundred thousand dollars, because it takes in his country as well as the other. But it was not the original intention to limit it to the arid and semi-arid sections, and it is a total perversion of the whole purpose of this section as it was in the House bill. I will ask the Senator from Iowa, who is in charge of the bill, if he will not accept an amendment striking out these words. They certainly ought not to stand. I think the words "in arid and semi-arid sections" should go out, or instead of that insert, after the words "for the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in the arid and semi-arid sections," the word "also," or something that will bring them within the intent of the bill.

The experiments in artesian water underground have been carried on to a great extent in my State. A large section of Mississippi has been considered unhealthy because of malaria, and it has been ascertained by experts that the malaria comes through the water more than anything else. They have been experimenting at great length; and I have myself, and am to-day, experimenting in discovering artesian underground currents, and have made two or three or four or five failures, in fact, and am going on with it now. We who have begun this thing, and we did begin it, are not quite satisfied to be left out in our own deal.

I hope the Senator from Iowa will accept this amendment. If he will not do so, I shall move to strike out "in arid and semiarid sections," so that the whole United States will be covered by this survey and this investigation, and one section as well as another will receive the benefit of the money and of the investigation. I want to say that I believe the investigation of the capacity of streams for manufacturing and other purposes and for the discovery of underground currents and artesian wells is just as much needed in the section east of the arid region as in the arid region itself, and more so, because you can not determine the value of streams out there, for they do not amount to anything. The streams are all carried off in ditches for irrigation purposes. Therefore I move to strike out the words "in arid and semiarid sections."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair declared the amendment agreed to, but it will hold it to be an open question. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Before this amendment is voted on, I desire to say one word respecting it. This is an entire departure from any legislation we have ever had as respects these investigations.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator from Mississippi has made a motion to strike out certain features of the committee amendment. That is the amendment before the Senate, I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. That is precisely what I am addressing myself to. He proposes, I understand, that the committee amendment, inserting the words "in arid and semiarid sections," shall be rejected. This is a new feature in these provisions relating to the measurement of streams, and I trust that the Senate will not engage now in a scheme of expenditure which will include the measuring of all the streams of all the States in the Union. That is all I have to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to insert the words "in arid and semiarid sections."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the substitute is considered I desire to move to further amend the paragraph. I understand it is in order to perfect it before the substitute is considered. I move to amend it by inserting in line 4, after the words "United States," the words "including Porto Rico."

Mr. HOAR. On what page?

Mr. FORAKER. On page 77.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, line 4, after the words "United States," insert "including Porto Rico;" so as to read:

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including Porto Rico, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to this paragraph? If not, the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to strike out this paragraph and insert what he sends to the desk will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the paragraph beginning in line 3, page 57, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That all moneys received from the sale and disposal of public lands in the arid and semiarid regions of the United States, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, excepting moneys set aside by law for educational purposes, shall be, and are hereby, reserved, set aside, and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury, to be known as the "arid land reclamation fund," which fund shall be at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior for the examination, survey, and construction of reservoirs and other irrigation works for the storage, diversion, and development of waters for the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands: that until further provided by Congress not to exceed 10 per cent of the said fund shall be available for continuing examinations and surveys and for gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States and for the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources of said sections.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment is in the nature of general legislation, and I make the point of order that it is not permissible upon this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the point of order ought to be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I wish the Chair would withhold the decision for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will withhold it if the Senator from North Dakota desires to address the Senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, this bill is merely in furtherance of all former legislation on the question of irrigation. It simply provides a new method for raising money to pay the expenses of irrigation enterprises. Heretofore we have had legislation and appropriated the money directly out of the Treasury for examinations, surveys, and reports. By the terms of the provision which I have offered we devote the receipts from the sales of the public lands in the arid and semiarid regions of the United States to a special fund, out of which fund the expenses hitherto paid directly from the Treasury shall be paid; and in addition we provide for the construction of reservoirs, so that we may get at something that is practical in the line of irrigation.

Now, Mr. President, I do not believe that the point of order should be made, although having been made, I do not believe that it lies against the proposition, because, as I have said, it is merely in furtherance of the general scheme of irrigation in this country.

Now, Mr. President, what have we been doing in regard to this question in the past ten or a dozen years? We have appropriated directly out of the Treasury of the United States over $2,000,000, for what purpose? To make examinations, investigations, and reports; but we have not irrigated a single foot of land in the whole country. All the irrigation that has been done in this country up to the present time has been accomplished by private parties, by private corporations, who have been benefited, it is true, to some extent by the surveys that have been made by the United States.

Over $2,000,000 have been appropriated directly out of the Treasury of the United States for making examinations, surveys, and reports, and here we are now proposing in this bill to appropriate $200,000 more for the same purpose. In the river and harbor bill, which passed this body yesterday, there is an appropriation of $190,000 for the same purpose. In the agricultural appropriation bill, which passed only a few days ago, there is an appropriation of $50,000 for the same purpose. In three of the appropriation bills going through this body this year there are provisions for direct appropriations out of the Treasury of the United States for irrigation purposes. It seems to me that the time has arrived when we should concentrate our efforts in this direction and put the work of irrigation under some one head.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest to my friend the Senator from North Dakota that his allusion to the amount appropriated in the river and harbor bill is not quite in harmony with his general remarks on that subject, because that appropriation is intended to carry out exactly what he has said he wishes to accomplish. This appropriation is to demonstrate the usefulness of the information which we have gathered heretofore and to make a working test; that is to say, to expend the appropriation in constructing something which will carry out the ideas obtained from the information we have heretofore received. So I do not think this particular appropriation should be classed in the category to which he alludes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My charge is that there are three provisions in the appropriation bills making appropriations directly out of the Treasury for irrigation, but my principal objection to the provision in the river and harbor bill to which I have referred—and I ask Senators to examine those provisions—is that we are going further than we have ever gone before in this respect. We are putting this matter in the hands of the War Department now. Heretofore it has been under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department and of the Department of Agriculture, and the Geological Survey has had a great deal to do with it; but now we are extending irrigation to the War Department and calling upon the engineers of that Department to construct and maintain reservoirs for irrigation purposes. We shall have all the Executive Departments under the Government engaged in this business if we keep on. Hence I say it is the duty of Congress to put this subject under one head, to put it in the Interior Department, where all questions pertaining to public lands have hitherto been, and where they ought to be.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. In all the legislation upon this subject hitherto, has Congress ever made any appropriation for the construction of a work of irrigation or authorized its construction, or has it been confined to investigations?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has been confined exclusively to investigations, examinations, and surveys and reports up to the present time, with one exception, I will say to the Senator. We passed the river and harbor bill yesterday, in which it is proposed now that the War Department shall commence the construction of reservoirs.

Mr. SPOONER. I was ill yesterday and was absent most of the time.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is in that bill, which is now in conference.

Mr. SPOONER. But the Senator's proposition now is, as I understand it, that the War Department, out of the proceeds of the public lands in the arid and semiarid States, shall construct irrigation works.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Not at all. The Senator does not quite comprehend my proposition. My proposition is, I will say to the Senator, that all of the receipts from the sales of the public lands in the arid and semiarid regions of the United States shall be put into a fund to be known as the reclamation fund, to be under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, for further continuing examinations, investigations, reports, etc., and for the further purpose of constructing reservoirs, so that we may do something practical. I said a while ago that up to the present time we have not irrigated a single foot of ground in the United States, notwithstanding the fact that we have appropriated $2,000,000 for investigations.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator's amendment authorize the expenditure of any of this money in the construction of reservoirs without further legislation by Congress?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will hand the amendment to the Senator and he may read it. It first creates this fund for the purpose of examinations, surveys, and the construction of reservoirs. It extends the enterprise of irrigating the public lands of the United States now to the practical purpose which we must meet of constructing reservoirs. You can not irrigate if you do not construct reservoirs.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator that the Government is already engaged in a good deal of contract work in irrigation for Indians and is constructing ditches, reservoirs, etc., in various parts of the United States furnishing water to enable Indians to cultivate their lands.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is true with respect to two or three Indian reservations, I believe, but not on any great scale.

Mr. STEWART. It is not done on any great scale.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My amendment contemplates the use of all the available waters in the arid and semiarid regions of the United States and their devotion to the purposes of irrigation, so that we may reclaim the 75,000,000 acres of arid lands in this country and turn it to some purpose and put population there, and thus enrich the country.

Mr. SPOONER. If I understand the Senator's amendment as I read it, it segregates from the proceeds of the public lands in arid and semiarid States an arid land reclamation fund, and authorizes the use of that fund for the purposes of investigation.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes; for further investigation and the construction of reservoirs; not for irrigating.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not understand that it authorizes the construction of reservoirs.

Mr. TELLER. In line 9.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes; it authorizes construction.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; the construction of reservoirs and other irrigation works.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. "For the storage, diversion, and development of waters."

Mr. SPOONER. Then, the Senator's purpose is that the cost of the construction of reservoirs and the irrigation ditches and irrigation works generally shall be paid out of this fund by the United States?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. By the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Contracts are to be made by the United States?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. By the United States.

Mr. MCCUMBER rose.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. But, Mr. President, I draw the line at this point. When it comes to the distribution of the waters which are gathered in the reservoirs which we propose to construct, that is a matter which belongs to the several States in which the reservoirs may be located. I will hear my colleague.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It strikes me that there is one objection to this amendment as it stands, unless the Senator will consent to an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALDRICH in the chair). The Chair will suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that the question now pending is on the point of order.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I understand the Chair. I also understand that has not scarcely been argued so far in this debate; and inasmuch as it has not, I would like briefly to suggest a matter to my colleague. I suppose that the Senator from North Dakota will admit that all lands in the State of North Dakota are really part and parcel of its territory, and to a certain extent belong to the State of North Dakota; that the lands in the State of Colorado are a part of the domain of Colorado; that while the Government may hold the title in fee to those lands, the State certainly has a residuary interest in them, and such an interest that it would be affected seriously by the turning of the lands over to the Government, the proceeds to be used in any other State than the State in which the land is situated.

It does not seem to me to be either just or proper that we should take the arid lands in the State of Colorado and sell them, and out of the proceeds of those sales construct reservoirs in Wyoming, or some other State or Territory; and it does seem to me, if this should become a law, it ought to provide that the proceeds of the sales of any of the arid lands should be used exclusively in the State in which the sales are made. I hope that the Senator will agree to that in case he desires to press this amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My colleague, I believe, is entirely mistaken in his reading of the proposed amendment. We do not propose to sell the public lands for the benefit of anyone except settlers. We propose, as Senators will understand thoroughly, when we build reservoirs and make it possible to put water upon the lands, that the lands shall be taken up under the homestead law, and they will thus become the property of settlers, and not the property of any State or any individual. They are not to be sold for the purpose of irrigation.

Mr. MCCUMBER. If my colleague will allow me a moment, I agree with him entirely in that, but the point that I desire to make is that the proceeds of the land in the State, when it is sold either to actual settlers or to others, ought to be used in the State from which the proceeds are derived.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is a matter that will be entirely in the hands of Congress hereafter. We could legislate as to that not at this session, but at the next session. All I desire to do now is to establish the principle that the proceeds from the sales of public lands should go to the improvement of the public lands.

I want to go a step further in the line of irrigation. I want now to do something practical. I want to stop appropriating money out of the Treasury of the United States merely to make examinations, reports, and investigations and surveys. I want now to build some reservoirs and to put water upon the land and put the people upon the land to cultivate it. That is the object now. As to the details of this proposition Congress can legislate hereafter. That is my proposition.

Mr. President, I have incorporated in the proposed substitute the very language which has come out of the Committee on Appropriations and as it is now in the bill, so as to provide that 10 per cent of the amount of money put into this proposed fund shall be devoted to further examinations, surveys, and reports, and thus continue the great scheme of irrigation that we commenced some years ago.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I favor absolutely the main idea, the central figure, if you please, of the amendment as offered. I do not agree with the contention that money expended through other Departments is money thrown away. I do not agree with the proposition that if reservoirs are what we want it is impossible to construct them under the War Department.

The plans for reservoir construction made by the War Department, and the estimates and figures for such construction, are complete, practical, and up to date.

At a former time we appropriated $5,000 in the river and harbor bill for the examination of sites and report upon the practicability and desirability of constructing reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage of water, and I hold in my hands, as one of the results, a copy of the report made by the engineer officer of the War Department, Capt. H. M. Chittenden, who conducted the examination.

I want to say, without reflecting upon any other Department, without reflecting upon the Agricultural Department or the Interior Department, that there is ten times as much information in this report on the one subject of reservoir construction for irrigation purposes than has ever been produced by the expenditure of a like amount of money through any other Department. This is because the Engineer Corps of the War Department is equipped with the necessary apparatus, implements, and engineering instruments for making such investigations.

It has the men, trained in engineering work, prepared to make complete and accurate estimates. The Interior Department is equipped to examine and report upon physical conditions of the public lands, the Agricultural Department upon the producing qualities of the soil; and both are valuable factors in the general good sought to be secured for the West and the country generally, but neither of these Departments is at present as well prepared to plan or construct the reservoirs and other hydraulic works as is the War Department.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair dislikes to interfere with the course of the debate, but the Chair will suggest to Senators that the question is on the point of order and not upon the merits of the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is customary in the Senate, I think, to discuss the merits of a question in discussing a point of order, and I believe I have seen the Chair himself indulge in that practice.

Mr. President, it seems to me that something ought to be done, and done at once, by the Government with regard to our arid lands. The Government of the United States owns, west of the Mississippi River, 600,000,000 acres of land in the semiarid region. There is water enough in that country to reclaim 100,000,000 acres of this land. The question which confronts the Government today is this: Shall we sit idle until private parties control all the water? If we do, then they will control all that vast area of 600,000,000 acres of land, and they will control it, without owning it, as absolutely as though they had a deed. The Government can own it. No taxes will be paid upon it, and the people who own the water—the great corporations—if we go on as we are going now, will own the water, and then they will command not only the land that can be watered, but the land that can not. They can graze the great area of the Government land between the water reservoirs and the streams, and thereby own the entire country.

Therefore steps ought to be taken at once to preserve the water for the people, so that small homes can occupy the cultivable areas, so that homes of 40 and 80 acres can be scattered over that vast region rather than have it monopolized by a few great corporations. Homes for 25,000,000 people can be secured in the arid regions of the United States in addition to the population already there if the Government will take steps to reserve the reservoir sites and reserve the water from private appropriation. We have waited too long already, and there is no more time to wait if you would preserve this vast property for the people of the United States.

More people of our race could find homes in that country by the expenditure of half the money we have spent on it already in trying to force, 10,000,000 of the Asiatics to come under our dominion, people of our race, who would inhabit the region west of the Missouri River, consume our products, and make a market for the manufacturers of the East and business for the railroads of the country.

We have tried for years to secure an appropriation for this purpose directly out of the Treasury, and although the Senate has always favored it and we have passed appropriation after appropriation, the other House has always refused. I will give the reason. Every State has two Senators, but the apportionment of Representatives is according to population, and while Idaho is as strong in the Senate as New York, in the other House Idaho has one Representative and New York has thirty-six. The consequence is that through want of knowledge of this great question and its great importance, the other body has always refused to make an appropriation directly out of the Treasury to carry on this work.

Now, we propose that the region itself shall furnish the money, that the proceeds from the sale of the public lands in the arid and semiarid land States shall be devoted to the reclamation of the desert lands of those States. What can be more reasonable and more proper, and what thing can be done that will more conserve the interests of the whole Government, as well as the region in which the lands are located? Why should we not do this, then? Can any argument of force be presented against it when the advantages are so great, the purpose to be accomplished so important?

Mr. President, I think this amendment ought to be adopted. I think if the Chair proposes to rule it out of order he should submit the question to the Senate itself and let it be passed upon on its merits.

The purpose of the bill which the Committee on Public Lands reported to this body was to reserve all the lands that could be irrigated and to allow them to be occupied by homesteaders in tracts not exceeding 80 acres. The detail of that plan is not in this amendment, but the provision allowing the Secretary of the Interior to make rules and regulations to carry it into effect will give him the opportunity to make the provisions to withdraw the land and to accomplish the purpose. Future Congresses can also enlarge the scope of the law and thus accomplish the purpose in that way.

It seems to me that if the people of the East understood this question, if they knew the conditions existing in the Western country, they would be as anxious as we are to secure this legislation. They are seeking markets for their goods; they are looking out across the sea. A market for their goods, a market of a people of a kindred race, a market better, richer than they can secure anywhere in the world, can be made by the passage of this amendment.

I know of no reason, I have heard of no reason given by anybody in these debates, why this should not be done. It seems to me hardly necessary to talk to the Senate in view of the fact that the Senate has gone on record year after year for the last ten years in favor of doing this work, not exactly in this way, but by direct appropriation.

Therefore I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will accept this amendment and let us try again to see if the House will not accept this alternative proposition. Before, we have asked for money direct from the Treasury. Now we ask that the proceeds of the sales of the lands themselves shall be devoted for this purpose. The sales will increase as the water is conserved, reservoirs built, and the land reclaimed, for as fast as we reclaim the land homesteaders will occupy it, and of course we will charge a price equal to the cost of covering it with water; and hence new funds will be furnished to go on with the work and reclaim the rest of the areas that can be reclaimed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I wish to address myself to the merits of this proposition only in case the Chair holds the amendment to be in order. The question is one of great national importance. Nearly two-fifths of the continent is involved in the proper solution of this great question of irrigation and the conservation of the waters for that purpose. I do not wish, however, to consume the time of the Senate before the ruling of the Chair on the question of order.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say only one word upon this question. Of course, I understand that the Chair can only rule one way as respects this amendment.

I want to say in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], that I should withdraw the point of order in order that the amendment may become a part of the bill, that this question is not a new question. It is a question which has been before the two Houses for a great many years. It is a question which is under the special jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Lands of this body, of which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] is chairman. That committee has not brought into this Chamber, so far as I know, any proposition in regard to this subject except one which was introduced by the Senator from North Dakota on the 31st day of January of this year and reported back on the 3d day of February, and which has not been considered in this Chamber.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Committee on Public Lands has reported unanimously twice at this session in favor of this proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; then I stand corrected as respects that matter.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Not only that, but, if the Senator will excuse me, I understand the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands of this body, although they have not made any report, are unanimously in favor of it. The Secretary of the Interior has reported upon it favorably. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is in favor of it. The Director of the Geological Survey is in favor of it. There is no opposition to it anywhere except as developed in this point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall probably be willing to vote with the Senator from North Dakota and other Senators here for a judicious and carefully prepared provision for the purpose of dealing with the question of the irrigation of the arid and semiarid lands, but I protest against allowing a proposition of this character to be placed on an appropriation bill within certainly forty hours of the adjournment of this Congress.

The point of order is made for the purpose of protecting these appropriations from legislation which is under the control of the committees of this body, and which they have had nearly two years to dispose of, coming in now at this late hour without any careful consideration. This amendment is not an amendment proposed by any committee of the body. It is the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to take the place of a long amendment which was submitted a week ago to the Committee on Appriations, embracing legislation——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is word for word the same. It contains the principle and very essence of the bill, and it is word for word with the measure that was before that committee and reported favorably on two occasions.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I make a point of order in good faith, because we have not the time to give this subject consideration on this appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single word on the point of order.

After what has happened during this session in the matter of general legislation on appropriation bills, and in view of some of the discussions and decisions which have been reached in this body, I am not very strongly impressed with the point of order that this is general legislation.

I note with interest the suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the chairman of this great Committee on Appropriations, that the Chair can decide this matter in only one way. Mr. President, there are two ways in which the Chair can decide this matter; and as an Eastern man, an Eastern Senator, who believes that something ought to be done in the way of irrigation of the arid and semiarid regions of this great country, I trust the Chair will see his way clear to take the second way, which he will find in paragraph 2 of Rule XX, which says:

> The Presiding Officer may submit any question of order for the decision of the Senate.

That is the fair way to do in matters where any doubt whatever exists, and it is the way that is frequently done in this body when a great question of this kind is under consideration and when there is a division of opinion in the body.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say about the subject. I am not going to discuss the merits of the proposition. If I should say anything on that point I should say that I believe this amendment ought to be incorporated into law; but I simply rose for the purpose of appealing to the Presiding Officer that he submit this matter to the Senate, and do it under the terms of paragraph 2 of Rule XX, which gives him that right.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I want to say only a word in regard to this point of order, and on the question of general legislation.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the extreme hardship which the representatives of the Western States have been under in securing legislation. I came to this body ten years ago. I have never been able to secure a single piece of important legislation for my portion of the country or any portion of it, on its own merits, in this body, because of the fact that we have not the time to consider it. I have only been able to get legislation for my little State of North Dakota by putting things of this character upon the appropriation bills. I am glad to say I have had several propositions inserted in such bills, against which the point of order has been raised.

When I was a member of the other House twelve years ago, and North Dakota had but one Representative in that body, I secured by unanimous consent the passage of a few bills. At the present time the Representative from North Dakota has been able to secure but two unanimous consents during this session. It is absolutely necessary for the new States throughout the West to put their measures upon the appropriation bills in order to secure their enactment into law. I point to this fact to show you the hardships under which we labor when we secure legislation of any character. I think the Senate ought to consider these facts when they pass upon the point of order which has been raised by the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. The amendment is clearly obnoxious to the first part of clause 3 of Rule XVI. The present occupant of the chair, however, has no pride of opinion on the subject, and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has his remedy. The Chair certainly would not feel hurt if the Senate should otherwise decide.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I would not wound the feelings of the Chair for anything in this world, but I shall appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, Mr. STEWART, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the amendment be read on which we are to decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 77 strike out all of the paragraph beginning in line 3 and insert the following:

That all moneys received from the sale and disposal of public lands in the arid and semiarid regions of the United States, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, excepting moneys set aside by law for educational purposes, shall be, and are hereby, reserved, set aside, and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury, to be known as the "arid land reclamation fund," which fund shall be at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior for the examination, survey, and construction of reservoirs and other irrigation works for the storage, diversion, and development of waters for the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands; that until further provided by Congress not to exceed 10 per cent of the said fund shall be available for continuing examinations and surveys and for gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States and for the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources of said sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN], but I feel at liberty to vote upon this proposition. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. As he is not in the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and so I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], with whom I am paired, has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Kansas has not voted.

Mr. CLARK. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PENROSE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]; but I transfer that pair to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has already given notice of a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PENROSE. I will vote under any circumstances, Mr. President, on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. BATE. I beg to state that my colleague [Mr. TURLEY] is not present to-day. He is paired, however, with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. MONEY. I am paired with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE], who is absent, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEITFELD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], who is unavoidably absent, if present would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN. Upon the statement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] that the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], if present would vote "nay," I feel at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire if the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Virginia has not voted.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CLAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have been asked to pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] on this question. I have been informed that the Senator from Washington, if present, would vote "nay." I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SPOONER. I have a pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY]. He is absent from the Chamber, and I am informed will not return during this session. I am therefore not at liberty to vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote to sustain the ruling of the Chair.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Allison,	Frye,	McComas,	Rawlins,

So the Senate sustained the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are some further committee amendments which were passed over, which, under the order of the Senate, will be first considered.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to let me submit a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, which I think will take but a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield for that purpose.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. THURSTON. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12004) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 51 and 52.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 45 and 56; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "payments," in line 18 of said amendment, insert: "gratuities;" at the end of said amendment, after the word "passed," in line 20, add the following: "Proceedings shall be commenced by petition verified by the attorney for said Indians who may appear for and on their behalf, and said case shall have preference and be advanced on the docket of said court; and if said court shall find that said bands preserved their loyalty to the United States they shall ascertain and state the amount that would be due to said Indians on account of said annuities had said act of Congress of February 16, 1863, not been passed, stating in connection therewith what credits should be charged against said annuities on account of the lands, appropriations, payments, gratuities, or other provisions, as hereinbefore stated;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN M. THURSTON,
O. H. PLATT,
R. F. PETTIGREW,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
JOHN S. LITTLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14018) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will allow the committee amendments to be first acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are three more committee amendments.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood there was but one, and that that had been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; there are three. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over was on page 77, line 10, after the word "been," to strike out "or may hereafter be;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuation of the survey of the public lands that have been designated as forest reserves, $130,000, to be immediately available.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 76, line 1, I move to strike out the word "forty" and insert "sixty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "forty" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the total "$260,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 83, after line 3, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, after line 3, it is proposed to insert:

Education in Alaska: For the industrial and elementary education of children in Alaska, without reference to race, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 81 there was a committee amendment passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 81, after the word "available," in line 15, the committee propose to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to exchange a tract of land containing 60 acres, more or less, east of Nichols avenue and south of Congress Heights, for 60 acres, more or less, adjoining the grounds of the Government Hospital for the Insane on the south, to be selected by said Secretary, the exchange to be made acre for acre.

Mr. LODGE. I asked that that amendment be passed over yesterday, but I am satisfied that is the best arrangement that can be made, and I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to. It is agreed to. Are all of the committee amendments disposed of?

Mr. ALLISON. No; there is still one more committee amendment relating to the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, on page 150.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 150, beginning in line 1, it is proposed to insert——

Mr. BUTLER. If the Secretary will postpone reading for one moment, I rose to the amendment just adopted, but the Chair failed to recognize me and declared it carried. I refer to the amendment on page 81.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the Senator's request?

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to submit an amendment to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize it as an open question.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill to accept the additional amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment on page 81, at the end of line 22, by adding the following after the word "acre:"

And it is furthermore provided, That a roadway 90 feet wide be reserved out of and on the south side of the land so acquired as a public highway from Nichols avenue to the river.

Mr. BUTLER. That refers to Congress Heights. The people there will be bottled up if this land is to be purchased.

Mr. ALLISON. The land is not to be purchased; it is to be exchanged. I will say to the Senator that I will not object to his inserting the amendment, so that it may be investigated afterwards by the conference committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us first dispose of the pending amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The amendments of the committee are disposed of, as I understood.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one more committee amendment which has not been disposed of.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is always one more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Beginning at the top of page 150, it is proposed to insert:

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION, BUFFALO, N. Y.

For the benefit and to the use of the Pan-American Exposition to be held at Buffalo, in the State of New York, from May 1, 1901, to November 1, 1901, $500,000, to be immediately available, said sum to be paid to and be disbursed by the Pan-American Exposition Company under rules and regulations and under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That in the distribution of any moneys that may remain in the treasury of the said Pan-American Exposition Company after the payment of its debts the aforesaid sum so appropriated shall be repaid in full into the Treasury of the United States before any dividend, return, or distribution shall be made to the holders of the capital stock of said corporation: And provided also, That the United States shall not in any circumstances be liable for any debt or obligation of the said corporation or for any payment in addition to the foregoing sum. That as a condition precedent to the payment of this appropriation the Pan-American Exposition Company shall contract to close the gates to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the fair.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I offer as an amendment, to come in after the word "fair," on page 150, line 23, what I send to the desk, headed "Louisiana Purchase Exposition."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 150, line 23, after the word "fair," it is proposed to amend the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations by adding:

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION COMMISSION.

That an exhibit of arts, industries, manufactures, and products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea shall be inaugurated in the year 1903, in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, as herein provided.

That a nonpartisan commission is hereby constituted, to consist of nine commissioners, to be known and designated as the "Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission," who shall be appointed, within thirty days from the passage of this act, by the President of the United States, and who shall also be subject to removal by him. Vacancies in said commission to be filled in the same manner as original appointments.

That the commissioners so appointed shall be called together by the Secretary of State of the United States, in the city of St. Louis, by notice to the commissioners, as soon as convenient after the appointment of said commissioners, and within thirty days thereafter. The said commissioners, at said first meeting, shall organize by the election of their officers, and they may then or thereafter appoint such executive or other committees as may be deemed expedient, and a secretary at a salary of $3,000 per annum; that in addition to the salary of the secretary of said commission there is hereby allowed, out of any money appropriated to aid in carrying forward said exposition, the sum of $10,000 per annum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of defraying the clerical, office, and other necessary expenses of said commission.

That said commission, when fully organized under the provisions of this act, shall appoint two of their number to act in conjunction with a like number appointed by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company to constitute a board of arbitration, to whom all matters of difference arising between said commission and said company concerning the administration, management, or general supervision of said exposition, including all matters of difference arising out of the power given by this act to the said company or to the said national commission to modify or approve any act of the other of the two bodies, shall be referred for determination; and in the case of the failure of said board of arbitration to agree upon such matters as may be so referred, said board of arbitration shall appoint a fifth member thereof; and in case of the failure of the said board to agree upon a fifth member, such fifth member shall then be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. And the decision of said board shall be final in all matters presented to it for consideration and determination.

That said commission be empowered, in its discretion, to accept, for the purposes of the exposition herein authorized, such site as may be selected and offered, and such plans and specifications of buildings for such purpose at the expense of and tendered by the corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, known as "The Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company."

That the allotment of space for exhibitors, classification of exhibits, plan and scope of the exposition, the appointment of all judges and examiners for the exposition, and the awarding of premiums, if any, shall all be done and performed by the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, subject, however, to the approval of the commission created by section 2 of this act; and said commission is hereby authorized to appoint a board of lady managers, of such number and to perform such duties as may be prescribed by said commission, subject, however to the approval of said company. Said board of lady managers may, in the discretion of said commission and corporation, appoint one member of all committees authorized to award prizes for such exhibits as may have been produced in whole or in part by female labor.

That after the plans for said exposition shall be prepared by said company and approved by said commission the rules and regulations of said corporation governing rates for entrance and admission fees, or otherwise affecting the rights, privileges, or interests of the exhibitors, or of the public, shall be fixed or established by said company, subject, however, to the modification or approval of said commission.

That said commission shall provide for the dedication of the buildings of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, in said city of St. Louis, not later than the 30th day of April, 1903, with appropriate ceremonies, and thereafter said exposition shall be opened to visitors at such time as may be designated by said company, subject to the approval of said commission, not later than the 1st day of May, 1903, and shall be closed at such time as the national commission may determine, subject to the approval of said company, but not later than the 1st day of December thereafter.

That whenever the President of the United States shall be notified by the national commission that provision has been made for grounds and buildings for the uses herein provided for, he shall be authorized to make proclamation of the same, through the Department of State, setting forth the time at which said exposition will be held, and the purpose thereof; and he shall communicate to the diplomatic representatives of foreign nations copies thereof, together with such regulations as may be adopted by the commission, for publication in their respective countries; and he shall, in behalf of the Government and the people, invite foreign nations to take part in the said exposition and to appoint representatives thereto.

That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition, upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted free of payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exposition to sell, for delivery at the close thereof, any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition in the exposition buildings or on the grounds, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when sold or withdrawn for consumption in the United States, shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation, and all penalties prescribed by law shall be applied and enforced against such articles and against the person who may be guilty of any illegal sale or withdrawal.

That it shall be the duty of the national commission to make reports monthly to the President of the United States, showing receipts and disbursements and giving a general summary of the financial condition of said exposition, and a final report within six months after the close of the exposition, presenting the results and a full exhibit thereof.

That the national commission hereby authorized shall cease to exist on the 1st day of January, 1905.

That the United States shall not in any manner nor under any circumstances be liable for any of the acts, doings, proceedings, or representations of the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, its officers, agents, or employees, or any of them, or for the service, salaries, labor, or wages of said officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for any subscriptions to the capital stock, or for any certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or obligations of any kind issued by said corporation, or for any debts, liabilities, or expenses of any kind whatever attending such corporation or accruing by reason of the same.

That there shall be exhibited at said exposition by the Government of the United States from its Executive Departments, the Smithsonion Institution, the National Museum, the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, and the Department of Labor such articles and material as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in time of peace and its resources as a war power, tending to demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaptation to the wants of the people; and the Bureau of the American Republics is hereby invited to make an exhibit illustrating the resources and international relations of the American Republics, and space in the United States Government building shall be provided for the purpose of said exhibit; and to secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of such Government exhibit a board, to be known as the United States Government board, shall be created, independent of the commission hereinbefore provided, to be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, installation, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles and material as the heads of the several Executive Departments, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, the Commissioner of Labor, and the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics may, respectively, decide shall be embraced in said Government exhibit.

The President may also designate additional articles for exhibition. Such board shall be composed of one person to be named by the head of each Executive Department, one by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, one by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, one by the Commissioner of Labor, and one by the Director of the Bureau of American Republics. The President shall name one of said persons so detailed as chairman, and the board itself shall appoint its secretary, disbursing officer, and such other officers as it may deem necessary. The members of said board of management, with other officers and employees of the Government who may be detailed to assist them, including officers of the Army and Navy, shall receive no compensation in addition to their regular salaries, but they shall be allowed their actual and necessary traveling expenses, together with a per diem in lieu of subsistence, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, while necessarily absent from their homes engaged upon the business of the board.

Officers of the Army and Navy shall receive this allowance in lieu of the transportation and mileage now allowed by law. Any provision of law which may prohibit the detail of persons in the employ of the United States to other service than that which they customarily perform shall not apply to persons detailed for duty in connection with the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition. Employees of the board not otherwise employed by the Government shall be entitled to such compensation as the board may determine. The disbursing officer shall give bond in the sum of $30,000 for the faithful performance of his duties, said bond to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to said officer from time to time, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, a sum of money from the appropriation hereafter to be made for the Government exhibit, not exceeding at any one time the penalty of his bond, to enable him to pay the expenses of exhibit as authorized by the board of management herein created.

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place on exhibition, in connection with the exhibit of his Department, upon such grounds as shall be allotted for the purpose, one of the life-saving stations authorized to be constructed on the coast of the United States by existing law, and to cause the same to be fully equipped with all apparatus, furniture, and appliances now in use in all life-saving stations in the United States.

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a suitable building or buildings to be erected on the site selected for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition for the Government exhibits, as provided in this act, and he is hereby authorized and directed to contract therefor in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other public buildings of the United States; but the contracts for said building or buildings shall not exceed the sum of $250,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expense of erecting said Government building or buildings hereby authorized. The Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the said building or buildings to be constructed from plans to be approved by said Government board; and he is authorized and required to dispose of such building or buildings, or the material composing the same, at the close of the exposition, giving preference to the city of St. Louis or to the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company to purchase the same at an appraised value, to be ascertained in such manner as he may determine.

That the commissioners appointed by the President under the authority of this act shall receive as compensation for their services and expenses the sum of $5,000 each per annum, the same to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury and deducted from any money appropriated for said exposition.

That no member of said commission or of said Government board, whether an officer or otherwise, shall be personally liable for any debt or obligation which may be created or incurred by the said commission or by the said United States Government board herein authorized.

That whereas the Secretary of the Treasury has certified, under date of February 6, 1901, that the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company has presented to him proof to his satisfaction that it has raised $10,000,000 for and on account of inaugurating and carrying forward an exposition at the city of St. Louis, Mo., in the year 1903, to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory; therefore there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000,000, to aid in carrying forward such exposition, to pay the salaries of the members and secretary of the national commission herein authorized, and such other necessary expenses as may be incurred by said commission in the discharge of its duties in connection with said exposition, and to discharge all other obligations incurred by the Government on account of said exposition, except for the erection of its own buildings and the making and care of its own exhibits at said exposition.

That the money hereby appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and upon vouchers to be approved by him: Provided, That, except for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the national commission, no part of said appropriation shall become available until the sum of $10,000,000 shall have been expended by said company on account of said exposition to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided further, That all sums expended by the Government on account of said exposition, including the salaries and expenses of said national commission, except for the erection of its own buildings and the making and care of its own exhibits at said exposition, shall be limited to and paid out of the appropriation of $5,000,000 herein provided for such purpose.

That there shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States the same proportionate amount of the aid given by the United States as shall be repaid to either the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company or the city of St. Louis: Provided, That this section shall not be taken or construed to give the United States a right to share in the proceeds of said exposition beyond the actual amount appropriated to aid in carrying forward said exposition.

That any bank or trust company located in the city of St. Louis, or State of Missouri, may be designated by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company to conduct a banking office upon the exposition grounds, and if the bank so designated shall be a national bank, upon such designation being approved by the Comptroller of the Currency, said national bank is hereby authorized to open and conduct such office as a branch of the bank, subject to the same restrictions and having the same rights as the bank to which it belongs: Provided, That the branch office authorized hereby, if the same shall be a branch of a national bank, shall not be operated for a period longer than two years, beginning not earlier than July 1, 1902, and closing not later than July 1, 1904.

That no citizen of any foreign country shall be held liable for the infringement of any patent granted by the United States, or of any trade-mark or label registered in the United States, where the act complained of is or shall be performed in connection with the exhibition of any article or thing at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized, at his discretion, to detail for special duty, in connection with the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, such officers of the Army as may be required, to report to the general commanding the Department of Missouri; and the officers thus detailed shall not be subject to loss of pay or rank on account of such detail, nor shall any officer or employee of the United States receive additional pay or compensation because of services connected with the said exposition from the United States or from said exposition.

That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to create any liability of the United States, direct or indirect, for any debt or obligation incurred, nor for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support or liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said commission.

That as a condition precedent to the payment of this appropriation the directors shall contract to close the gates to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the fair.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state to the Senate that the amendment contains the Louisiana Purchase Exposition bill just as it was passed by the Senate, including the Teller amendment, and leaving out the preamble. There is not a change in any shape, manner, or form in it. I hope the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] will accept it as a part of his amendment, which has been embodied in the bill by the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say a word upon this amendment, and also upon the amendment found in the bill. The amendment in the bill relating to the Pan-American Exposition is an amendment that ought to be agreed to; but any Senator may make the point of order upon it, because it is legislation. The committee reported the amendment relative to the Buffalo Exposition with the understanding that if objection was made to it because of its being not in order, it would go out; and I want it understood that in making this report the committee made it with that understanding. I also suppose that will apply to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from New York will accept the amendment.

Mr. DEPEW. I will accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not understand the remark of the Senator from New York.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, there is at the end of this bill an amendment in relation to the Pan-American Exposition. There are three propositions pending in regard to industrial expositions. One is the Buffalo Pan-American Exposition; another is the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and the third is the Charleston Exposition. The Buffalo Exposition carries an appropriation of $500,000; the Louisiana Purchase Exposition carries an appropriation of $5,000,000, and the Charleston Exposition carries an appropriation of $250,000.

The situation in regard to them is this: So far as the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo is concerned, the Secretary of State issued an invitation to the South American Republics to be present and make their exhibits. The letter of the Secretary of State, which I will not detain the Senate by reading, is virtually an invitation, carrying with it the idea, as they understand it, that the Government of the United States is making this exhibit.

Under that invitation the South American Republics have demanded space at Buffalo, which has caused an expenditure exceeding the original estimate, and either they are to have the space which they have been invited by this Government to occupy or else they are to be told that there is not money enough to grant them the facilities to which they have been invited.

Under this provision, $500,000 is asked from the Government, under circumstances which will make it a loan, which will certainly be repaid, for it takes precedence of the contributions to the stock made by the citizens there, and under any calculation that can be made the returns of the exposition will repay the Government this money. The citizens will raise $500,000 more, and that will put the exposition in a position where the pledge of the Government to the South American Republics can be redeemed.

As to the St. Louis Exposition, in the bill which passed last year Congress committed itself in honor to the people of Missouri and the citizens of St. Louis that if they would raise $10,000,000 the Government would loan $5,000,000. St. Louis has raised $11,000,000; and that obligation is an honorable one on the part of the Congress from which it can not escape.

So far as the exposition at Charleston is concerned, they only ask for a Government building to be erected at a cost of $250,000. So, as we stand to-day, we are committed absolutely in honor to the Pan-American Exposition, to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis, and to the exposition to be held at Charleston. I think as a matter of right the appropriations proposed should be agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the St. Louis Exposition appropriation and the Charleston amendment are in conference between the two Houses on the bill that was passed by the Senate. The Charleston amendment was put on that bill by the Senate unanimously. Of course, with this amendment added to this bill, I suppose there will be no further attempt made to reach an agreement in conference. The House voted by a large majority to strike out the Charleston amendment from the bill which passed the Senate. I think the Charleston amendment stands on just as good grounds as the others, and if they all go on the bill I should hope that they will all succeed or all fail.

It does not seem to me fair to strike out one of them. I hope after this Congress that we shall cease the industrial exposition business; but these three are now all before Congress in these different ways. My attention has been brought to it, being on the conference committee on the industrial exposition bill, and it seems to me it would be very unfair for Charleston to be sacrificed, the smallest and quite as meritorious as any of these. I merely make this statement because they are all now open to the point of order. They all go in purely by sufferance, and if they go in on that understanding I do not think one ought to be sacrificed in conference. If they have all got to go, let them all go. If we are going to save them, I do not think the smallest ought to be sacrificed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate, but I desire to say one word about industrial expositions. I do not object to this amendment. I do not object to the addition to it of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, which carries both the St. Louis appropriation and the Charleston appropriation. I think it is quite true that Congress committed itself in honor at the last session to the appropriation of the $5,000,000 for the St. Louis Exposition, and I think that the Senate is certainly committed to the payment of $250,000 for the Charleston Exposition.

But I want to give notice here that if I remain in the Senate I will endeavor to prevent the frequent legislation for the establishment of industrial expositions in this country. We ought to have not more than one in ten years, or at least five years, and we have now three in progress. I do not believe that it is to the benefit of the country, to the benefit of its business, its inventors, its merchants or manufacturers thus to overdo the exposition business. I wish therefore now, in order that I may not, when the next proposition comes up, be accused of being unfair to such a proposition, to give notice that so long as I remain in the Senate, and for several years at least, I will oppose any new projects of this kind.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I have been waiting and hoping that somebody would make the point of order. It is ungracious to do it, but I make the point of order against both the amendment and the amendment to the amendment. Let the legislation be passed upon in conference or in the two remaining days. I believe the point of order is well taken, and I ask the Chair, if it is, so to rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. That amendment has been accepted by the Senator who proposed the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It has not been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee has not accepted it.

Mr. COCKRELL. So far as he can, he has accepted it. I understood the Senator from Iowa to accept it if the other went in.

Mr. LODGE. No, he has not.

Mr. ALLISON. I share very largely the view of the Senator from Massachusetts—that these propositions should go together.

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand that any has been agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Not yet.

Mr. LODGE. They are all subject to the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. The Buffalo Exposition has not yet been agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood the Senator from Maryland to make the point of order against the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and not against the other.

Mr. GALLINGER. He made it against all.

Mr. LODGE. He made it against the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. All have been objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have been trying to get from the document room the reprint of the South Carolina amendment as it passed the Senate. It seems that it has not been printed in the shape in which it went through here, but I suppose the original can be found, and I move it as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment to the amendment, which is as follows:

INTERSTATE AND WEST INDIAN EXPOSITION IN THE CITY OF CHARLESTON, IN THE STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

And be it further enacted, That to encourage the holding of an interstate and West Indian exposition in the city of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, beginning on the 1st day of December, 1901, and closing on the 1st day of June, 1902, all articles that shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition upon which there shall be a tariff or custom duty shall be admitted free of payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exposition to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported for or actually on exhibition in the exposition buildings or on the grounds, subject to such regulation for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption in the United States shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation, and all penalties prescribed by law shall be applied and enforced against the persons who may be guilty of any illegal sale or withdrawal: And provided further, That all necessary expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this section, including salaries of customs officials in charge of imported articles, shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States by the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition Company, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

That there shall be exhibited at said exposition by the Government of the United States, from its Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, the Department of Labor, and the Bureau of the American Republics, the islands of Porto Rico and Cuba and the Philippines, such articles and material as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in time of peace and its resources as a war power, and its relations to other American Republics, tending to demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaptation to the wants of the people. And to secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of such Government exhibit a board of management shall be created, to be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, safe keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles and materials as the heads of the several Departments and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, the Commissioner of Labor, and the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics may, respectively, decide shall be embraced in said Government exhibit. The President may also designate additional articles for exhibition. Such board shall be composed of one person to be named by the head of each Executive Department, one by the head of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum, one by the head of the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, one by the Commissioner of Labor, one by the Director of the Bureau of the American Republics, one by the governor of Porto Rico, and one by the governor-general of Cuba.

The President shall name one of said persons so detailed as chairman, and the board itself shall appoint its secretary, disbursing officer, and such other officers as it may deem necessary. The members of said board of management, with other officers and employees of the Government who may be detailed to assist them, including officers of the Army and Navy, shall receive no compensation in addition to their regular salaries, but they shall be allowed their actual and necessary traveling expenses, together with a per diem in lieu of subsistence, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, while necessarily absent from their homes engaged upon the business of the board. Officers of the Army and Navy shall receive this allowance in lieu of the transportation and mileage now allowed by law. Any provision of law which may prohibit the detail of persons in the employ of the United States to other service than that which they customarily perform shall not apply to persons detailed for duty in connection with the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition.

Employees of the board not otherwise employed by the Government shall be entitled to such compensation as the board may determine. The disbursing officer shall give bond in the sum of $20,000 for the faithful performance of his duties, said bond to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to said officer from time to time, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, a sum of money from the appropriation for the Government exhibit, not exceeding at any one time three-fourths of the penalty of his bond, to enable him to pay the expenses of said exhibit as authorized by the board of management herein created.

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a suitable building or buildings to be erected on the site selected for the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition for the Government exhibits from plans to be approved by the board, and he is hereby authorized and directed to contract therefor in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other public buildings of the United States, but the contract for said building or buildings shall not exceed the sum of $75,000. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to dispose of such building or buildings, or the material composing the same, at the close of the exposition, giving preference to the city of Charleston or to the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition Company to purchase the same at an appraised value to be ascertained in such manner as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury.

That the United States shall not be liable on account of said exposition for any expense incident to or growing out of same, except for the construction of the building or buildings hereinbefore provided for, and for the purpose of paying the expense of selection, preparation, purchase, installation, transportation, care, custody, and safe return of exhibits by the Government, for the employment of proper persons as officers and assistants by the board of management created by this act, and for their expenses, and for the maintenance of the said building or buildings, and other contingent expenses, to be approved by the chairman of the board of management, or, in the event of his absence or disability, by such other officer as the board may designate, and the Secretary of the Treasury upon itemized accounts and vouchers; and the total cost of said building or buildings shall not exceed the sum of $75,000; nor shall the expenses of said Government exhibit for each and every other purpose connected therewith, including transportation, exceed the sum of $175,000, amounting in all to not exceeding the sum of $250,000, which said sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be disbursed by the board of management hereinbefore created, of which not exceeding the sum of $10,000 shall be expended for clerical service: Provided, That no liability against the Government shall be incurred, and no expenditure of money under this act shall be made, until the officers of said exposition shall have furnished the Secretary of the Treasury proofs to his satisfaction that there has been obtained by said exposition corporation subscriptions of stock in good faith, contributions, donations, or appropriations from all sources for the purpose of said exposition a sum aggregating not less than $250,000.

SEC. 30. That medals with appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions commemorative of said South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition, and of the awards to be made to the exhibitors thereat, shall be prepared at some mint of the United States for the board of directors thereof, subject to the provisions of fifty-second section of the coinage act of 1866, upon the payment of a sum not less than the cost thereof; and all the provisions, whether penal or otherwise, of said coinage act against the counterfeiting or imitating of coins of the United States shall apply to the medals struck and issued under this act.

SEC. 31. That the United States shall not in any manner nor under any circumstances be liable for any acts or doings of said South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition Association, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for service, salaries, labor, or wages of said officers, agents, servants, or employees, or any of them, or for any subscriptions to the capital stock, or for any certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or obligations of any kind issued by said corporation, or for any debts, liabilities, or expenses of any kind whatever attending such corporation, or accruing by reason of the same.

That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to create any liability of the United States, direct or indirect, for any debt or obligation incurred, nor for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support of liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said commission in excess of appropriations made by Congress therefor.

That the act of Congress approved February 23, 1885, prohibiting the importation of foreigners under contract to perform labor, and the acts of Congress prohibiting the coming of Chinese persons into the United States and the acts amendatory of these acts shall not be construed, nor shall anything therein operate to prevent, hinder, or in anywise restrict any foreign exhibitor or citizen of a foreign nation, or the holder who is a citizen of a foreign nation, of any concession or privilege from the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition Company, of Charleston, S. C., from bringing into the United States, under contract, such mechanics, artisans, or other employees, natives of their respective foreign countries, as they or any of them may deem necessary for the purpose of making preparations for installing or constructing any business authorized or permitted under or by virtue of or pertaining to any concession or privilege which may have been granted by the South Carolina Interstate and West Indian Exposition Company, of Charleston, S. C., in connection with such exposition: Provided, however, That no alien shall, by virtue of this act, enter the United States under contract to perform labor except by express permission, naming such alien, of the Secretary of the Treasury, and any such alien who may remain in the United States for more than one year after the close of said exposition shall thereafter be subject to all the processes and penalties applicable to aliens coming in violation of the alien contract labor law aforesaid.

That the appropriation herein made of $250,000 in all shall take effect and become available immediately upon the passage of this act.

That as a condition precedent to the payment of this appropriation the directors shall contract to close the gates to visitors on Sundays during the whole duration of the fair.

Mr. TILLMAN. We can save time in regard to reading it. This bill has already passed the Senate as a separate bill, and it has passed the Senate as an amendment to the St. Louis bill. It is identical in its terms with the original law which was passed last year for a Government exhibit at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo. Therefore, unless Senators wish merely to have read what has been read twice, there is no need to do more than to let the Charleston Exposition bill be tacked onto the St. Louis Exposition bill, which has already been tacked onto the Buffalo bill.

Mr. CARTER. Ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCOMAS. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Maryland state his point of order?

Mr. McCOMAS. It is that it is not in order, as being new legislation, general legislation on this appropriation bill, and not relevant.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary suggestion about the point of order. Is it general legislation—for as to new legislation, everything is new legislation on the bill—to provide for the free introduction of certain goods from abroad, under certain conditions to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. McCOMAS. It is general legislation, which is my point.

Mr. HOAR. My suggestion is that it is not.

Mr. VEST. We can not hear anything.

Mr. DEPEW. We can not hear.

Mr. VEST. Has the amendment been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has.

Mr. VEST. This is a similar amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been adopted.

Mr. CULLOM. All three have been agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, on the point of order I desire to say a word. Rule XVI provides:

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

Now, does not that make it in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order raised was not with respect to either of those propositions, but that it was general legislation. There is another rule which provides that no general legislation whatever shall be received to an appropriation bill; and that is not cured by having been reported by a committee and referred to a committee, nor is it cured by having been previously passed by the Senate. It is simply the question whether this is general legislation.

Mr. FORAKER. The Chair correctly states the question. How can it be said that it is general legislation when it refers to a specific matter and makes a specific provision for one specific transaction?

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me the irrigation amendment was rather specific.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does not the fact that it is an appropriation already passed by the Senate, so far as St. Louis and Charleston are concerned, take it out of the category of general legislation?

Mr. FORAKER. I think clearly it does. It does not seem to me it is general legislation, within the meaning of that term.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to submit to the Chair, in view of what has been said by the Senator from Ohio, that it is not an appropriation of public money which simply provides that some foreign article, which otherwise would not come in at all, so that the revenues would not be increased by it, may come in without the payment of duty. It certainly seems to me, with great respect, that that is not an appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts that this is not general legislation?

Mr. HOAR. I understood the point of order was confined simply to the proposition about the articles coming in free of duty.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague now tells me there is a sum of money appropriated, which is embraced in the point of order. It seems to me very clearly that it is not general legislation. Whether it carries an appropriation under the rule suggested by the Senator from Connecticut I express no opinion whatever.

Mr. VEST. I call attention to the fact that this appropriation is to carry out the provisions of existing law. Both Houses of Congress made a solemn agreement with the city of St. Louis that if $10,000,000 should be raised there then the Government would advance $5,000,000. That is the law enacted by both Houses of Congress and approved by the President, in the sundry civil act of last session.

Now, in regard to the other appropriations, without being at all invidious, and I am not at all opposed to either of them, the Charleston Exposition appropriation has only passed one House, the Senate. It has not passed the House of Representatives. The Buffalo Exposition appropriation has not passed either House. I call the attention of the Senate to the additional fact that this can not be general legislation, because it is a specific appropriation for a specific purpose. It can not be said to be general legislation in any sense of the term.

Mr. FORAKER. When I made the point a moment ago that this is not general legislation and could not be because it is specific, having reference to a special matter, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] interrupted to say that the amendment voted on a moment ago, offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], was quite as specific as this. I do not know of anything better to illustrate the difference between special legislation and general legislation than just what has just been suggested.

The amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota provides for a general law which is to continue in force and under which they are to operate until Congress shall otherwise provide. It is as much general legislation as any statute could possibly be, whereas this, as the Senator from Missouri has just said, is merely a special provision having reference to a special matter, and not in any sense whatever general legislation. The difference between general and special legislation is so manifest and the distinction is here so easily drawn that it seems to me unnecessary to touch upon it. Therefore I think the point of order is not well taken that this is general legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no desire to go into argument about general and special legislation. I have been impressed very profoundly with the fact during this session of Congress that it is always special legislation when we want to put a matter of this kind into an appropriation bill and general legislation when we want to rule it out.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will ask whether it was special legislation when we put in the amendment to the Army appropriation bill? Was that special or general legislation?

Mr. FORAKER. I think it was general.

Mr. LINDSAY. Then the Senate has decided that general legislation may be put on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] ought to be open to one appeal. All of us can understand that a man's rugged sense of duty would require him to make a point of order against appropriations of public money for expositions in the different States, but we seem to have reached a parliamentary situation here where large appropriations for two expositions have passed the Senate and are now in conference upon another bill between the two Houses, $5,000,000 for St. Louis and $250,000 for Charleston, while the Pan-American appropriation of $500,000 comes in upon this bill only.

If they all go out upon the point of order, as all will, if any does, then it remains true that the five million for St. Louis and the $250,000 for Charleston may still become the law, and the particularly meritorious appropriation for Buffalo of $500,000 goes out of the bill, the one appropriation of the three where the money is to be absolutely refunded, every dollar of it, to the Government.

I hope the Senator from Maryland will not bar the consideration of Buffalo and its $500,000, when the effect of it may be that notwithstanding this point of order, and notwithstanding the effect upon this bill, if the Chair sustains it, we may yet have the appropriation for St. Louis and Charleston, notwithstanding that the other goes out.

Mr. MCCOMAS. The pending bill has grown to be very large, and this objection is ungracious and difficult to make. I waited for others to make it. The most meritorious case is that of Buffalo, and in some fashion, if it can be passed, it would be different; but these amendments on this appropriation bill, under the most familiar rule, propose general legislation. I can not conceive of three instances more directly out of order than these. I do not care to argue the proposition. I put it to the experience of the Chair and to the record of the rulings of the Chair. If it is irregular and out of order, let the Chair say so. If it be not, let the Chair say so.

I do not desire to discuss it. Above all, I would be glad to meet the view of the Senator from Colorado and those who take the same position, but if I make the point of order, and they are all of the same kind, I ought to make the point apply to all, and I appeal to the Chair to rule if I be right or wrong as to this being general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Chair hear a suggestion on the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The rule against general legislation, as it is termed, was directed or intended to be directed against general legislation or legislation which had no reference to an appropriation. The power of appropriation remains, and limitations upon appropriations, directing how a specific appropriation shall be expended, are in order. Now it is in order to move to add to the bill an appropriation to carry out some bill which has already passed the Senate, and here is an appropriation, and all these other long provisions are not general legislation under the rule, I submit. They are merely limitations and directions as to an appropriation which is in order, because it has passed the Senate at this same session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that as to these three amendments, or two amendments at any rate, for the St. Louis Exposition and the Charleston Exposition, the appropriation is in order, because in both instances a bill has already passed the Senate making the appropriation, and that the other provisions of those two amendments are simply instructions and limitations upon the expenditure of the money arpropriated. That would make those two in order. The Chair is inclined, recognizing the very evident disposition of the Senate, to rule this entire amendment as amended in order. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment as amended?

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, after line 17, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Colorado Cliff Dwelling Association is hereby authorized to lease from the Wi minuchi Ute tribe of Indians, for a period of ten years, all that tract of land known as the Mesa Verde, situated in the county of Montezuma, in the State of Colorado, said tract of land to be described by metes and bounds, and the lease to include and cover the ruins and prehistoric remains situated therein; and said Colorado Cliff Dwelling Association to have the right to use and occupy said tract of land for the purpose of preserving and controlling said ruins and remains and protecting them from depredation.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Colorado whether he proposes to ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the amendment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask unanimous consent, and I can in a word explain to the Senate the situation.

For some years an association of patriotic and public-spirited women in Colorado have endeavored to preserve the cliff-dwelling ruins which exist in the southwestern portion of the State. Attempts have been made through the Interior Department and the Indian Bureau to accomplish this purpose. Everywhere there has been the hearty cooperation of the Administration; but upon the survey it has been ascertained that the principal seat of these ruins is within an Indian reservation.

They are rapidly being denuded of their treasures. Relic hunters and tourists, from time to time, chip off and carry away the remnants of these wonderful dwellers and the evidences of their occupancy of these almost impassable cliffs. So the Department has agreed with the association, and it would be glad to do so, to lease them for a substantial price—something like $300 a year—the Indians consenting, the few acres that contain these dwellings, to be set apart to this association, which proposes to police them and to protect them. This amendment, at the close of the present session, is intruded upon the pending bill solely that the Interior Department may carry out a measure which it desires to execute and to carry out, but which it has not the direct authority of law to do.

Therefore I ask unanimous consent that, as a matter of form, it may go upon this bill. It carries no money. It will bring money to the Government. It is only in the public interest. It is to further no private interest of any sort.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that this amendment may be made to the pending bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the chairman of the committee to accept an amendment which I will send to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to have constructed a revenue cutter for use in the waters of the Territory of Hawaii, at a cost not to exceed $200,000, and the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be made immediately available, for such purpose.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. We do not want to appropriate $250,000 for this purpose.

Mr. CULLOM. It is $200,000 for a revenue cutter. I reduced it $50,000. It is very much needed, and the Secretary of the Treasury recommends the provision in order to protect that coast from Chinamen and every other class of people who are trying to get into this country through the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the amendment? I did not catch it.

Mr. CULLOM. It provides for a revenue cutter for the Hawaiian Islands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will again be stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is there an estimate for it?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know whether there is or not, except that there is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he says:

In my opinion it is essential that a vessel shall be provided for duty in those waters, and I therefore recommend the adoption of the amendment.

Which has just been read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall not make the point of order against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I have another amendment which I should like to submit. I move to insert, after line 7, on page 74, what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 74, after line 7, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of General Land Office to examine and report on the public lands of the Territory of Hawaii, $10,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I am constrained to make the point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Iowa state his point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. My point is that it is not estimated for.

Mr. CULLOM. Here is a long letter from the Commissioner of the Land Office urging very strongly that it be adopted, so that they can dispose of the lands there at some time or other.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. CULLOM. February 13.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the amendment been favorably reported from any standing committee?

Mr. ALLISON. Not that I know of.

Mr. CULLOM. It has.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What committee?

Mr. CULLOM. It went to the Committee on Public Lands, I am told, and was reported favorably.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not recall any provision of that kind being reported. I desire to say, if the Senator from Illinois will allow me, that while I believe there should be an investigation of the public-land question of Hawaii, because I think the public lands there are going to be frittered away, yet I do not think it ought to be done as proposed by the Senator from Illinois. I think a committee of this body and a committee of the other body should go there and make an impartial investigation. The Commissioner of the General Land Office can not himself go there. He will probably appoint somebody to go there, and we do not know whether or not they are the persons who ought to go and make this examination.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," is hereby amended so that the ten years' period within which any State shall cause the lands applied for under said act to be irrigated and reclaimed, as provided in said section as amended by the act of June 11, 1896, shall begin to run from the date of approval by the Secretary of the Interior of the State's application for the segregation of such lands; and if the State fails within said ten years to cause the whole or any part of the lands so segregated to be so irrigated and reclaimed, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, continue said segregation for a period of not exceeding five years, or may, in his discretion, restore such lands to the public domain.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the adoption of the amendment. The amendment may be open to a point of order, but the substance of it is to extend the time for proofs of reclamation of certain lands that were to be irrigated under legislation which was embraced originally in the sundry civil appropriation act and later was amended in a sundry civil bill. The amendment provides that the ten years shall extend from the date of segregation rather than from the date of the original act.

I submit on this subject a communication from the honorable Secretary of the Interior, which I ask leave to print:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 9, 1901.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS,
United States Senate.

SIR: Under your reference I have considered the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. WARREN to the sundry civil bill, which amendment relates to the million-acre desert-land grant made to certain States in the arid region by section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894 (28 Stat., 372, 422). The granting act has been amended in an important particular by the act of June 11, 1896 (29 Stat., 413, 434; see 26 L. D., 74). The purpose of the amendment now proposed is manifestly a good one—namely, the extension of the time within which the irrigation and reclamation of lands segregated and intended to be granted shall be accomplished.

This grant was a departure from former legislation, and therefore in a measure experimental. In actual experience it has been attended with good results, but the great work involved in the irrigation and reclamation of such large quantities of land and the necessity of obtaining the requisite capital or the necessary combination of individual labor have been found to usually require the maximum time limited for the completion of the work—namely, "within ten years next after the passage of this act" (August 18, 1894). The effect of this limitation is that where arid lands were segregated soon after the passage of the act practically the full period of ten years could be employed in their irrigation and reclamation; but now, more than six years having elapsed, sufficient time does not remain within which lands segregated at this time could be irrigated and reclaimed.

The result is that the States will not receive the full quota of the lands intended to be granted, nor will the purposes of the act be anything like accomplished unless the limitation with respect to time be so changed that the period of ten years shall commence to run in each instance from the date of the segregation instead of from the date of the original granting act. To avoid any possible confusion in the matter, and to give full effect to the purpose underlying the amendment now proposed, I have caused to be drawn, and herewith submit, a substitute amendment, which I commend to your favorable consideration.

If this amendment is adopted the result will be that each State affected can from time to time obtain segregations of arid lands under this grant until the full amount of 1,000,000 acres is obtained, and with respect to each segregation there will be a full period of ten years allowed within which to complete the work of irrigation and reclamation. The substituted amendment also contemplates that there may be instances in which a failure to complete the work within the prescribed time will nevertheless be attended with such efforts and equities that an additional period should be allowed, and in this view it is provided that in case of such default the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may continue the segregation for not exceeding five years, or may restore the lands to the public domain.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be made to the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is accepted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I submit an amendment that I trust will go in the bill. For the purpose of possibly avoiding some debate, I will say that it has passed the Senate and has been reported favorably by another standing committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 13, page 149, insert:

That there be printed 6,000 copies of the document known as Messages and Papers of the Presidents, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, the remainder, if any, to be held by the superintendent of documents, subject to the future action of Congress; and an edition of 10,000 copies shall be printed, to be held by the superintendent of documents and by him sold at the actual cost of publication.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that he omit the latter part of that amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that that is the most important part of it. Here are gentlemen going over the country imposing upon the people of this country by selling a public document for $35 that can be published for about nine or ten dollars, and they have brought themselves into such disrepute that a judge, Justice Childs, of the supreme court of the State of New York said the other day:

The plain purpose of the person who originated this system of obtaining subscribers for these books was to defraud the public. Such a scheme, permeated with fraud from start to finish, should not be permitted by sanction of any court to succeed.

If it ought not to be permitted by a court, it ought not to be permitted by the Congress of the United States, under whose sanction and by whose authority this publication was first issued.

Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate. I have a mass of documents here which show that a gigantic fraud is being perpetrated upon the people of this country. If any Senator will take the trouble to read an article in the New York Sun of this very day it seems to me that he will see the importance of the Government publishing an edition of this book, which it will sell to the people of the country at cost price, and not permit this fraud to continue any longer which is being perpetrated upon the people and upon the Congress.

Mr. CHANDLER. How recent are the transactions stated in the Sun, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. GALLINGER. Very recent.

Mr. CHANDLER. How recent?

Mr. GALLINGER. Within a very few days, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The reason why I made the suggestion is that an edition of 10,000 copies will not go very far to ameliorate the conditions now stated by him.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be a starter.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator says, it will be a starter to a very large addition hereafter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw any suggestion of amendment and will allow it to be passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: I want to make a request. In the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], passed a few moments ago, for the publication of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents, the allotment is 2,000 to Senators and 4,000 to the members of the House. That is not sufficient. I ask unanimous consent that 3,000 may be inserted for the Senate and 6,000 for the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope that may be done, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will venture to express the hope, furthermore, that the conferees on the part of the Senate will see that this amendment remains in the bill, if they can do so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to amend the bill by inserting at the proper place what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add to the bill as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to determine the value of certain condemned buildings formerly located on Hot Springs Mountain Reservation, and on the east side of Valley street, in the city of Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas, which buildings were condemned by the Hot Springs Commission, and proof of value taken by said commission, under authority of law, and which were destroyed by fire on the night of the 5th day of March, 1877, before said commission had issued certificates for the value thereof, as they were authorized and directed, and did afterwards do for buildings similarly situated, but not burned. That the value of each building so condemned and burned shall be determined by the Secretary from the petitions and evidence filed before said commission by the owners and occupiers thereof, by order of said commission, and now on file in the Interior Department, or such other evidence as the claimants may file, and after such investigation as he may think proper.

That a sum of money sufficient to pay for such investigation and the claims so ascertained and fixed by the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to such person or persons, claimants, their executors, administrators, the sum or sums of money equal to the values so as aforesaid found by him.

That the Secretary of the Interior is required to report to Congress the results of his action under the foregoing section.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order upon this amendment that it is not estimated for and, as I understand the reading, it is a claim. But in addition to that, it is now under consideration by the Committee on Appropriations on the deficiency appropriation bill, and has been partially rejected, I understand.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, this provision has passed the Senate at this session. It has been reported favorably from a standing committee. It simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to adjust these claims, part of which have been already paid. By reason of the fact that the Hot Springs commissioners failed to issue certificates for the buildings that were burned, as they did for the buildings that were not burned, the Secretary of the Interior did not feel himself authorized to pay these claims, and it is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to pay these just as all the others have been paid. That is the purpose of this amendment, and I do not think it is in any sense amenable to a point of order. Certainly these claims ought to be paid.

This matter has been standing for many years, and the only reason why it has not been settled is because the Secretary of the Interior has not considered himself authorized by the statute to pay these claims because the certificates were not issued by the Hot Springs Commission. That is the only trouble.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. While the Chair is examining the amendment, will the Senator state just what it is that he is seeking pay for? I suppose he already stated it, but I did not hear him.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. When the Hot Springs Commission was appointed by Congress years ago and went to Hot Springs with authority to make certain changes in the town, they were authorized to condemn buildings where it was necessary for it to be done to carry out the purposes. The commission condemned a number of buildings and took possession of them on the part of the Government, and rented them and collected the rent. While this was being done they ordered testimony to be taken as to the value of all these buildings. The testimony was taken. It was all in the hands of the commission. They had possession of the buildings; they were collecting rent on the buildings; and a fire broke out before certificates were issued, and a part of the buildings were burned. The commission did not issue certificates to the owners of the buildings that were burned, but did issue certificates for all the buildings that were still standing, when they should have issued certificates for all the buildings alike.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Why did they not?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It was simply a technical misunderstanding on their part. There was no reason given except that they supposed that as the buildings were burned, they ought not to issue the certificates. That is what they ought to have done. This amendment simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to pay upon the testimony taken by them and at the time in the same way that other buildings were paid for.

Now, the Government had these buildings, had possession of the buildings, collected the rent on them, which rent went into the Treasury of the United States, and these people are entitled to the same pay as the others. They are a number of small claimants. They can not employ attorneys to help them here. The total amount is only about $30,000, or a little over, to be divided among fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five people, and the Secretary of the Interior ought to have the right to issue the certificates as the commission would have done at the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was this bill passed at the present session of Congress?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know that it was passed at this session. It was passed during this Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule is that it must be passed during the present session.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment I submitted shows the date at which it was passed; I do not remember the date. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not insist on a point of order. It would do an injustice to a number of people who are entitled to this money at the hands of the Government. The amendment simply authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to do what that commission should have done at the time.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SCOTT. Were the buildings that were burned insured; and if so, who collected the insurance?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know that they were insured at all. I presume they were not. The Government had condemned them, had possession of them, was renting them and collecting the rent. When they were burned they were in the hands of the Government. For the other buildings that were not burned the commissioners issued certificates, and the money was paid. The only difficulty in this case was that the commissioners did not issue the certificates for the buildings that were burned when the testimony was taken.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that if these people, or any of them, collected any insurance the Secretary of the Interior will look out for that and will not issue certificates under the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That, of course, will be true.

Mr. COCKRELL. The individuals could not have insured it; it was not their property.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. They did not have it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair finds that the bill was passed at the last session and not at the present session. It was passed April 26, 1900. The Chair is obliged to sustain the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas subsequently said: In view of the hardship done to a number of small claimants in the matter that I have just stated to the Senate, which must appeal to the sense of fairness of every American citizen, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I had read a few minutes ago may be incorporated in this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by him a few moments ago may be made to the pending bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SCOTT. At the bottom of page 88, after the word "dollars," line 26, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 88, after line 26, insert:

That the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds is hereby authorized to set apart a sufficient portion of Rawlins Park, in the District of Columbia, for the site of a memorial building to be erected by the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and to be used only for such purposes of said society as are authorized by its charter.

Mr. ALLISON. Did the Senator from West Virginia ask unanimous consent to have the amendment inserted in the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He did not.

Mr. BURROWS. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that it is an amendment embodying the substance of a bill which has already passed the Senate, which had been reported in the first instance by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. This amendment was offered by me as a proposed amendment to this bill and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and it was reported favorably by that committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall raise a point of order if the amendment is proposed. I am not certain whether it is in order or out of order under the statement of the Senator, but if unanimous consent is asked I shall not object.

Mr. SCOTT. Then I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be inserted in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that this amendment may be adopted. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move to insert after the word "districts," in line 16, page 72, the following words:

And the examination of surveying returns in the General Land Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "districts," line 16, page 72, it is proposed to insert:

And the examination of surveying returns in the General Land Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move an amendment which passed the Senate at a prior Congress, has the entire approbation of the Committee on Appropriations, I understand, and will not be objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Where will the Senator have the amendment inserted?

Mr. HOAR. At the foot of page 149.

The SECRETARY. At the foot of page 149 insert:

That sections Nos. 2529 and 2544 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby so amended that there shall be one appraiser of merchandise at each of said ports instead of two, as now provided by law.

The salary of said appraisers shall be $4,000 each per annum, instead of $3,000 each, as now established by law.

Mr. SPOONER. The reference to the sections does not explain the amendment. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts to explain it.

Mr. HOAR. This matter was fully stated to the Senate in the last Congress. It had the unanimous approbation of the Committee on Appropriations and of the Senate. There are two appraisers of merchandise for the port of Boston authorized by law, at $3,000 apiece. This amendment substitutes one appraiser and increases his salary to $4,000. So it is a saving to the Government in this respect of $2,000 a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAFFERY. I offer an amendment to come in on page 59, after line 25.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, after line 25, insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to state an account with Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad and Steamship Company for transporting the United States mails over postal routes Nos. 9006 and 14903 during the period between July 1, 1878, and February 21, 1882, both inclusive, in which he shall credit said company with nonland grant rates over that portion of its route between New Orleans and Morgan City, La., in accordance with the decision of the Court of Claims in case No. 1867, and shall pay to said company, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as shall remain due upon such adjustment.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt that is a proper claim to be paid, but it is impossible to put all such provisions upon this bill. So I am constrained to raise the point of order that there is legislation in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, if you will permit me to make a statement about the point of order, this claim arises out of a ruling of the Postmaster-General in withholding 20 per cent of the pay of this railroad on the ground that it was a land grant railroad. That matter was taken before the Court of Claims and the Court of Claims decided that the claimant company was not a land-grant railroad.

Now, Mr. President, the money is held in the Treasury of the United States in point of fact as in a trusteeship for this company. The claim is not only authorized by a report of the Committee on Claims favorably upon an amendment identical to this one to the sundry civil bill, but it has been sustained by the Court of Claims and it is now based upon the existing law. This money is unduly held in the Treasury, and is there to the credit of this railroad company. It occurs to me that the law authorizes the Postmaster-General to contract with this company, as any other company, for pay. The pay is withheld on an error, and you only execute existing law by paying the amount so withheld.

The amount is only 20 per cent of the original claim, and I am told by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who reported the claim favorably, that it does not amount to more than some $7,500. It is a just claim. The amendment certainly is not amenable to the point of order, and the claim ought to be paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is obliged to sustain the point of order.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the consideration of an amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana offers an amendment and asks unanimous consent for its insertion.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It is to be inserted at page 131, after the word "judicial," in line 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "judicial," line 5, page 131, insert:

That the commissioners heretofore appointed in pursuance of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1897, to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States, be, and they are hereby, directed to revise and codify, in accordance with the terms and provisions of said act and the acts supplementary thereto, all laws of the United States of a permanent and general nature in force at the time when the same shall be reported.

That in performing this duty the said commissioners shall bring together all statutes and parts of statutes relating to the same subjects, shall emit redundant and obsolete enactments, and shall make such alterations as may be necessary to reconcile the contradictions, supply the omissions, and amend the imperfections of the original text; and they may propose and embody in such revision changes in the substance of existing law; but all such changes shall be clearly set forth in an accompanying report, which shall briefly explain the reasons for the same.

SEC. 3. That the said commissioners shall arrange such revision under titles, chapters, and sections, or other suitable divisions and subdivisions, with head notes briefly expressive of the matter contained in such division, and with marginal notes so drawn as to point to the contents of the text, and with references to the original text from which each section is compiled, and to the decisions of the courts of the United States explaining or construing the same, and they shall provide by an index for an easy reference to every portion of such revision.

SEC. 4. That when the commissioners have completed such revision in accordance herewith, they shall cause a copy of the same, in print, to be submitted to Congress, that the statutes so revised and codified may be reenacted if Congress shall so determine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that this amendment may be adopted as an amendment to the pending bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, subject to the approval of Congress, if such rights are acquired by contract, or by the Senate, if such rights are acquired by treaty for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movement of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean.

And in substantial accordance with the subsisting conventions with Nicaragua and Costa Rico in the words following, the agreement with each of said States being in identical terms:

Proctocol of an agreement between the Governments of the United States and of Costa Rica in regard to future negotiations for the construction of an interoceanic canal by way of Lake Nicaragua.

It is agreed between the two Governments that when the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire control of such portion of the territory now belonging to Costa Rica as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and protect a canal of depth and capacity sufficient for the passage of vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from a point near San Juan del Norte, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean, they mutually engage to enter into negotiations with each other to settle the plan and the agreements in detail found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal. And the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated for these purposes, to be immediately available.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator from Iowa propose to raise the question of order?

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to say that I think this amendment is clearly not in order. It is general legislation; and I am compelled to make that point, although I am a friend of the Nicaragua Canal.

Mr. MORGAN. I merely wish to say a few words upon the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, all the money that has been appropriated for canal purposes by the Government of the United States heretofore has been on appropriation bills—some on the sundry civil bill, and some on the river and harbor bill. The first appropriation was made in the Fifty-fifth Congress in the following language:

For the purpose of ascertaining the feasibility, permanence, and cost of the construction and completion of the Nicaragua Canal by the route contemplated and provided for by an act which passed the Senate January 28, 1895, entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua,' approved February 20, 1889," $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

That was the so-called Ludlow Commission. That commission went out and made a survey under this act of Congress in pursuance of a policy established by the Government of the United States in the prior acts chartering the Maritime Canal Company. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, Congress enacted:

Nicaragua Canal Commission: To continue the surveys and examinations authorized by the act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," into the proper route, the feasibility and cost of construction of the Nicaragua Canal, with the view of making complete plans for the entire work of construction of such canal as therein provided, $150,000; and to carry out this purpose the President of the United States is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commission to consist of 1 engineer from the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, 1 officer of the Navy, who may be taken from the active or retired lists, and 1 engineer from civil life, said commission to have all the powers and duties conferred upon the commission provided for in said act.

This was the first Walker commission. Both of those commissions went into the field and made their reports. Before that time the Government of the United States had also, through the Secretary of the Navy, caused a survey to be made by Menocal and others of this canal, at a cost of $400,000 or $500,000, as I understand.

At the next session of Congress came on the Walker commission, and the following provision was made under the act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1899:

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States of America be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to make full and complete investigation of the Isthmus of Panama with a view to the construction of a canal by the United States across the same to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; that the President is authorized to make investigation of any and all practicable routes for a canal across said Isthmus of Panama, and particularly to investigate the two routes known, respectively, as the Nicaraguan route and the Panama route, with a view to determining the most practicable and feasible route for such canal, together with the proximate and probable cost of constructing a canal at each of two or more of said routes.

And the President is further authorized to investigate and ascertain what rights, privileges, and franchises, if any, may be held and owned by any corporations, associations, or individuals, and what work, if any, has been done by such corporations, associations, or individuals in the construction of a canal at either or any of said routes, and particularly at the so-called Nicaraguan and Panama routes, respectively; and likewise to ascertain the cost of purchasing all of the rights, privileges, and franchises held and owned by any such corporations, associations, and individuals in any and all of such routes, particularly the said Nicaraguan route and the said Panama route; and likewise to ascertain the probable or proximate cost of constructing a suitable harbor at each of the termini of said canal, with the probable annual cost of maintenance of said harbors, respectively. And generally the President is authorized to make such full and complete investigation as to determine the most feasible and practicable route across said isthmus for a canal, together with the cost of constructing the same and placing the same under the control, management, and ownership of the United States.

I might stop right there, Mr. President, and insist with perfect security, I think, that this proposed appropriation of $10,000 is to enable the President of the United States to carry out an existing law, which requires him to ascertain what claims are against or in favor of other persons upon either of those routes of communication; and also, it seems to me, perfectly palpable that when the Government has in three enactments upon appropriation bills entered into the subject of surveying and ascertaining the practicability and feasibility of a canal route, what is the cost of it, and what is to be the cost of harbors, and the like of that, it is a clear proposition that it is in order for a succeeding Congress to carry out that purpose by any additional legislation it may see fit in order to accomplish the great purpose of building this canal.

Heretofore, Mr. President, in a great many instances the Congress of the United States have had surveys made with a view to public improvements, and spent money to have surveys made for a great many rivers and harbors, and after the Congress had gone to that extent I have never heretofore heard the point of order made that the Congress could not proceed to make an appropriation to carry out that state of law.

Was that a state of law, Mr. President, or not? If it was a state of law, of course Congress can proceed with it to complete its purpose. The policy is not doubtful. There is nothing in the way now of a completion of this purpose, but to enable the President, through this little appropriation, or without it, if you please—I put the appropriation into the amendment in order that it might be an appropriation, not because it is perhaps absolutely necessary—but is there any reason why Congress can not now go forward, and with the assistance of this little appropriation complete the work of examining and removing whatever difficulty there may be in the way of the completion of this canal?

The Walker commission have come in here; they have examined two routes—the Panama route and the Nicaragua route; they have made their preliminary report, which was sent in here by a message from the President. In that report there are full estimates of all the cost of constructing every part of this canal, and also of the Panama Canal; but they have decided, in their own recommendation, at least, that the Nicaragua is the preferred route, the best route. In fact, they have decided, as I understand their report, that the Panama route is not feasible within, at least, the limit of any reasonable cost.

I could rest right here on this point of order. I could rest on the doctrine stated to-day very correctly by the Senator from Ohio that this is not a general appropriation; it is an appropriation for a specific purpose, and not for a purpose that is general to the whole of the laws of the United States; but I do not care to rest upon that proposition, or any one proposition. I think that I have demonstrated that this appropriation, when made, will be to carry out a purpose that has been declared by law upon these three appropriation bills and has been executed at a very great expense—an expense of at least a million and three or four hundred thousand dollars.

Is that to be thrown away? Are we to abandon it, or is this case in such condition as that it can not be touched upon another appropriation bill? Why has Congress been making these surveys upon appropriation bills if we can not now, in obedience to express enactment of the last Congress, clear off these difficulties and these incumbrances?

And likewise to ascertain the cost of purchasing all of the rights, privileges, and franchises held and owned by any such corporations, associations, and individuals in any and all of such routes, particularly the said Nicaraguan route and the said Panama route.

This commission has gone forward and has ascertained and reported upon claims that are stated by others to be valid. The object of this amendment to this bill, however, is not to reach those claims at all; it is not to pay them, or to provide a fund to pay them, for they will have to undergo scrutiny before they can be paid, if they are ever paid, if they are lawful. But still they exist and are reported to this Senate, sent through the message of the President for our consideration.

This amendment, however, contains another very important feature, and it is this: The President of the United States has made the following contract with Costa Rica and Nicaragua:

Protocol of an agreement between the Governments of the United States and of Costa Rica—

I read from the Costa Rican contract—

Protocol of an agreement between the Governments of the United States and of Costa Rica in regard to the future negotiations for the construction of an interoceanic canal by way of Lake Nicaragua.

It is agreed between the two Governments that when the President is authorized by law—

I call the attention of the Senate to that language—to acquire control of such portion of the territory now belonging to Costa Rica as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and operate a canal of depth and capacity sufficient for the passage of vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from a point near San Juan del Norte, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean, they mutually engage to enter into negotiations with each other to settle the plan and the agreements, in detail, found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal.

The President has made a preliminary agreement here with Nicaragua and Costa Rica by which certain rights are secured in the event that we authorize him by law to make that contract. If we do not authorize him by law to do so, that contract goes for nothing, it amounts to nothing, and the rights that have been acquired by this protocol of agreement are simply thrown away.

Before I proceed upon that point, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the question in regard to the value of these rights. Have we ever had with the States of Nicaragua and Costa Rica any rights by contract or by treaty, as the Government of the United States, to construct a canal through their country? We have had nothing of the kind, and we can not move in the direction of building a canal in Nicaragua and Costa Rica unless we do it by main force or else by agreement. The President has agreed with them, signed, sealed, and delivered an agreement; and in that agreement is the condition precedent that he shall be authorized by law to make it; and whenever he is authorized by law to make that agreement, then it becomes a binding obligation on Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

Until we get some agreement of that kind out of those two States it is utterly futile to talk about building a canal in Nicaragua or Costa Rica, or both of those States, until we have made up our minds that we intend to go down there, capture those countries, and compel them, as a matter of conquest, to give us those rights. Those States have come forward, agreed to give us those rights, subject, of course, to treaty modifications hereafter to be made; but the main body of those rights is accorded to the Government of the United States under this convention.

I put a provision in the amendment, which I have read, that if those rights are acquired by contract they shall be submitted to Congress for its ratification, and if acquired by treaty they shall be submitted to the Senate for its ratification; so that the President can not make an agreement about this matter at all without bringing back the whole matter to the consideration of either Congress or the Senate, according to whether he shall acquire those rights by treaty or whether he shall acquire them by contract. To keep control of the matter—and it is very important that Congress should do it—the President can not do anything, can not take a step, except to abandon the situation that has thus by him been deliberately taken, unless the following stipulation is complied with by the Congress of the United States:

It is agreed between the two Governments that when the President is authorized by law to acquire control of such portion, etc.

That then those Governments will assent to it upon the terms and stipulations that will be made hereafter.

What is this agreement? It is what we call a convention. Will it be ratified by the Senate or by an act of Congress? For either body can do it. That depends, first, upon the question whether it shall have a legal existence. What is requisite to give it legal existence? The assent of the Congress of the United States that the President may enter into such a contract with Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

Why did the President make this convention, this agreement? Was it simply to be abandoned? Was it a mask? Is it to be abandoned now without question? We compel the President to abandon it if we withhold our assent to it, if we do not confer upon him power to make it, for the reason that Nicaragua and Costa Rica put that provision in the contract itself.

Now the Senate of the United States is called upon to say finally and forever, so far as this matter is concerned, whether they are willing to empower the President of the United States to do what that contract requires him to do. That is what we have got to say now about it, and that is all that is asked here. There is a provision that when the President makes this agreement, either by treaty or by contract, he must bring it back to Congress for their approval.

Mr. President, under Rule XVI—

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

There are treaty stipulations. If an existing law applies to a private claim, of course it applies with less force to a public claim, a claim of the right of the Government of the United States to go on and provide for a matter of this kind.

I am perfectly aware that there are Senators on this floor who are sensitive about this matter, but there is no occasion for any sensitiveness—not a particle. When the President is empowered to execute that agreement, he is empowered to do everything that lies in his constitutional right as President of the United States of a diplomatic nature; and if there is any government, like Great Britain, that claims the right to interfere with the action that Congress has taken here to-day, what is to prevent him under this bill from going on negotiating with Great Britain about that right? There is nothing at all. That matter is conjured up in the minds of gentlemen for the purpose of alarming themselves out of their duty as well as their propriety, it seems to me.

It is said that this business results from the fact that there are three more days remaining, or parts of three days remaining, one of them a holiday—the Christian Sabbath—during which the Government of Great Britain has the right to pass upon certain amendments that the Senate of the United States sent to Great Britain upon the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and that is the only shadow that is in the way of this proceeding. If we pass this act, Great Britain can not find in its spirit or purpose any reason in the world for taking offense, unless she can really find it in the fact that these protocols of agreement were made by the President of the United States without her consent.

Was it contrary to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty that the President of the United States should make this agreement with Nicaragua and Costa Rica? Has this Government been placed in that attitude where our President has lost his constitutional power to make these agreements with Costa Rica and Nicaragua? If so, Mr. President, it is a very humiliating thing that the President of the United States should undertake to do a thing like this. He had a right to do it. Great Britain has no right to complain because all of the Presidential power still remains with him to negotiate and decide or agree with Great Britain as to any matter that may possibly affect their rights, claims, interests, feelings, or sensibilities.

Is not that all true? Is it not shown on the face of this amendment, and is it not true, that the President of the United States has entered into these agreements? What are we to do with them? It will not do for him to go and say to Nicaragua, "The Congress of the United States would have consented to give me this power, would have consented for me to make these agreements with you, but Great Britain objected, or somebody objected for Great Britain," for as yet we have heard of no objection from Great Britain. Great Britain has made no objection, so far as our Department of State is advised or so far as the Congress of the United States is advised.

It will not do to rest this case upon the ground that the President of the United States had no right and no business to make these agreements unless he felt that he had the authority to do it; and now for us to refuse to consent that he may have the authority to make such agreements is simply for us to turn the back of our hand to him and say: "You have violated your constitutional duty and your sense of propriety in making this agreement—this protocol—with Costa Rica and Nicaragua."

I therefore claim, Mr. President, that this amendment is justified by the state of the law in the United States, by the fact that we have dealt with this question on three appropriation bills in succession, by the proposition that it is not new legislation. It is not now new matter; it is not general legislation. It applies only to a specific purpose which Congress has itself adopted, and it is in order. It also is covered by the provision in the last clause of that treaty, which expressly reserves existing laws and existing stipulations of treaty out of this rule.

Is there nothing of treaty in this country except what has been ratified by the Senate? If, even upon what we know here to-day, it is necessary, in our opinion, for us to vote money for the purpose of assisting in the defense of our legations in China, or for any purpose connected with what is going on in China, we will be bound to do it, as we would have a right to do it, because what has occurred in China has occurred through the exercise of the diplomatic power of the President of the United States. We have made one treaty with China, and that, too, binds us.

Some of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber and on the other, perhaps, do not agree with me about that, that what the President of the United States has done in China binds the Government. It does bind it, and yet we have never had the terms of a treaty sent to us. We have had no communication from the State Department or from the President of the United States to show that we have made any agreement with the Chinese people at all. Yet men are having their heads cut off under a diplomatic agreement that we have made there. We are bound by it. We can not get rid of it, and do not want to get rid of it. There may be those who disapprove of it, but that is quite a different thing from denying the authority to make it.

I do not know, Mr. President, that I care to argue this question more fully on the point of order. I regret very much indeed that the Senator has made the objection. I think if there is any one case in which unanimous consent ought to apply—we seem to-day to have resorted to that way of getting rid of our rules—it ought to be in a matter in which the Government of the United States is so immensely concerned and upon which the people are so anxious to have a start made. If we abandon these protocols on this vote to-day, by ruling that the Senate of the United States has no power to act, or that it can not act upon this bill, then they go by the board. I suppose there will be some people who will be delighted with that, but the President of the United States ought not to be satisfied with it, when he himself has put the provision in the contract that it requires the assent of Congress to enable him to make this agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALDRICH in the chair). The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama proposes a new item to the appropriation bill. It is not offered or recommended by any standing or select committee——

Mr. MORGAN. It has been recommended by a standing committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not appear that this amendment was offered by a standing or select committee.

Mr. MORGAN. It was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That does not appear upon its face.

Mr. MORGAN. It is recommended by a standing committee, and was sent to the Committee on Appropriations, and they have passed upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nothing to that effect appears on the paper.

Mr. MORGAN. That may be, but that is the fact. It is so recommended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When was it reported from the committee?

Mr. MORGAN. The records here will show. It has been three weeks ago, at least; perhaps four.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as now offered?

Mr. MORGAN. No; not exactly in the words now offered, but the body of the same amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was the item of appropriation in it?

Mr. MORGAN. There was an indefinite appropriation in it, and I reduced that to $10,000.

I desire to say this to the Senate. I did not want to put a definite appropriation in here, for the reason that we are dealing with Nicaragua and Costa Rica. Suppose I had put in $5,000,000 or $10,000,000. They would have grabbed every cent of it, or perhaps they might have done so if I had put in a million dollars. The better plan is to have only enough appropriation to enable the President to send his commission there to deal with these questions, rather than to have a large appropriation here which might be a temptation to them to make demands upon us. I do not believe that those nations ought to charge us one single cent for the work we are doing, and I hope when they come to a proper knowledge of what is their interest and welfare they will not.

I did not want to place any temptation in the bill. So, when the bill was introduced with an indefinite appropriation, I thought it was better to reduce the sum so that there would be no temptation in it at all, and give the President only money enough to enable him to pay the expenses of the commissioners that he might find necessary to send to Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without stopping to consider the question whether or not this amendment has been reported from a standing or select committee, the Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that it is general legislation.

Mr. MORGAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to know if this matter is now open to argument?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is, within a reasonable limit.

Mr. MORGAN. Never mind about my limit; I will take care of my limit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will listen to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senate to listen to the argument. It is not for the Chair to decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the first instance it is for the Chair to decide.

Mr. MORGAN. The Chair has decided, and I now appeal to a different body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama appeals from the decision of the Chair upon this question.

Mr. MORGAN. To the Senate——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow the Chair to state the question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate; on which the Senator from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to put in an amendment, to which I think there will be no objection. Does the Senator from Alabama object to my asking consent now, and then going on with his argument?

Mr. MORGAN. On a different subject?

Mr. HOAR. On a different subject entirely.

Mr. MORGAN. So I do not lose the floor, I do not care.

Mr. HOAR. Unless it is entirely agreeable to the Senator I will not make the request.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not want to lose the floor on this amendment.

Mr. HOAR. No; I understand. The Senator does not lose the floor. I only ask that he allow me to make this request. If it takes more than a minute I will withdraw it.

Mr. MORGAN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts without yielding the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MORGAN. I do for this particular purpose.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of an amendment which has already been passed by the Senate at the present session. May I be allowed to say in one word that it is an amendment for the site and pedestal for the Longfellow statue, which is to be paid for by a corporation or an association of which the Chief Justice of the United States is president?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that an amendment offered by him may be adopted. It will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

Statue of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow: For the preparation of a site and the erection of a pedestal for a statue of the late Henry Wadsworth Longfellow in the city of Washington, said site to be selected by and said pedestal to be approved by the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library and the chairman of the Longfellow Memorial Association, $4,000, to be expended under the direction of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds: Provided, That said statue shall not be located in the grounds of the Capitol or Library of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment should be inserted on page 143.

Mr. MORGAN. Senators seem to have abandoned the Chamber. They have gone in search of dinner, or something of that kind, I suppose. I was about to suggest, if the Senate is willing, that we take a recess until 8 o'clock. Has any notice been given that the Senate would proceed in that order?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to suit the convenience of the Senate. I had hoped that before 8 o'clock we could complete the bill.

Mr. HALE. We do not want a night session.

Mr. ALLISON. It is desired to avoid a night session if possible.

Mr. MORGAN. I would very much prefer——

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we can go right on, unless there is some reason personal to the convenience of the Senator——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Alabama does not wish to go on to-night; and he proposes to be heard on this question, I understand. It seems to me, under the circumstances, it would be better to take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we will go right on.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator from Iowa say we must go right on?

Mr. ALLISON. I say I hope so. I of course submit to the Senate. If it desires to take a recess, very well.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn; and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Alabama asked for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to make a suggestion for his convenience and that of others? I ask unanimous consent to make a suggestion simply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. This is a very important matter, and the Senator from Alabama, as we all recognize, knows more about it than any of the rest of us. My suggestion is, whether we could not have an agreement to go on and finish the rest of this bill to-night, and then let it stand over until morning for the purpose of dealing with the amendment of the Senator from Alabama alone, and let him then address the Senate on it.

Mr. MORGAN. I should be very glad to do that. I am willing to limit my remarks to-morrow morning to half an hour.

Mr. HOAR. Would not that be agreeable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALLISON. If it can be agreed to that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow we can take up the matter and dispose of it by 1 o'clock and then go on and dispose of the remainder of this bill——

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to say something in regard to the proposition of the Senator from Iowa, which is that I gave notice to-day that I would take the floor after the routine business to-morrow in order to reply to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the notice of the Senator from Mississippi was for 1 o'clock.

Mr. MONEY. One o'clock? Whatever it is.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Alabama says he will speak only half an hour after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

Mr. HALE. If the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts can be adopted, the Senator from Iowa can go on and finish the bill, I have no doubt, in an hour.

Mr. HOAR. To-night?

Mr. HALE. To-night.

Mr. TELLER. To-night.

Mr. HALE. And nothing will be left except the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama, and then let that be taken up in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question, the Chair will state to the Senator from Maine, is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly the unanimous consent will include that. The whole thing goes over until morning. In the meantime we can finish the rest of the bill, taking up only this item in the morning, and save Senators a night session, which nobody wants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota objects.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall object to all requests for unanimous consent until I have a vote upon the resolutions I offered to-day. They were talked out. Two hours was spent talking them out. I shall insist upon a vote on those resolutions, and shall object to requests for unanimous consent until they are voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Alabama will withdraw the motion to adjourn, and I will then move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening. That was the original suggestion of the Senator from Alabama. I had hoped we could finish this bill at an early hour, but I see it is impossible.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama withdraw the motion to adjourn?

Mr. MORGAN. I did. I said so.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 minutes after 8—a recess of about two hours.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.

REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5929) for the relief of the heirs of the late Charles P. Culber, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 628) for the relief of Hamilton M. Sailors, reported it without amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11881) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of birds, preservation of game, and for the prevention of its sale during certain closed seasons in the District of Columbia."

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3288) for the relief of Daniel Coonan.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 5935) to authorize the Montgomery and Autauga Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.;

A bill (S. 6012) to provide an American register for the steam yacht May;

A bill (S. 6054) authorizing the Texas and Pacific Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River, Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided by said act;

A joint resolution (S. R. 164) giving the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to provide for the public comfort; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 306) concerning printing of additional copies of the annual report of the Geological Survey.

HOURS OF LABOR ON GOVERNMENT WORK.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution, and ask that it be read, and lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be received.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from the further consideration of H. R. 6882, an act limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia, thereby securing better products, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer a resolution, and ask that it may go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be received.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from further consideration of H. R. 10302, an act to amend an act to promote the safety of employees, and so forth, by requiring common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, and so forth, approved March 2, 1893.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

UNIFORMS OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. ALLEN. I introduced a resolution of inquiry this morning, and I understand the Senator from New Hampshire withdraws his objection to it. I should like to have it considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate if commissioned officers in the naval service promoted from the ranks are in any respect debarred the use of the uniform and other privileges of commissioned officers of the Navy; whether there is any distinction in the insignia of office of such officers and the officers graduates of the Naval Academy; and if so, why, and what steps are being taken, if any, to permit this class of officers to wear the regular insignia and uniform of the naval officers graduated at the Naval Academy.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not going to object to the resolution, and only desire to say that the Senator from Nebraska will not find that there is any foundation for making the inquiry. All the officers of the same grade wear the same uniform, but the graduates of the Naval Academy become ensigns and officers in the Marine Corps. The officers to whom the Senator refers are warrant officers, and of course they do not wear the same uniform that ensigns and lieutenants in the Marine Corps wear; but they all wear the prescribed uniform for their grade, and the Senator will get nothing by his resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the resolution may lie over, and I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa objects to the resolution. It will take its place on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. I will allow the resolution to pass if the Senator from New Hampshire and the naval people are willing, and then I shall call for the regular order.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

E. H. M'ELHENNY.

Mr. MCENERY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to examine the petition, account, and evidence of E. H. McElhenny for expenses incurred and services rendered by him in rescuing, housing, feeding, clothing, and caring for shipwrecked sailors in the Arctic Ocean in the years 1897 and 1898, and to make a report to Congress at its next session, stating the result of his examination and what sum he considers adequate and proper to be paid to said McElhenny for such expenses and services.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14018) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLAPP. I have the permission of the Senator from Alabama to submit the amendment which I send to the desk to the bill under consideration, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be incorporated as an amendment to be inserted at the end of line 19, on page 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of an amendment to the pending bill.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 19, on page 9, it is proposed to insert:

Post-office, court-house, and custom-house, St. Paul, Minn.: For extension of limit of cost of site and building from $1,050,000 to $1,150,000. That so much of the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at St. Paul, Minn.," approved February 16, 1891, as authorized the Secretary of the Treasury, after the completion of the new United States post-office, court-house, and custom-house building, to sell and convey the present property of the United States in said city now occupied as a court-house, custom-house, and post-office, and of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1898, as directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause suitable accommodations to be provided in the new United States post-office, court-house, and custom-house building for all officials of the United States located in said city who are entitled to quarters in public buildings, are hereby repealed; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to retain the custody and control of the property of the United States in said city now occupied as a court-house, custom-house, and post office, to rearrange and remodel the same as may be necessary for public business, and to assign the space therein to such officials located in said city who are entitled to offices in public buildings as in his judgment shall be proper; and that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent that this may be incorporated as an amendment, upon this ground: Some years ago the Federal Government undertook the building of a court-house and post-office at St. Paul. It soon became manifest that the old building would still be required. The Secretary of the Treasury has recommended the retention of the old building. This amendment has been recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I understand that the Senator from Iowa, who has in charge the bill under consideration, has no objection to it. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that it may be accepted as an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the amendment, although I think it is not necessary, and I will allow it to go in. It does not change existing law, I believe. The Secretary recommends it, and I am perfectly willing that it may go in, as it does not change the existing law in any way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill, to come in—I suppose a good place would be on page 4, after the fifth line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Mississippi pardon the Chair for a moment? What was the understanding at the time the recess was taken? There was pending an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that appeal is now pending.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the appeal now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appeal is before the Senate, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not desire to discuss the appeal in the absence of Senators. I would rather know whether they are here or not.

Mr. TELLER. What was the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] was out of order.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read so far as to show its character, so that Senators who were not present when the appeal was taken may understand it.

Mr. TELLER. I was here, but there was so much confusion in the Chamber that I could not tell what happened.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, subject to the approval of Congress, if such rights are acquired by contract, or by the Senate, if such rights are acquired by treaty, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and protect a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean, and in substantial accordance with the subsisting conventions with Nicaragua and Costa Rica in the words following, the agreement with each of said States being in identical terms:

Protocol of an agreement between the Governments of the United States and of Costa Rica in regard to future negotiations for the construction of an interoceanic canal by way of Lake Nicaragua.

It is agreed between the two Governments that when the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire control of such portion of the territory now belonging to Costa Rica as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and protect a canal of depth and capacity sufficient for the passage of vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from a point near San Juan del Norte, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean, they mutually engage to enter into negotiations with each other to settle the plan and the agreements in detail, found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal. And the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated for these purposes, to be immediately available.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment, as it will lead to discussion, may be temporarily laid aside, and some other amendments considered first. I hope the Senator from Alabama will consent to that.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to consenting to that, but I do not want to be thrown way down into midnight.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no. It is only for a short time—at the will of the Senator.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the appeal and the amendment be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to offer an amendment, to be inserted on page 4, after line 5. The amendment is favorably reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and is recommended by the Attorney-General, and has passed the Senate once before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after line 5, on page 4:

For the purchase of the property known as the Corcoran Art Gallery, in the city of Washington, D. C., $332,500, and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, empowered and directed to acquire for and in the name of the United States, for the purpose hereinafter provided, the following-described real estate, with the improvements thereon, known and designated as original lots Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8, in square 167, in the city of Washington, D. C., and containing 17,733 square feet, lying and being at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Seventeenth street NW., fronting on Pennsylvania avenue 106 feet and on Seventeenth street 160 feet, and being the property of the Corcoran Gallery of Art. Said property to be used by the Court of Claims, or for such other purposes as may be determined: Provided, That the same can be secured for a sum not exceeding $332,500; and so much of the act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a building for the Department of Justice," approved March 3, 1899, as provides "that said building shall be constructed so as to provide a court room and necessary accommodations for the Court of Claims," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. ALLISON. What did the Senator from Mississippi ask as to this amendment?

Mr. MONEY. I ask that it be adopted as an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall object to it at the present moment. Let it lie over for the present.

Mr. MONEY. I could not hear the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I asked the Senator to let it lie by for the present.

Mr. MONEY. Without prejudice?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I have no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment that has been favorably reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I move that it be inserted after line 4, page 39.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

For the purchase by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of the land necessary to provide a park way connecting Rock Creek park with Connecticut avenue between Klingle Ford road and Pierce Mill road, not less than 17 acres in area, $125,000: Provided, That the streets laid down on the highway extension plans abutting the ground selected for said park way shall be dedicated to the District of Columbia before any of the appropriation hereby made shall be expended: And provided further, That one-half of the amount herein appropriated be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. That was considered by the Committee on Appropriations on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. It properly belongs there, and I trust the Senator from New Hampshire, under the circumstances, will not press it at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment was more carefully considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia than it possibly could have been by the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on the District of Columbia, or a majority of them, closely investigated this property, and came to the conclusion that it ought to be purchased in connection with the magnificent park that we have dedicated to the uses of the country. It is the only decent approach that there is to the park. It is a magnificent property. The present owner has expended $40,000 on it, which is practically given to the Government if we make the purchase. The value of the property is undisputed. It ought by all means to be purchased at the present time as a matter of economy.

In a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia by Capt. Lansing H. Beach, of the Corps of Engineers, a member of the Board of District Commissioners, attention is called to the fact that Mr. William P. Richards, engineer in charge of highway extensions, who has, according to Captain Beach, as much knowledge of values as anyone in the District, estimates it to be worth 30 cents per square foot. He estimates that the 17 acres suggested for park purposes are worth from $4,000 to $12,000 per acre. Then Commissioner Beach says:

When the condition of dedication of streets is taken into account it is believed that the price at which the land is offered—$125,000—is quite reasonable. This would be for the purchase of 17 acres conditioned on the donation of 6½ acres more, or 23½ acres in all, which would make the cost about $5,375 per acre. It is known that the portion of the land immediately adjoining Connecticut avenue could be sold for from 50 to 60 cents per square foot.

If we deduct the $40,000 which it is conceded Mr. Waggaman has expended on that property, it is to cost the Government $85,000, or $5,375 an acre, when Mr. Richards, who is acknowledged by everybody to be as good a judge of property as there is in the District, and who is not engaged in the purchase or sale of real estate, estimates it to be worth from four to twelve thousand dollars an acre, an average of $8,000 an acre.

I venture to say that if Senators could examine the map that I have here, which they can not do to-night, and see the location of this land as I have done, and as almost every member of the District Committee has done, making a personal visit to it, I feel sure that there would be no vote in opposition to this amendment. It has been given very careful consideration by the committee that is supposed to take a little more interest in the affairs of this District than any other committee of this body, including the Committee on Appropriations.

I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment will become a part of the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I want to appeal to the chairman of the committee not to object to this amendment. I have been out there to see this land. It is manifest that the District would buy it and buy it in any near time in the future at a very much increased price. It seems to me absolutely essential for the entrance to the park. Although very familiar with that part of the District, until it had been developed and streets laid out I had no conception of the importance of the acquisition of this land. If we are going to have a national park it will be bought of course, and now it can be bought cheaper than at any other time.

I hope the chairman will allow a proposition so manifestly important as this to go through. It is one of those things that ought to be adopted now, and not have the park clogged up by one or two entrances of the park that would have been very much more improved if bought earlier. I think a postponement means more expense and perhaps a blocking up of the park in every direction.

Mr. ALLISON. All I have to say respecting the amendment is that this question was thoroughly and carefully considered by the Committee on Appropriations. I personally visited the land proposed to be purchased. It is a desirable purchase in very many respects, but the appropriations for the District of Columbia have far exceeded the appropriations for the District in many years. Indeed, I believe there never have been such large appropriations before, and it seems to me that this, like many other necessary things, must be postponed. But if the Senate desires to put it upon the bill, I shall be content with its action.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I do not think I can be charged with favoring the District of Columbia, or appropriations for it, to any considerable extent. I am in favor of economical appropriations for this District and for this city. I know no reason why the Government should be more liberal with the city of Washington than it is with any other city in the United States aside from beautifying the Capitol and other public grounds.

I have had occasion to go over this ground several times within the last four or five years. It is a delightful ground, as no doubt all Senators here know by having traveled through it and over it. I believe this appropriation is wise and just. I believe to make this appropriation to-day will save the Government of the United States probably three or four hundred thousand dollars within the next two or three years in the purchase of this identical ground.

For that reason I trust the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not resist the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" have it.

Mr. ALLISON. I feel constrained to ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, after line 4, insert:

For the purchase by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of the land necessary to provide a park way connecting Rock Creek Park with Connecticut avenue between Klingle Ford road and Pierce Mill road, not less than 17 acres in area, $125,000: Provided, That the streets laid down on the highway extension plans abutting the ground selected for said park way shall be dedicated to the District of Columbia before any of the appropriation hereby made shall be expended: And provided further, That one-half of the amount herein appropriated be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I have heard several Senators express the opinion that if the Government did not buy this land now, we would have to pay one hundred thousand or two hundred thousand or three hundred thousand dollars more for it within a few years. If that were true the men who own the land, and who know more about real estate than Senators, would not sell it now at that price.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not say that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the roll will be called on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and withhold my vote.

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], and withhold my vote.

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

In his absence, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY]. I do not know how he would vote, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when Mr. TALIAFERRO'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. TALIAFERRO] is unavoidably absent. I do not know how he would vote if he were here.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I do not see him in the Chamber. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK. I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] that we transfer our pairs and both vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. NELSON. Under the transfer the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] will stand paired. I have voted.

Mr. TILLMAN. I vote "yea."

Mr. BACON. In the absence of the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] I withhold my vote. I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. SCOTT. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] so that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] and I can vote, if that is agreeable to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CLAY. Then the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will stand paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]. I am willing.

Mr. SCOTT. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAY. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] and I vote "nay."

Mr. MONEY. I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE], which I transfer to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], who is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], so as to enable the Senator from Wyoming and myself to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK. I vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (after having voted in the negative). I understand that my pair has been transferred so that I stand paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allen,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Scott,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Mallory,	Stewart,
Dillingham,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Teller,

So Mr. GALLINGER'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to offer an amendment to the first section of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], the report of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, as to the codification of the general laws of the United States. The words that I desire to insert are written in the amendment which I offer. I ask the Secretary to read the whole, so as to see how it would read with the words inserted. I will call attention to my amendment after he has finished the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the commissioners heretofore appointed in pursuance of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1897, to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States, together with two additional commissioners whom the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be, and they are hereby, directed to revise and codify, in accordance with the terms and provisions of said act and the acts supplementary thereto all laws of the United States of a permanent and general nature in force at the time when the same shall be reported: Provided, That not more than three of the said commissioners shall be of the same political party.

Mr. DANIEL. The only changes which the amendment which I offer would make in the text of the bill as it now is are contained in these words:

Together with two additional commissioners, whom the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

And the additional words at the end of the section:

Provided, That not more than three of the said commissioners shall be of the same political party.

I desire to say that I submitted this amendment to the chairman of the Committee on the Revision of Laws, and he stated that he had no objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask a question of the Senator from Indiana? I understood the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], by unanimous consent, to have inserted something upon this same subject during the day.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The amendment which I offered was adopted this afternoon. The Senator from Virginia happened to be absent from the Chamber when the amendment was offered.

Mr. ALLISON. If we are to modify and change all these amendments that go on the bill by unanimous consent, we shall never get through with the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. I happened to be out of the Senate Chamber about three minutes. I had been watching this matter all day, and I gave the closest attention to it.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. DANIEL. I will explain it. There are now three commissioners who were appointed to revise and codify the criminal laws of the United States. They have not yet made their report of the codification. Since their appointment they have had other legal tasks of the same description imposed upon them by Congress. It is proposed by the amendment to this bill which was offered by the Senator from Indiana, as I understand, to make it the duty of these three commissioners to revise and codify all of the general statutes of the United States—those that are of a permanent and general nature.

Mr. ALLISON. The substance of what the Senator proposes is to add two commissioners.

Mr. DANIEL. The amendment which I offered is to make a commission of five, and to make it a commission not entirely composed of one party.

Mr. ALLISON. That is right enough. Now, does the amendment of the Senator contemplate changing some one of the three commissioners?

Mr. DANIEL. None. It retains them.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. DANIEL. The only words contained in the amendment which I offered were these:

Together with two additional commissioners whom the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

And the provision that not more than three of the five shall be of the same political party; that is all.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I do not think, Mr. President, that the addition of two commissioners is at all necessary. Nor do I think it wise or possible to divide them between political parties as proposed. It is my opinion that three good commissioners can do the important work of codifying the laws which they now have in charge as well, if not better, than it would be done by a larger commission. The Senator from Virginia does not assent to this view. I realize that we differ sharply.

A general revision of the statutes of the United States is greatly needed. The bench and the bar are earnestly demanding a revision. The amendment offered by me and adopted requires that the commissioners, among other things—shall bring together all statutes and parts of statutes relating to the same subjects, shall omit redundant and obsolete enactments, and shall make such alterations as may be necessary to reconcile the contradictions, supply the omissions, and amend the imperfections of the original text; and they may propose and embody in such revision changes in the substance of existing law; but all such changes shall be clearly set forth in an accompanying report, which shall briefly explain the reasons for the same.

The statutes as revised and codified by the commission may be reenacted by Congress if it shall so determine. It is very important that the commission should be continued and the scope of its work enlarged. It was appointed by virtue of an act approved June 4, 1897, providing for commissioners to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States. It has done much, and I believe, good work. There is no good reason why the commission should be either enlarged or appointed in the manner proposed by the honorable Senator from Virginia.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire what is the complexion of the three commissioners who have already been appointed?

Mr. DANIEL. The present commission consists of Judge Botkin, of Montana, I think, Mr. Watson, of Ohio, and Mr. Bynum, of Indiana. They were appointed to codify the criminal laws, and the amendment which has been ingrafted upon this bill imposes upon them the additional duties of revising and codifying all the laws of the United States of a permanent and general character.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then this amendment of the Senator from Virginia proposes to appoint two additional commissioners, both of whom shall be Democrats? Is that the proposition?

Mr. DANIEL. The problem would first have to be solved as to what political party one of the commissioners belongs, and I do not consider myself at all capable of making the solution.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I rose for the purpose of saying that if I were otherwise disposed to vote for the amendment, and I think I should be, I should vote against it because of the proposition to limit the President in his appointment of a commission or portions of a commission to codify all the laws of the United States to persons of one political party. I would have no objection to the President being left free to appoint all Democrats on that commission, if he chose to do so; but I can not vote for a proposition which directs the President to appoint only Democrats or only Republicans, as the case may be.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the honorable Senator from Connecticut would probably change his opinion as to the nature of this amendment if he knew its history. It was proposed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to take the commission as now constituted, and which consists entirely of gentlemen who are the supporters of this Administration, let them be called what name you please, in lieu of a new commission to be appointed, and require them to revise the laws of a permanent and general nature of the United States.

The amendment which I proposed and is now lying on the table as a substitute for that amendment was one which authorized the President to appoint five commissioners to revise the general civil laws of the United States and requiring that not more than three should belong to the same political party. I laid that aside and adopted this language in deference to the opinions of gentlemen of the Senator's own political party who thought that this was the shortest way of getting at that result.

Now, Mr. President, I have a word or two to say on the general subject. It will be observed in looking at the amendment which was offered by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws that this commission is charged with a very grave and far-reaching legal duty. It requires them to take the Statutes of the United States that are to-day extant, and to revise and codify them, and provides that in this revision and codification they may change the substance of existing law, and make any alteration in them that they see proper.

Mr. President, this is a great country. It contains in one compact area over 76,000,000 people and 45 different States. All the general statutes concern, some more and some less, different communities in the United States. As a task to be confined to three lawyers, all of the same political persuasion, it seems to me that the provision contains nothing in it of the liberality of our institutions and of the generosity which should pervade our legislation concerning them.

In the Senate it is always the custom to make no committee all from one political organization. In the New England States it is customary even upon their high courts of judicature almost invariably to see to it that the minority political organization is represented by one judge. In my judgment you will always find a more liberal body when it is composed of those which represent opposing political opinions than when it is composed of a set of men whose minds are continually running in one rut and whose ideas are turned simply into certain grooves which education and environment and prejudice have put them.

The general laws of the United States ought not to be revised and codified by any partisan body or by any body whose minds are accustomed to run in one political channel. And above that, Mr. President, a country so vast as this is, with such diverse interests, ought to have as much of the diversity of interest represented on such a board as is consistent with its practical operations.

I know of no condition of the country in which it is not wiser to have a board so composed; and between any narrow and contracted view of a subject of this kind and the broader and more liberal view it is always well to give breadth and liberality the preference.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, this seems to me to be a matter of principle. I do not know but that it is in the power of Congress to limit the appointing power of the President to persons of one political party. It may be. I express no opinion on that subject. I have heard very interesting discussions on the subject as to whether it was not a limitation on the appointing power of the President. But I think it is unwise and impolitic in principle for the appointment of men to perform legal duties to provide that they shall be selected from one or from two political parties.

I should have no objection to the appointment of two Democrats if the President chose to appoint two Democrats on this commission; but I think that Congress should no more limit him in the selection of men to perform the important work of revising the statutes of the United States than it should limit him in the appointment of a judge, when we provide for a new judge.

I agree with the Senator from Virginia that it is wise to have men of both political parties represented in the appointment of judges and persons who are to perform such services as this; but I can not agree that the President should be directed to appoint a man from one political party. We passed a bill for the creation of a new circuit judge in the State of New York. What would the Senator from Virginia have said if we had provided in that bill that the judge appointed from New York should be a Democrat, or be a Republican?

Mr. DANIEL. I do not think it likely you would have done that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the Senator would have been one of the first to say that we ought not by act of Congress to attempt to limit the President in his selection of a judge to one political party or another political party.

Mr. President, with me it is a matter of principle. If the Senator will strike out that clause, I shall be happy to vote for his amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. There are two propositions. The Senator can vote for one and against the other.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But I can not vote for an amendment with that clause in it.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] says, but I did not suppose there was anything that Congress could not do, after seeing the Army bill pass through this body without any objection, or very little objection on that side, which limited men in every conceivable way as to description, which almost made a photograph of the man desired to be appointed on the staff and to other Army positions.

Furthermore, our experience in such matters as this, when the statute has not pointed out the discrimination in parties which is desired, is that the President is immediately beset by his own party to nominate and appoint those who are of its numbers.

We have just seen this matter illustrated in the Industrial Commission, which was proclaimed to the world as a nonpartisan commission. As soon as the words were taken out of the act which required a division in that commission to be made between the political parties, it became almost entirely a Republican body.

Mr. MALLORY. It is now.

Mr. DANIEL. It is now, as I understand from one of its members, composed of gentlemen all of whom belong to the Republican organization.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think that is so.

Mr. DANIEL. Except the Congressional representation.

Mr. CULLOM. I was going to inquire about that.

Mr. MALLORY. All the Presidential appointees are Republicans.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand.

Mr. DANIEL. All the members who were created by executive appointment belong to the Republican organization. The appointing power ought to be saved from the inevitable pressure of political friends to make any public organization solely a political body.

This Industrial Commission was started upon the broad plane of having no politics in it. They were not going to consider partisan political questions; they were to spare them in their investigation; they were to be gentlemen sitting on serene heights, undisturbed by those questions which affect the minds of the American people and distribute them into political organizations. But the moment you took away from that commission this safeguard it crystallized as a Republican body.

Mr. President, these commissionerships are very different from the official bodies that administer the Government. They are more like referees in chancery, who have no authoritative power, but who yet, from their contact with the people and the various questions which are involved in their work, ought to be of a representative relation.

If the Democratic party should ever come to power aga'n within any time that I had the honor to be one of its members, I should like to see them rigidly enforce the doctrine of giving a fair division in all such matters as this to their political opponents.

I am not claiming it as a Democrat, but as a just principle of government, which any man who has observed public affairs for a long time and has become familiar with the tendency of things ought to recognize as a wholesome and beneficial agency in government. It is better for the people of the United States that partisanry in such a matter should be softened by bringing those who represent the different political bodies together, and that all ideas which are embodied into law should be illumined and contributed to by the diverse mentality of the country, which comes from the combination of various views and experiences.

It is wise and good legislation; and I hope that the Senate will adopt this amendment and relieve the President from the plague of having office seekers, and those who must necessarily represent them, constantly besieging him to make his party the whole thing in the matter and to regard the other as outcasts unworthy of consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" have it.

Mr. DANIEL. I call for a division, Mr. President.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 21: no quorum voting.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], which I transfer to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], thus relieving the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] from his pair, and I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], but, in order to have a quorum to-night, I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). As I have already announced, I have a pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY], who will not return at this session. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and vote "nay."

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK. Under the transfer suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], I vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON. I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—19.

Allen,	Clay,	McEnery,	Stewart,
Bacon,	Culberson,	Martin,	Taliaferro,
Berry,	Daniel,	Money,	Teller,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Morgan,	Tillman.
Chilton,	Lindsay,	Pettus,

NAYS—33.

Allison,	Elkins,	Kean,	Sewell,
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	Kearns,	Shoup,
Carter,	Frye,	Lodge,	Simon,
Chandler,	Gallinger,	McComas,	Spooner,

Deboe,	McBride,	Proctor,	Wellington,
Depew,	McCumber,	Quarles,	Wolcott.

So Mr. DANIEL's amendment was rejected.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] desires to go on with the Nicaragua Canal amendment now, and I will not press this matter at this moment any further. When the appropriate time arrives, however, I will present this amendment in a different shape, and hope it may then be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on an appeal from the decision of the Chair. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, to save the Senate from the infliction of a speech and myself from the labor of uttering it, I want to ask unanimous consent of the Senate that this amendment may go on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that his proposed amendment may be adopted. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that amendment, if it is decided to be in order, and the Chair is not sustained, will involve a great deal of discussion, I think, and probably discussion that ought to be held with closed doors, so I am constrained to object.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not responsible then, Mr. President, for the discussion that it may lead to. I will not myself, however, discuss it very long.

I am not surprised at the objection coming from the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to this agreement of the Senate upon a question of great importance, but, as it seems to me, it is a very clear matter of duty to the President of the United States.

That Senator has on all occasions, when he has had the opportunity, interposed objections to the consideration of the Nicaragua Canal bill. He commenced at the time that he made himself the champion of the Spooner resolution, very far back in the session last year, and interposed that bill at that time for the purpose of breaking down the vote of the Senate on the Nicaragua Canal bill and preventing its consideration; and on two efforts that I made to get the Senate to take it up the Senator from Massachusetts prevailed by a vote of this body on the call of the yeas and nays.

As a leader of the opposition, therefore, to the Nicaragua Canal bill, I expect from him any method that he can resort to for the purpose of defeating this measure. I have never been deceived in regard to his attitude.

I admit, Mr. President, that to-night I am thrown on the side of duty to the President of the United States, while the Senator from Massachusetts seems to be opposing his power here in opposition to what the President has done.

I do not know why it was that in the month of December, 1900, the President of the United States found it necessary and proper to make an agreement with the Government of Nicaragua.

I should be very glad not to be disturbed, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. MORGAN. I invite the special attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, inasmuch as he has made objection, and, I suppose, antagonizes himself to this bill. I have been speaking for two minutes in regard to his attitude on this subject, but he has not had his attention drawn to my remarks. I suppose he is indifferent to my opinion and to my attitude about this matter, and probably to the opinions of the world. But some gentlemen sometimes appear to be indifferent to the opinions of mankind, and when in that condition mankind generally has a mutuality of understanding about them and does not care about their opinions.

I was saying, sir, that I did not know why in December, 1900, the President should have put himself to the trouble of making an agreement, which I am going to read, with Nicaragua and Costa Rica. Nicaragua and Costa Rica are two Republics of America. They are Spanish-speaking people, but they have been recognized by the Government of the United States as being free, sovereign, and independent governments. They are not very strong, but they are in possession of a very remarkably valuable piece of property—the route of the canal through Lake Nicaragua and San Juan River—which has no parallel anywhere on the face of the globe.

To us, Mr. President, the Nicaragua Canal route is the most important piece of property in the world. If it has a rival in the Panama Canal I am not prepared to say that that would not be a very important piece of property also, but the great commission of nine engineers, able men, one of whom was our former colleague here in the Senate, after spending a year in the investigation of this subject, has decided that the Nicaragua route is practicable, and is in all respects better for the United States than the Panama route. They have also decided—our former associate in the Senate, Mr. Pasco, being, I believe, the lawyer of that tribunal—that there is no legal possibility of the United States acquiring property in the Panama Canal.

They state the reasons for it; and therefore I drop that subject out of view for the present, although I am perfectly aware that that canal is here to-night operating against the movement that I am trying to make. It has been here for weeks and for months and for years. It spent a million and a half of dollars in New York before the reorganization in employing lobby services; it removed a Secretary of the Navy from his office by resignation, in order that he might accept the position of a lobbyist, really, or at least an advocate, of that canal, at a salary of $25,000 a year; and what was true, Mr. President, in the green tree is true in the dry. That same situation exists to-day.

I am firmly convinced, sir, that if I had put a hundred million dollars in this appropriation instead of $10,000, that I could have been able to pass this bill through the Senate. The opportunity that it would have placed in the hands of men who want to control vast sums of money is beyond question a most important factor in all this business.

It is alleged that this canal is to cost $200,000,000. I think that is an estimate that is $50,000,000 beyond a fair, just, and economical work of construction. But suppose it is only $150,000,000. If that sum of money could be kept in reach of speculators and combinations, there would be very little difficulty in passing this bill, very little. But the bill that passed the House by a vote of 223 to 26 shut off the speculators and the contrivers by putting the construction of that canal into the hands of the President of the United States through the agency of the Secretary of War.

It is not supposable—notwithstanding Mr. Carter is in the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans.—it is not supposable that officers of the Army could be corrupted in the expenditure of that sum of money, and the very safeguard that we have thrown around this canal, and for which I have contended all the time, to shut out the looters and the marauders, makes it an unpopular measure. It is not unpopular with the country or with the people, but Congress seems to have such aversion to it that they are unwilling to take it up at any time at all whenever it is called.

No state of circumstances can possibly occur in this country when the Congress of the United States seems to be willing to do their duty to the country in the passage of this canal bill. Even now the pressure that is brought to bear to-night to stop this canal bill is said tobe an aversion of the present Administration to give some possible offense to Great Britain; that the President of the United States is unwilling to have this canal constructed until Lord Pauncefote or whoever is at the head of foreign affairs in Great Britain shall consent that it may be done.

I repudiate that construction of the present situation, upon my knowledge, as far as it goes, of what the President of the United States really desires. But I am not informed on that question fully, and could not be; and I will ask the chairman of this committee, who made the first objection to this proposition, whether he knows that the President of the United States is opposed to this measure? As soon as the chairman is disengaged, so that I can get his attention, I will ask him the question.

I have stated, as the chairman is now giving his attention to me, that I had no right to suppose that the President of the United States was opposed to the building of this canal. I had no reason to suppose that the President now felt the pressure of British power upon his authority, so as to deter him and drive him off, for any consideration at all, from action by Congress in the ratification of an agreement that he himself has made. I was asking the chairman of the committee if he knew whether the President of the United States was opposed to putting this amendment on the pending bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly have no knowledge upon the subject. I have never spoken to the President on the subject in any manner as respects this amendment, and I do not know.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Iowa, I think, will concede that he has spoken to the President about the subject. It may not have been on this special amendment; but the matter had just as well come out now, and I have no disposition to hide any part of anything that concerns this canal.

I have always understood the President of the United States to be in favor of the Hepburn bill and to be in favor of any matter that would enable him to execute his solemn, written contract, under seal, with the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. Now, if it is not admitted that he is opposed to this ratification of his own contract, I shall assume that he is still in favor of it. But, Mr. President, I do not know and I can not know.

Through the courtesy of both parties in the Senate I was made the chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. I suppose that was done because as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations for many years I had been laboriously engaged in trying to have this canal bill passed through the Senate. Two bills passed, one by 11 majority and the next by a majority of 8 to 1—a vote of 7 to 56.

I took it for granted that in the Senate of the United States, it having thus twice been tested on the subject, it could not possibly be a political question and it could not be said by any man in the world that the Senate of the United States was not in favor of passing the Nicaraguan Canal bill, and that bill was in favor of executing a concession that had been made to a corporation or company. Then when we cut loose from that and the House of Representatives took the high ground that this canal must be built by the Government of the United States and owned by it, the bill came up in the House, and there was the overwhelming majority, to which I have just adverted, of 123 to 26 in favor of it.

So there can be no doubt about the attitude of the Houses on this question, if they are left free from political or party constraint. It has not been a party measure in the Committee on Interoceanic Canals. It has not been a party measure in either of the Houses of Congress, and if it has become a party measure it has been within the last few days or even few hours, and I still assume that the President of the United States is in favor of what I am now proposing. If there is any Senator here who knows to the contrary and can correct me, he does himself and me both great injustice if he does not rise in his place and do it; and I challenge any Senator on the other side of the Chamber to get up and say that the President of the United States is against this amendment.

Now, let us understand each other. I am fighting here for the honor of the United States Government and the honor of the President of the United States, and if he is permitting me to enter the lists under these circumstances and bear up his own contract, carry out his own expressed will under hand and seal; if he, as chairman of the Republican party, is permitting me to go along blindfolded to do these things, he is a hypocrite, because his professions and his public acts are all the other way. Now, let some of his own friends accuse him of that hypocrisy or else let them take the position of opposing what the President has done. There is where they stand, and they can not escape from it.

Now, I will read what he has done and what he did in the month of December last. He made an agreement with these two little Republics of which I have been speaking, the poor little institutions of government that compare with the United States like a minnow would compare with a whale. Has the President been doddling with them; has he been deceiving them; has he been imposing upon them; or was he honest and sincere in the contract which he made? I will assume that as an honest man, an American President, he was sincere in the contract which he made, and here it is:

> Protocol of an agreement between the Governments of the United States and of Costa Rica in regard to future negotiations for the construction of an interoceanic canal by way of Lake Nicaragua.
> It is agreed between the two Governments that when the President of the United States is authorized by law to acquire control of such portion of the territory now belonging to Costa Rica as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and protect a canal of depth and capacity sufficient for the passage of vessels of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use from a point near San Juan del Norte, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean, they mutually engage to enter into negotiations with each other to settle the plan and the agreements, in detail, found necessary to accomplish the construction and to provide for the ownership and control of the proposed canal.

And they go further, to clinch the bargain:

> And preliminary to such future negotiations it is forthwith agreed that the course of said canal and the terminals thereof shall be the same that were stated in a treaty signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and Great Britain on February 5, 1900, and now pending in the Senate of the United States for confirmation, and that the provisions of the same shall be adhered to by the United States and Costa Rica.
> In witness whereof the undersigned have signed this protocol and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Mr. President, the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which was referred to in that agreement, was then pending in the Senate of the United States for ratification. It was amended. It was not changed except in words. The Hay-Pauncefote treaty repealed or superseded essentially and absolutely every single feature of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty—every one. After the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is ratified, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is as dead and as thoroughly dispensed with as if it had never existed.

We amended it to make the language clear by saying that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty superseded the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and that is all we did, except that we dissented from a provision of that treaty—in the third article I think it was—which invited the different governments of the world to accede or adhere to that treaty—become parties to it—as if they had been signatory parties in the first instance. That was an outside proposition. I have never yet heard a man suggest that Great Britain was not anxious to get rid of that provision—was not pleased with getting rid of it—because the powers who agreed to adhere or might be permitted to adhere to that treaty would become in effect signatory parties to it, and Great Britain did not want to have a canal under a treaty arrangement to which Russia and herself were both parties.

Anybody who understands British history and British enterprise and Russian history and enterprise, and the friction between those two Governments, would understand at once that Great Britain would not prefer to have a treaty with Russia about a canal in which Russia had as much voice and control as she had. So whatever objection Great Britain may have to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, or to the amendments put upon it by the Senate, the objection does not reach that point, I am quite satisfied, and everybody else ought to be, it seems to me.

But how do we know what are the British objections? When has Great Britain signified an objection? Not at all. The time for the ratification of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty expired, and thereupon the Government had a new negotiation for the extension of the period for the ratification of the treaty. To what time did they fix that? The 4th of March, 1901. It never dawned upon me until these recent proceedings in the last ten or twelve days what was the object of putting it on the 4th day of March, 1901. It was that this Congress should adjourn, and that the other side of the Chamber, or whoever is leading the opposition, should have an argument in their favor of stating that the 4th day of March must arrive before we will feel at liberty to act for the United States Government.

Did the President feel that way at the time he entered into this agreement with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, last December? Why did he make an agreement with Nicaragua and Costa Rica that was directly in the teeth of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty? This agreement as much violates the Clayton-Bulwer treaty—far more than the Hepburn bill—as if we were to pass an act here that notwithstanding the Clayton-Bulwer treaty we would proceed to erect the canal in obedience to American sentiment, on American ground, and in the assertion of American rights.

The President of the United States went to the right source. He went to the owners of the property. He went to Nicaragua and Costa Rica, the sovereign Republics that own this route for the Nicaragua Canal, and proposed to them, "I will not stand back for the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. I will pay no attention to it." That treaty is said to prevent the United States from doing what?

From acquiring from Nicaragua and Costa Rica the right to the control of such portion of the territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to construct and protect a canal of depth and capacity sufficient for the passage of vessels of the greatest tonnage, etc., from a point near San Juan del Norte on the Caribbean Sea via Lake Nicaragua to Brito on the Pacific Ocean. He copied that language out of the Hepburn bill, for that is the language of the Hepburn bill. He took it to Nicaragua and Costa Rica and said, "Make an agreement with me;" and when we undertake to pass the Hepburn bill we are told that it violates the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. If it does, why does not the same language in this agreement violate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty?

Now, the President of the United States, knowing the situation, copying his language out of the Hepburn bill, took it to these two little Republics and got them to consent, under hand and seal, that he might have the privileges for the United States that are contained in the Hepburn bill, in the very language in which they are put in these protocols.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DANIEL. Is not the whole agreement hypothetical and based upon authority from Congress?

Mr. MORGAN. This agreement?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. And therefore does not that answer all of his propositions?

Mr. MORGAN. Suppose it does?

Mr. DANIEL. Does it not answer the proposition the Senator makes? Does not that explain the action of the President in entering into the agreement? Is it not a prospective thing, conditioned upon action by Congress?

Mr. MORGAN. It is. Would the President make an agreement of that sort unless he expected Congress to carry it into effect?

Mr. DANIEL. Then a treaty was pending, and it might by this time have been operative between the two Governments, by which the conditions that then existed and that now exist were anticipated to be relieved by the adoption of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. It does not make any difference under this contract what becomes of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty or what becomes of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Here is an agreement made by the President of the United States that when he is authorized by law to acquire control——

Mr. DANIEL. He has not been authorized by law, and it was not contemplated that he would be authorized by law while those difficulties were under way, but it was anticipated that they would soon be removed.

Mr. MORGAN. What I am trying to get now and what I suppose the Senator from Virginia is not willing we should have is that legal authority to him to complete that contract. Now, if the Senator from Virginia is opposed to granting his consent for the President of the United States to complete that contract, then we know where to find him. He is against the canal.

Mr. DANIEL. I think we ought to wait until the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is disposed of. That is my proposition.

Mr. MORGAN. That comes very properly from a Democrat, that the President of the United States has been in too big a hurry in making this.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not think he was in too big a hurry. I think he anticipated that it would be relieved, and I think the country anticipated that; but it has happened that it has not. I think he had his mind directed to an anticipated condition of things, and the anticipated condition has not yet arisen.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to ask him what is in the way to-day?

Mr. DANIEL. I think the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is in the way to-day.

Mr. MORGAN. And the refusal to ratify the Hay-Pauncefote treaty?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. MORGAN. Was it not in the way when the President made this contract?

Mr. DANIEL. It was, but it was anticipated that it would be relieved; but the anticipation has not been realized, and that is the whole matter.

Mr. MORGAN. It has not been relieved?

Mr. DANIEL. It has not, in my judgment.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the Senator from Virginia wants this matter stopped until we can hear from Great Britain?

Mr. DANIEL. I do.

Mr. MORGAN. When do you expect to hear from Great Britain?

Mr. DANIEL. I know the Senator from Alabama knows as much about that as I do, but I think after we have negotiated with a coprincipal in such a matter as this, it is not becoming the United States to break off the negotiations while the two parties are together consulting about it. I do not think that we are free to break off a negotiation about a matter of treaty until the matter has been solved and we can act with our eyes open. That is my judgment about it.

Mr. MORGAN. There is not a man in the world, in my judgment, who can find a safe ground to stand on in the assertion here that the Hepburn bill or this protocol conflicts in the slightest degree with any British right secured under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me for a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I want to ask the Senator from Alabama if there was anything in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, as submitted to the Senate, that indicated an abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty at all. That was put in after the treaty came to the Senate. It was an amendment of the Senate itself. I——

Mr. DANIEL. By operation of law.

Mr. MONEY. Not by operation of law. Parts of it were not in contradiction.

Mr. MORGAN. In my judgment, as I stated it here to-night, and I repeat it, and I think I can establish it beyond question——

Mr. CULLOM. We on this side can not hear anything at all except conversation.

Mr. MORGAN. In my judgment, as I have stated heretofore, and I repeat it, there is nothing in the language of the Hepburn bill, copied into this agreement, that in the slightest degree interferes with whatever demands Great Britain may see proper to urge against us under the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and it is my opinion that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty absolutely expunged, in legal effect, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. DANIEL. But it has not been adopted. That argument may be made by the Senator when the Hay-Pauncefote treaty has been adopted; but it has not been adopted.

Mr. MORGAN. It has been adopted, so far as the Senate is concerned.

Mr. DANIEL. I think not. It is only a proposition from the Senate, which does not bind it or the other side until both minds concur. No contract is a contract until two minds concur.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senate has made no proposition. The Senate has submitted no negotiation to Great Britain.

Mr. DANIEL. I thought it had.

Mr. MORGAN. No; it has not. It can not do it, and that is one of the reasons why Great Britain is said by the newspapers to object to the Senate amendments.

Mr. DANIEL. The President and Senate together have.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement, and not get unhappy?

Mr. DANIEL. I am not unhappy at all.

Mr. MORGAN. Great Britain, we are informed by the newspapers, objects to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty being superseded because the proposition comes from the Senate, which is not a negotiating body; that the Senate is negotiating. It has no right to negotiate. What we have to do is to act upon what the President sends to us, and ratify or reject or amend. That is all we can do. Then it is for the President to do what he pleases about it. He is the diplomatic functionary of the United States, and not the Senate. The President of the Senate would look like a clown if he were to go out under a resolution of the Senate for the purpose of conducting a negotiation with Great Britain. He has no right to do it.

No, sir; the President of the United States at the time he put this proposition in his protocol did two things. He determined, if words are to be interpreted in their ordinary, natural signification, that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty did not stand in the way of his right to make this contract, and he determined also that the Congress of the United States could empower him to make the contract.

There is another party concerned in this protocol of agreement. There are two other States, and they insisted evidently that the Congress of the United States should bind this Government to this business, and that it should not be a fast and loose agreement, as the President or the diplomatic circles of this country might choose to deal with this very important and, to them, vital question. They required that when the President of the United States is authorized by law they will make this contract. What becomes of that part of the contract which takes place forthwith? They did not wait for a law on that. That part of the contract only which relates to the acquisition of rights do they refer to the legislative department.

The entire amendment here is put up so that when he makes this contract it is to be ratified and approved, if it is a contract, by the Congress, and if it is a treaty, to be ratified and approved by the Senate of the United States, so as to bring the subject back here and let the real rulers of this country—the political rulers, to say the least—the legislative rulers, and the treaty-making rulers have a voice in this business. No, sir; there is no escaping from it. The President of the United States knew perfectly well when he made that agreement that Costa Rica and Nicaragua confided in his power to make the part of it which is to be acted upon immediately; that part which operates forthwith. They did not wait for Congress to enable him to do anything. The case is too plain, Mr. President, for discussion.

I stated that I had not the opportunity personally of ascertaining the views of the President about this, but I take him on what he has written and what he has signed and what he has sealed and what he has delivered to these two little Republics, and he did exactly right. He acted within the limits of his right and power. He acted on that occasion boldly and manfully in favor of American rights, and we ought to sustain him in it. If there is some party reason why he wants to withdraw from it now, he ought to let it be known. He ought to come out and avow it before the world and tell us, "I drew that agreement, it is very true, signed and sealed and delivered it, but I am ready to abandon it and go away from it because Great Britain shakes her head at me." I do not want to see our President in that sort of an attitude.

I spoke of the painful situation of being cut off, by my being a Democrat, from the right to go to the President of the United States and advise him about the policies of his Administration in regard to this canal. If I had to advise him or his political friends to-night as to the policy that would relieve them from many a trouble, I would say, "Gentlemen, come up and declare that you have the right to build this canal as an American Congress, and that you intend to do it. Do not admit that in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty you gave away to Great Britain your power even to negotiate with Nicaragua and Costa Rica. Make no admission to the effect that you have emasculated the Government of the United States, so that we can not make a negotiation with Costa Rica or Nicaragua without getting British consent."

Mr. President, I will take occasion to say that I have as much respect for Great Britain as any man on this floor, so far as I have ever heard any expression. I have never uttered an ill-natured word against Great Britain on this floor, except when she was trying to gouge us, and I would utter ill-natured words against any country in the world that would try to do that. I have made no complaint on this floor about the modus vivendi in Alaska. It may be a good thing. I made none about the modus vivendi with Great Britain about the eastern shore fisheries. That was a good thing. I made no complaint about Great Britain and the United States being in coalition and working shoulder to shoulder in China, even though it has resulted in the chopping off of heads and staining whatever treaties may be made hereafter with human blood.

I have done nothing of that kind; and when that grand and pure woman, who in her womanly qualities was far grander than she was a queen or empress, died, I had the honor to draft the resolutions in honor of her memory here, and the Senator from Massachusetts asked me if I would not turn them over to the Senator from Iowa and let him offer them. I did so. Why did I do it? Because I did not want to make myself conspicuous about it, and he did want to make the Senator from Iowa conspicuous.

I drew that Davis report, the whole of it, and yet when it came out of that committee it came with Senator Davis's name at the head of it. I did not object. I was glad of it. That was called by the Democratic papers of the country a pro-British document. Mr. Davis was pounced upon for the doctrines and the propositions that were contained there and accused by the Democrats of being a British worshiper because he dared to say that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was still in force; and everybody knows it.

But, Mr. President, I have not on any occasion in the Senate of the United States attempted to make myself conspicuous by arraigning the British people or the British Government or sentiment. So I propose and I am willing always to deal fairly with them. But I know, sir, as well as you know, and every Senator on this floor, that Great Britain is reaping a harvest out of the fact that we have not built that canal, which is absolutely incalculable in its advantages.

First of all, she has $50,000,000 in the Suez Canal, and she gets 18 per cent per annum dividends upon it. Next, that stock is worth 740 and more than that on the Bourse in Paris and on the Exchange at London. Does she want that proposition crippled by the enterprise of a rival like the Nicaragua Canal? Does she not know that as we get from there 10,000 miles of advantage of her in her dealing from Liverpool with the nations along the Pacific Ocean, we will transfer the trade, or a large part of the the trade, from Liverpool to New York? Does she not know that?

And if she can postpone us for two years longer and build a canal that General Hains thinks it will take ten years to build—for here is his report before us to-day—if she can get two years advantage upon this, it is worth millions and millions of dollars and will cost us three or four times the money that would be required to build this canal. She wants delay, and they have managed in every way in the world to get it. Putting that last agreement on the 4th day of March meant exactly what is meant by the objection made here to-night—that we intend to give Great Britain two years more lease of this life.

Mr. President, I am not surprised at that coming from Boston. Their interests are so wrapped up with the British people that they do not know the difference between them. But it strikes me it is time that the people of this country should have some regard for our own affairs, and particularly those who have an interest in bringing the great West and the great East together through this channel of navigation that belongs to the people. It strikes me that we ought to be a little active about this matter. Here we have been hanging on, and I have been trying to pass the canal bill through the Senate for sixteen years, and the present occupant of the chair stated that he began this thing twenty-six years ago.

Now, in the name of common sense, why is it that the American people have tolerated this indifference on the part of the United States Government? Has it been the Clayton-Bulwer treaty that all that time has hovered over us to paralyze our energies and to alarm our apprehensions? If so, it is just as necessary that we should get rid of it as it would be to get rid of an invading army that comes into our ports.

And yet we hesitate, yet we halt; and here the other day, when the President of the Senate ruled that the Nicaragua bill was the regular order before the Senate and when I asked that it might be set aside by unanimous consent, without prejudice to its rights, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who presided to-night and stated this question against me, rose in the Senate of the United States to make his objection. And to-night after he had decided the question he took it upon himself to say that he would hear me if I would be a little brief about it. That was not his language, but he said that he would hear me within the limits of reasonable debate. "Within the limits of reasonable debate," after he had transferred the question to this august body, to whom I appealed at the time!

Now, Mr. President, I recur to the subject that I was on before, and that is the extreme delicacy I have been placed in about this matter. It is something that I do not intend to stand any longer. I am not going to have myself hampered as a member of this Senate by a relation to the Republican party which excludes me from all counsel which enabled them to take advantage of every possible opportunity to defeat the measure that was reported here by a Republican committee. They aim it at me because I am a Democrat, and they do not want the bill to pass under the supervision of a Democrat. I have been feeling this a long time, and I wish to bring the situation right out before the country.

So January 12, 1901, after having borne this thing as long as I could, after having tried in every possible way that a man could to move this great measure to the front, I addressed the following letter to Mr. ALLISON, who is the chairman of the steering committee here in the Senate, a man who has the control, or his committee has the control, of all the party operations on that side of the Chamber:

JANUARY 12, 1901.

DEAR MR. ALLISON: When you think of the painful position in which I am placed with reference to the Hepburn canal bill, I am convinced that the committee on the order of business, of which you are the chairman, will relieve me from it, as you can, by informing me whether or not that measure will be placed on the list of bills to be considered at this session, and whether it will receive the support of the Republican party in the Senate, or a majority thereof.

I am, by the courtesy of the Republican party, the chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, the majority of the committee being Republicans.

That committee recommend the passage of the Hepburn bill, no member of it dissenting, and have stated, carefully and forcibly, the grounds for pressing its passage on a full review of all the facts that might call for further delay—

That means these facts relating to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty—

This makes it my duty to press for the consideration of the Hepburn bill; and I am fully satisfied that if the vote of the Republicans in the Senate is not controlled by the action of the committee on the order of business the Senate would proceed to consider the bill as against any measure except an appropriation bill.

In this I may be overconfident, but I can not be mistaken as to my duty, under ordinary circumstances, to demand a vote on taking up the bill for consideration.

The only thing that could relieve me of this duty, for which the country will hold me severely accountable, is the fact that, being a Democrat at the head of a Republican committee, I owe that party the courtesy of noninterference with its wishes as to the measures they prefer to press for consideration.

I am opposed to the subsidy bill, but I will not antagonize it with the canal bill if your "steering committee" will make it the regular order of business next after the subsidy bill, and if that measure is pressed to a conclusion within a reasonable time. If the Republican party prefers to assume the responsibility that rests so heavily and awkwardly upon me, and will so advise me, I will cheerfully resign the chairmanship of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and state my reasons to the country.

Then I will have the right of a Senator to urge the canal bill without incurring the censure of holding a position of influence under the courtesy of the Republican party and using it to antagonize their party policy. I am thus deeply concerned about this matter, because a delay in passing the bill beyond this Congress will put the canal in extreme peril. I could point out the danger, if it is desired, but prefer not to do so on paper, or before anyone except the true and tried friends of the canal,

It is not supposable by a man of your experience that $200,000 is not a sufficient temptation to excite every evil machination. Please advise me at the earliest convenience of your committee, frankly and decisively, upon what I may rely as to the course of your party in this matter. At the last session of Congress I was postponed without being answered, when I made a similar oral request, and was voted down by a party vote when I tried to call up the bill. The measure suffered because I was thus handicapped with the silence of the "steering committee." If it is to suffer again I respectfully insist that it shall be through their open antagonism.

With sincere regard,

JOHN T. MORGAN.

The Senator from Iowa made the following reply:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1901.

DEAR SENATOR MORGAN: Your letter of the 12th instant relating to the Nicaragua Canal bill, now pending in the Senate, was duly received. I understand the purport of your letter to be that you desire us to fix in the order of business the canal bill next to what is known as the ship-subsidy bill, the latter having been made the order of business by a vote of the Senate early in December.

The committee considered this question of the order of business before the holidays and recommended that the ship-subsidy bill be made the order of business, there being at that time no order of business provided for in the Senate at the opening of the session by resolution or vote hitherto held, except that the canal bill was made a special order for the second Monday of the session.

When the committee recommended this order of business it did so with the qualification that the bill for the increase of the Army, all appropriation bills, and the bill for the reduction of internal-revenue taxes should all be considered when ready, and that the ship-subsidy bill should give way for them. At that time it was understood that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, so called, should be taken up in executive session at an early day and disposed of, as it was believed that the disposal of this treaty would naturally precede the consideration of the canal bill. The treaty was amended by the Senate in two or three particulars, and these amendments have been submitted to Great Britain.

The committee on the order of business, in response to your request, met and considered the subject of now fixing an order for the consideration of the canal bill as suggested in your letter. The committee, after full consideration, believed that it would not be expedient or wise to fix a day for the consideration of the canal bill, in view of the fact that the amendments to the treaty are now under consideration by Great Britain, and that proper international comity required that reasonable time should be given for such consideration before further action should be taken by the Senate.

The committee therefore concluded that it would be premature to now fix a day for the consideration of the canal bill, and so recommended to the conference of Republicans held this morning, and after fair consideration of the subject by the conference the view of the committee was approved without division. I should add, however, that a universal sentiment was expressed in favor of the construction of the canal by the United States at the earliest practicable time.

The action of the Republicans thus far taken will certainly relieve you from any personal responsibility as respects the time when the canal bill shall be taken up, and places the responsibility for the fixing of a time practically upon the Republican side of the Senate. I am, with great respect and with sincere regard,

Yours, truly,

W. B. ALLISON.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN, United States Senate.

Now we know where the responsibility is. We know where it rests—with the Republican party; and we understand perfectly well that the Republican party is still hanging on to the hope of two years' delay of any action whatever upon the canal, growing out of the fact that the second agreement between Great Britain and the United States for the exchange of ratifications makes the date of taking effect on the 4th day of March, the termination of this session, so there would be no possibility of doing anything at this session of Congress.

Mr. President, I have discharged my duty about that, and I have discharged my duty toward this canal. Hereafter it is the Republican committee under Republican control, and I shall very gladly give them the control and management of it so far as I am concerned as chairman. I have tried to do my duty to the country here, and I have been checked and balked by objections coming from the other side of the Chamber to prevent the canal bill from being taken up under all circumstances, these very men professing all the time, as the Senator from Iowa does in his letter here, that they are great friends of the canal and want the bill to pass.

Mr. President, I can not believe it. The President may be a friend of the canal and may want this amendment passed, so far as I know. I have tried to find out whether that is so or not, and to get somebody to rise on the other side and state that he was not. He can not but be, without putting on a garb that I never heard of his wearing before—a garb of deception and hypocrisy.

Now, the question is whether or not this canal amendment is new legislation and whether there is any exception in the sixteenth article of the rules which takes it out of the operation of that objection, if the objection exists at all, which it does not. This section has been read so often that I almost dread the necessity of having to put it in the RECORD again, but as a part of my remarks it ought to go in:

1. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

If the question of relevancy had been made, it would be the duty of the Chair to submit it to the Senate without debate, but the question which is made here is that it is general legislation.

Now, Mr. President, can it be held, construing the different clauses of Rule XVI together, that a proposition made to carry out a treaty is general legislation? Here is a specific treaty entered into by the Government of the United States, and here is an amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. Has the protocol, or what the Senator calls a treaty, ever been communicated to the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. It has not by official act. Does the Senator want to know how that occurred?

Mr. DANIEL. I want to know the fact whether or not the treaty was ever before us and if we have any right to take cognizance of it?

Mr. MORGAN. If it were an executive session of the Senate, the Senator would know whether it was taken cognizance of.

I had better clear that point, for every once in a while it rises. These protocols were sent to me by the Secretary of State. I did not know that they were in existence. Very kindly and graciously he informed me of their existence, I suppose because I was chairman of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and he supposed, no doubt—he must have supposed—it would have very great effect upon the action of the committee. When the treaty came up for consideration in the executive session I wrote to Mr. Hay asking him if I was at liberty to present these protocols to the Senate. He first replied to me that one of them had not been signed, and the other had not, but that the minister had telegraphed his Government for leave to sign it and it would be signed very soon. Soon after that he writes to me as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 10, 1900.

MY DEAR SENATOR MORGAN: Referring to my former letter, I now have to inform you that I have communicated with the ministers of Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and they have both authorized me to use my discretion in regard to complying with your request.

Which was that I should lay them before the Senate.

You are therefore at liberty to make such use of the copy of the protocols which I handed you as your own judgment may dictate.

I am, sir, with great esteem, sincerely yours,

JOHN HAY.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senate.

I suppose there will now be no further question made about that. The President of the United States could not properly have sent those protocols to the Senate for confirmation and ratification.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator spoke of them as a treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. I do speak of them as a treaty. There are treaties that are concluded, and there are treaties that are being negotiated, and there are treaties that are partially concluded, and they are still all a treaty.

Perhaps a more correct term would be a convention in this case, inasmuch as it is uncertain yet whether the final act was to be consummated by a treaty or simply by a compact or a contract. I speak of it as a concluded agreement between two governments through their ambassadors, signed, sealed, and delivered. That is how I speak of it. If that is not a treaty, Mr. President, I do not know what is. It may not be a treaty that has been ratified as yet; and the amendment I propose says that if the final act which is provided for and stipulated for here is done by treaty it must come to the Senate; if done by contract, it must come to the Congress of the United States.

We now understand how this matter stands. The President of the United States is bound to Costa Rica and Nicaragua to go on and complete that negotiation, provided we will permit him to do so by passing an act authorizing him, as the contract provides shall be done.

Now, there is a specific transaction, standing by itself, differing from all other transactions in the United States; a transaction that in its present shape and form concerns only the Government of the United States and the Governments of these two other Republics. When we undertake to legislate to give the authority that the President of the United States requires in this agreement so that we may go on and perfect the negotiations, then of course it must come to Congress in some form for ultimate acceptance or rejection.

What we are doing now is not general legislation in the general sense of the word, but it is a treaty from which we are deriving our authority, signed, sealed, and delivered by the President of the United States and these two Republics, out of which grows the right and duty to ask Congress to give him the authority, and that is all this amendment proposes to do. It is true that there is a $10,000,000 appropriation there. I am indifferent about that, but I put it in merely for the sake of furnishing the President the money to pay the expenses of the completion of this negotiation, if he wishes to do it.

But, Mr. President, suppose, now, with this agreement standing here, Great Britain should come in and say to Nicaragua and Costa Rica, "We have got as much right to make a contract with you as the United States has," and certainly they have, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty to the contrary notwithstanding. We never will quote the Clayton-Bulwer treaty to cut off that right. Suppose she were to do so, what would we do? We would say to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, "You are bound to us for a reasonable time, until we can get the authority from Congress that is provided for in this agreement, and Great Britain can not be permitted to come in and interfere and take our contract, as she once did in Nicaragua, and detained us for ten years, or nearly that long, in getting a treaty from Nicaragua exactly a copy of the one she had made with Nicaragua.

Suppose she would come to Nicaragua and Costa Rica and say to them, "Make the same agreement with us that you have made with the United States." Costa Rica and Nicaragua would not dare to do it until this thing happened that is going to happen to-night, I suppose. Congress has refused to legislate; then they are foot loose. "Congress has refused to give the President the power that is provided for in these contracts, and having refused, we are released from our obligation." That is all of it.

So the action of Congress to-night in refusing to pass this amendment is a release and surrender to Nicaragua and Costa Rica of the whole terms of the protocol; and now, if it could be established that the President of the United States, in order to get out of an honest bargain with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, had intervened and asked us not to do it, he would be on the footing of any other man who would provide means by which his contract should be broken by some indirection in order to escape its consequences.

There is the situation we are placing him in; and if he is here moving the Senators on the other side to do this thing, that is the situation he is placing himself in; and the country is not going to be slow to judge of a man who will make a contract with another nation and then come and ask his party friends to relieve him from the responsibilities of it.

Now, Mr. President, I have not any doubt about this business at all, that we have the right to enter upon this legislation. It is not general legislation, or even if it was general legislation in one sense, that is that it affects everybody in the United States, and in the world, for that matter, still it is legislation that arises out of a treaty stipulation. The rule was not intended to apply alone to treaties that had been concluded. This Senate must take notice of one thing, they will very soon have to deal with it.

In conditions that have arisen in the world and in reference to citizens of the United States we have entered China with invading forces, naval and military, and while I have not any criticisms at all to pass upon the President of the United States for the part he has taken there, I feel bound, and I think every Senator here must feel bound, by that treaty which he made in conjunction with the powers of Europe, demanding of China that they should do certain things as a preliminary to certain other things relating to compensation, indemnity, and future relations. What were those preliminary things? Mr. President, they may have been indispensable, they may have been highly necessary, they may have been very important, and to say the least of them, they were very unusual, and in the estimate of the American citizen very cruel.

I do not know what court tried these Chinamen. I do not know the legal tribunal recognized by the United States, whether in China or here, that found them guilty. They seem to have been condemned by a universal court-martial, and condemned without trial, for the demand that was made was not that they should be tried and convicted and then executed if found guilty, but that they should be executed without trial. That has been done.

Are we bound by those acts? Yes, we are. We are bound by those acts; and if we are not, we are bound to impeach the President for having performed them. If he was a red-handed murderer, cutting off the heads of Chinamen, or if it was done under his order, he is a red-handed murderer, unless the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States give him that authority.

But I acquit him of all that. More than that, I praise him for his diligence and the skill and tact with which this matter has been conducted; and although it has resulted in the death of Chinese princes—it makes no difference whether they were princes or not, but human beings, in the presence of the Army of the United States and of other nations of the earth, drawn up in military array to witness that beheading—although that has been done, Mr. President, I have no blame for the President of the United States, for it seems to me, after all, to have been an act of supreme justice.

But are we going to back off from it because there was no treaty ratified by the Senate? Who has ever seen the treaty under which these Chinese men have been killed? To whom has it been communicated? What are the relations between China and the United States to-day respecting that great protocol, and it seems the great treaty that is to follow, which has been executed in such a bloody and disastrous way?

While we are doing things of that sort, Mr. President, do not let us try to escape from honorable obligations to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, based upon mutual considerations, on the ground that it is not a ratified treaty and can not be ratified. By the very terms of the agreement the President could not act under it; he could not submit it to the Senate of the United States until we first authorized him to make it.

If that is general legislation on an appropriation bill, then I think I have no just conception of the rule, and, Mr. President, I will leave the subject, after what I have said, to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to move to strike out from the bill the paragraph in regard to the $100,000 appropriation for the memorial bridge over the Potomac River. I think that technically that has been——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pardon the Chair. The question before the Senate is the appeal entered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. I beg pardon of the Chair. I thought that had been disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been disposed of. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the yeas and nays on that, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I have not a general, but a liberal pair, as we call it, with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES]. On this question, however, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], but I have arranged with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to transfer pairs, so that the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] will stand paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). If agreeable to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], and both the Senator from Wyoming and I can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] that we transfer our pairs, so that the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] may stand paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]; which will enable the Senator from Alabama and myself to vote.

Mr. MORGAN. That is entirely agreeable to me, and I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. I inquire if he has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Nebraska has not voted.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I shall have to withhold my vote, unless it be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. MONEY (after having voted in the negative). I find, Mr. President, that an arrangement has already been made to transfer the pair of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from West Virginia has not voted.

Mr. CHILTON. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—36.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hawley,	Martin,
Allen,	Daniel,	Hoar,	Platt, Conn.
Allison,	Dillingham,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,
Bard,	Dolliver,	Kean,	Scott,
Beveridge,	Fairbanks,	Kearns,	Sewell,
Carter,	Frye,	Lindsay,	Shoup,
Chandler,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Simon,
Clark,	Hanna,	McComas,	Warren,
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	McMillan,	Wetmore.

NAYS—16.

Bacon,	Clay,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Berry,	Heitfeld,	Nelson,	Sullivan,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,	Taliaferro,
Clapp,	Mallory,	Pettus,	Teller.

NOT VOTING—36.

Baker,	Foraker,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Foster,	Mason,	Spooner,
Burrows,	Hale,	Money,	Thurston,
Caffery,	Harris,	Penrose,	Tillman,
Chilton,	Kenney,	Perkins,	Turley,
Culberson,	Kyle,	Platt, N. Y.	Turner,
Deboe,	McBride,	Pritchard,	Vest,
Depew,	McCumber,	Quarles,	Wellington,
Elkins,	McEnery,	Quay,	Wolcott.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment in relation to the memorial bridge across the Potomac River was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, beginning in line 22, on page 107, relating to the memorial bridge across the Potomac River was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire if I can make the point of order on that amendment at this time? Has it been estimated for by any Department? If I can make the point of order, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The vote by which the amendment was adopted must first be reconsidered.

Mr. HOAR. The amendment was adopted in my absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to think that the Senator might do so when the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I thought perhaps I might do it now.

Mr. DANIEL. I did not hear what the Chair stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator from Massachusetts might make the motion when the bill is in the Senate, the amendment having already been adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I take it there is no question but what the Senator can make the point of order in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has stated that it might be done in the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I give notice that I shall enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the subsidy was given to St. Louis, Buffalo, and Charleston.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts move to reconsider the amendment to which he has referred?

Mr. HOAR. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 107, relating to the memorial bridge across the Potomac River, was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that will not be done. I do not think that amendment ought to be reconsidered.

Mr. HOAR. It was passed inadvertently, and the point of order was not made.

Mr. STEWART. It has not been very inadvertently done. It is a matter which has been pending a great many years.

Mr. HOAR. My attention was not drawn to it at the time it was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Nevada will allow me, it has not been the custom of the Senate on the sundry civil bill to refuse to reconsider anything which was passed in the absence of a Senator who expected to oppose it.

Mr. STEWART. Of course, I do not want to take any advantage of the absence of the Senator, and I will not oppose the reconsideration of the amendment; but I want a fair vote on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope that this amendment may not be reconsidered. It is a subject which has been dealt with on the sundry civil bill, I think, for some fourteen years. The bridge has been recommended by everyone who has dealt with it without dissent anywhere—by a board of accomplished engineers, civil and military, by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, by the Secretary of War, and in a message of the President of the United States. It has never been before the Senate but that the Senate has favored it by a decisive vote. The matter has been under long and thorough advisement, and has been investigated in every aspect. It has gone under repeated consideration, and always with favorable results.

I would not take advantage of the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts to insist upon anything upon which he desired to be heard, but he can be heard upon his motion to reconsider. I do not see that it would be taking advantage of him to allow this amendment to remain in the position which, under the recommendation of the committee, it has obtained by the action of the Senate; nor do I perceive the motive for moving a reconsideration. The Senator will have an opportunity in the Senate, if he desires to do so, to have another vote on this amendment, and it seems to me that that is the proper and usual course to pursue.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wanted to get at it at the earliest time, and not to come in perhaps to-morrow morning.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator can speak to it now.

Mr. HOAR. Although the Senate is in a hurry to get through, I will state, if the Senator will allow me, my views on this matter, whether the Senate agrees to them or not.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, there is not a more thoroughly earnest and hearty advocate of this memorial bridge on this continent than I am. It has been a very favorite plan and scheme of mine from the beginning. I expect to support it heartily and with all my might, if such support will do it any good; but a plan was agreed on somewhere, or proposed, which has excited, I think, very extensive and almost universal disapprobation from the architects and experts on that subject throughout the country, although, of course, there may be some difference of opinion regarding it. Other plans have been proposed for building this bridge, one of which certainly seems to me much preferable. I think Keller is the name of the architect who conceived the plan; and it seems to me to be a much finer design than the one here proposed.

This is not a plan to begin the construction of the bridge at a cost of millions of dollars. The amendment appropriates $100,000, and pretty much all that can be done with $100,000 is to commit this Government to one particular plan. It is putting into the power of one man, to wit, the Secretary of War—a very competent and able gentleman, as we all know, for his high duties, though what particular skill he has in dealing with questions of architecture I do not know; but I do not wish to question it, for he is a man of such general capacity that he would be likely to have capacity in that direction—it is putting into his hands a matter that ought to be submitted to more than one judgment. One hundred thousand dollars will just commit us to one scheme, and nothing else. That is all there is of it. There is no practical advance in the construction of the bridge by this appropriation.

Here is a bridge which ought to be the most superb structure of the kind on the face of the earth. It is to be, undoubtedly, the most costly structure of the kind on the face of the earth: it is to live a thousand years; it is to outlast the architecture of Rome in its duration; it is, as we hope and believe, to be in undiminished and unimpaired magnificence and beauty, even if the time shall come which Macaulay so eloquently depicted, when some traveler from New Zealand takes his seat on some broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's.

I do not think we ought to commit the United States to a plan of $100,000, or to do anything which will carry out one plan and not another. If this proposition can be so amended as to distinctly provide that nothing shall be done toward the structure which shall commit the Government to one plan for a bridge rather than another, I shall be entirely content. If reconsideration takes place, I should like to move that amendment and to have the vote and the discussion on that. That is my reason for taking this course, and that will, I think, remove any necessity, if the Senate is now of that way of thinking, for any debate at all.

I do not want to interfere with that bridge. It has been from the time when I first heard the suggestion a plan dear to my heart, and I should be willing, if it were necessary, to double the proposed sum which was suggested a Congress or two ago. I do not think we should pause to count millions if the expenditure of millions will get the most superb work of art in the world.

There is nothing like a great bridge for architectural possibilities. Every Senator is familiar with the beauty—the noble, severe, and simple beauty—of one bridge which already exists in this neighborhood, and which, I believe, owes its origin to the taste and genius of the then Secretary of War, Mr. Jefferson Davis. Whatever else may be said in regard to that gentleman in other matters, he was a great public benefactor and contributor to the ornamental in the country when he directed the noble and simple grandeur of the Cabin John Bridge.

The proposed memorial bridge is to commemorate the Union restored; it is to connect the great sections of the country, now united and cemented in an imperishable friendship and affection, which was once for a brief time estranged. It is to last to that time, which my honorable friend from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] so eloquently and magnificently depicted in our hearing the other day in the centennial celebration, when he said to his countrymen words which never will fail to be remembered, that this country was to last to an epoch when even the differences which existed in the period of secession or the differences in regard to the Philippine Islands, or the other questions which seemed so great to their contemporaries, become petty and trivial and almost contemptible in the view of time and before the greatness and grandeur of the country.

The memorial bridge is to be the great architectural structure commemorative of the greatest occurrence, as Americans fondly think, of the world's history, and that is the united and restored and cemented and eternal affection and union which is to exist hereafter between the two sections of this country.

Let us make no mistake; let no man, whether he travel from New Zealand or elsewhere from the ends of the earth, go away with a sneer or a disparagement or an objection after seeing the noble and faultless symmetry of that noble structure.

I do not want to count the cost; I do not want to hurry; I do not want to make a mistake; and I do not want to put into an appropriation bill, therefore, an appropriation for a hundred thousand dollars, which is only to be effective, not in advancing the work by a week or an hour, not in beginning the work in any serious fashion, but only in committing us to what may prove to be a great architectural mistake.

If the Senator from Virginia is willing to let this be reconsidered and to have a provision instructing the Secretary of War to make this expenditure, if it be necessary, in any fashion which will not commit us unnecessarily to any particular plan, I am content; otherwise, I shall press my opposition, and I shall submit to the Chair my question of order.

Mr. ALLISON. This provision relating to the memorial bridge, as it now stands in the bill, was the work, practically, of the Committee on Appropriations. The original amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia on this subject did commit us absolutely to a plan for the construction of this bridge, or rather two or three plans, any one of which might be selected under the provisions of the original amendment.

The Committee on Appropriations shared the view of the Senator from Massachusetts. We did not believe that in a structure of this kind we should in the initiative appropriation confine ourselves to a particular plan. We had in mind appropriations which we have made twice for the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek, which is now being constructed, or the appropriation for which has been made, and the appropriations are used for the construction of piers and piers alone. We believed that upon any plan that was likely to be proposed there would necessarily be provided piers, and in committing this work to the Secretary of War we supposed it would be under the direction of the Chief of Engineers.

I think the criticism of the Senator from Massachusetts is right as respects the necessity of a plan for this structure before it is entered upon in detail. I agree to that.

This amendment was read and agreed to last night during the evening session before adjournment, and I stated distintcly then that contested amendments would be passed over. No one contested this amendment at that time. The Senator from Massachusetts was absent. I think it is due to the understanding which we had yesterday, when we commenced the consideration of this bill, that where there is a contested amendment it shall be reconsidered, and I hope that will be done, and then the Senator from Massachusetts can move such amendments as he sees proper. But I would suggest that an amendment be provided here which shall declare that the plans shall be submitted to the Secretary of War and approved by him before any portion of this appropriation is expended.

Mr. HOAR. Or submitted to Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be willing to have them submitted to Congress if necessary. But in order to reach this amendment I suggest that there be no objection to the reconsideration proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me, ought not some of this money be available to pay the engineers and architects for preparing the plans, to be submitted to the Secretary of War?

Mr. ALLISON. I think, very likely. I should be perfectly willing that $10,000 should be used for that purpose.

Mr. McCOMAS. Ten thousand dollars would be sufficient.

Mr. HALE. There is one thing that is very certain, that with all the schemes and plans of the different engineers who have taken an interest in this matter and who submit their own schemes, unless Congress does something now in the way of starting this project it will fall by the wayside, and nothing will be done. If we wait until everybody is satisfied, until everybody has a plan that suits him, or suits the engineer, impresses his mind, we will never have a memorial bridge.

We can make an appropriation now, a small appropriation, and leave it to the judgment of the Secretary of War to elaborate a plan and commence the work and go on with it. But if we put it over to the next session, it will be the same thing that has happened in years past. We shall not satisfy everybody, and we will be older men; we will pass out of public life and nothing will be done about this memorial bridge if we do not do it at once and take some responsibility about it. It is very easy to put it off, and if we do not start it now, and do something in the way of an appropriation, none of us will ever see a memorial bridge.

Mr. HOAR. If the reconsideration takes place that the Senator from Iowa has favored, I will move this amendment, of which I will now give notice:

Provided, That no expenditure shall be made which shall impose the necessity of adopting any particular plan or scheme, and that no such plan or scheme shall be adopted without authority of Congress.

I think that ought to satisfy the committee.

Mr. TELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, that the amendment might be supplemented by the provision outlined by the Senator from Maryland, to wit, that the sum of $10,000 may be used to prepare plans.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope it will not be limited to $10,000.

Mr. HOAR. No; such amount as in the discretion of the Secretary of War is necessary.

Mr. CARTER. Whatever may be regarded necessary by the Secretary of War.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the suggestion that this sum might be used for piers seems to me rather premature. No portion of it could be used for piers until some plan is adopted, and I do not understand how any architect could devise a plan until he had some idea of what Congress is willing to appropriate. One man might get up a very handsome bridge for $3,000,000 and another a very much better one for five, and, possibly, as suggested, for two millions. But I do not believe you can get such a bridge as the Senator from Massachusetts expects this to be without a pretty large expenditure of money.

We have had presented to us quite a number of plans. I do not remember, but I think the most expensive plan was somewhere in the neighborhood of three and a half million dollars. I may be mistaken. I examined it with all the care I could last session. I do not profess to be a judge of those things, but no plan that I have seen is of the character that I think ought to be adopted. They are certainly not such plans as the Senator from Massachusetts expects we are to adopt, and they all of them bore evidence that the architect felt he was restricted by the amount of money he was to use.

I think the wisest thing to do would be to appropriate some money and allow the architects of the country to make their plans, and to make them with an understanding that they were not limited to the absolute necessity of building the bridge. We can build a bridge across there, if that is what we want, for a comparatively small sum of money, a bridge which will be useful; but nobody supposes we are building this bridge simply for its use.

We are building the bridge as a memorial to commemorate a great event, and it is to be used, as I understand, to show the world what can be done in this age in the way of bridge building. It ought to be, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, the finest bridge in the world; and if it is to be a monumental bridge we ought not to say to the engineers, "You must keep this down to two million or two and a half or three million dollars," if they can make such a bridge as we ought to have.

No plan, in my opinion, has yet been presented that ought to be adopted. Every plan, in my opinion, is entirely too low. The bridge will never be an imposing bridge unless it is a high bridge.

The situation of the surrounding country demands that it shall be a bridge of considerable altitude, and all the plans I have seen are entirely too low, I think, from an architectural view.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I was attracted by his observation that as he understood the matter of the plans, the most expensive plan was about $3,000,000. I will say to the Senator that the Burr plan modified contemplates the expenditure of nearly four and a half million dollars. It is something over $4,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. Has that been changed since we had it last year?

Mr. GALLINGER. There are three plans submitted, I will say to the Senator, and the plan that now meets with favor in the Board of Engineers of the War Department is a modification of the two. They have taken a portion of plan No. 2, I think, and made it a part of plan No. 1, and that now is the accepted plan, if I may use that term, and it contemplates the expenditure of nearly four and a half million dollars, I think. I will ask the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN. That is correct. It is nearly four and a half million dollars.

Mr. TELLER. I presume likely there has been some improvement since I saw the plan last year.

Mr. SPOONER. Is this combination plan the plan to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers as having been much criticised?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is. It was criticised by German architects.

Mr. TELLER. It is the plan we had before the committee last year. I do not want to see it adopted, or any of the others. I do not think any of those plans ought to be adopted. The plan that was to cost the most money—I do not remember just what it was—was perhaps the best, but it was not such a plan as we should adopt; and if we are going to go into this, I want to repeat, let us build a bridge that will be a credit, and that all the people of the world will admit is a credit, to the American people.

We have up here 8 or 10 miles the finest stone arch in the world, and we can build a bridge over here, because, as I said, the ground is well calculated to build a fine bridge, taking into consideration the surrounding hills. I hope we will now appropriate only money to get the people who are acquainted with this work to present their plans, and out of it we will adopt something that will be worthy of the American people when they build the bridge.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, this matter is evidently not at all understood in the Senate, and notwithstanding the late hour and the shortness of time at the disposal of the Senate, I must ask the indulgence of the Senate until I can briefly present the matter as I understand it.

The investigation of this subject commenced as far back as 1886. Board after board has got up plans and submitted them. All the plans submitted are of course attacked by those engineers and architects who failed to prove the successful competitors in this matter. With a view to putting an end to this strife over a plan and enabling the country to get a bridge from the city of Washington to the national cemetery and to the other objects of interest on the Arlington estate, an appropriation was made, and the War Department proceeded carefully and deliberately to investigate this subject. They caused borings to be made and other investigations to commence, and reported to Congress that the amount appropriated was insufficient.

Mr. TELLER. How much was it?

Mr. MARTIN. Perhaps $5,000, possibly $10,000. I have not the figures immediately in mind. The last one was $5,000, which I have before me; but there was one at the previous session of Congress, the amount of which I am not entirely certain of.

When the War Department reported that the amount appropriated was insufficient to enable it to secure proper plans for the bridge, another appropriation of $5,000, being the amount asked for by the War Department, was made. The Secretary of War proceeded with the utmost care. He did not open the doors to all the bridge engineers and architects in the United States, but he selected what he considered four of the ablest and most distinguished men in that profession, and he required each one of those four engineers so selected to associate with him an architect to look after the architectural features while the bridge engineer looked after the engineering features, and he called upon these four engineers and architects to submit plans, and then appointed a board to examine the plans so submitted.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Did I correctly understand him when I understood him to say that but four architects in this world were allowed to compete on those plans?

Mr. MARTIN. That is correct; and if any mistake has been made in the matter, it was made there. There has been no other competitor in this matter except Mr. Keller, who has had a plan that he has, in season and out of season, attempted to thrust on the consideration of Congress.

Now, I do not object, understand me, to Mr. Keller's plan. I say if any mistake was made at all, it was in not opening the door wider. I am perfectly willing for it to be opened to Mr. Keller's plans now, and to have the Secretary of War and the Board of Engineers, or any other board that the Secretary of War sees fit to appoint, carefully investigate Mr. Keller's plan, and if it is better than the others, or if it is the best one presented, to have it adopted. I am not wedded to any plan, but I must appeal to the Senate to do something that is practical, to do something that is decisive, to do something that makes some progress in this matter.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] always proclaims his earnest anxiety to have this bridge built, but he is always pulling down what has been done and offers no suggestion that will advance and build up the project about which we are all concerned. This Board of Engineers and architects was appointed by the Secretary of War to consider these plans. It was a board composed of Col. Charles J. Allen, of the Corps of Engineers; Maj. Thomas W. Symons, of the Corps of Engineers, and Capt. David D. Gaillard, of the Corps of Engineers, and Mr. Stanford White, an architect of the city of New York, perhaps as distinguished as any architect in the United States, and Mr. James G. Hill, an architect, and they were ordered to assemble in the city of Washington.

So the plans submitted were subjected to the closest scrutiny by a board consisting of three distinguished engineers of the Army and two distinguished architects, selected by the Secretary of War as a competent board to determine what plan should be adopted for this structure.

While the board had the matter under consideration and before the report was made, the President, in his annual message sent in at the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, used this language:

> Congress at its last session appropriated $5,000 "to enable the Chief of Engineers of the Army to continue the examination of the subject and to make or secure designs, calculations, and estimates for a memorial bridge from the most convenient point of the Naval Observatory grounds, or adjacent thereto, across the Potomac River to the most convenient point of the Arlington estate property." In accordance with the provisions of this act, the Chief of Engineers has selected four eminent bridge engineers to submit competitive designs for a bridge combining the elements of strength and durability and such architectural embellishment and ornamentation as will fitly apply to the dedication, "A memorial to American patriotism."
> The designs are now being prepared, and as soon as completed will be submitted to the Congress by the Secretary of War. The proposed bridge would be a convenience to all the people from every part of the country who visit the national cemetery, an ornament to the capital of the nation, and forever stand as a monument to American patriotism. I do not doubt that Congress will give to the enterprise still further proof of its favor and approval.

This "still further proof of its favor and approval" is what I have been trying to get since this message was sent to Congress, and what I am asking to-night. The report of the board, which had not reported at the time the President's message was penned, reached Congress at the same time that the President's message reached Congress, and this Board of Army Engineers and architects, three of the former and two of the latter, recommended a plan which will cost when completed about four and a half million dollars.

I have heard some criticism of this plan because of its great cost. I have not until to-night heard that there was a desire that it should exceed this amount in cost. All want it worthy of the purposes in commemoration of which it is to be constructed. None, I take it, want to stint or be miserly or stingy in the amount ultimately to be expended. The amount can be expended in installments from year to year, and if the bridge, in its ornamental features as well as its useful ones, is completed within five or even ten years, it would be better to have it that way and to have it an honor to the country rather than to have a cheap structure, put up in a hurry.

The engineers and architects who presented this plan appeared before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and they stated that it is to be the finest bridge in the world; that there is no bridge in the world that compares with it in magnificence and in grandeur. I do not feel justified in taxing the time and attention of the Senate by going into the details of this matter, but I see no necessity for transcending the amount required to meet the plan which was adopted in this careful and painstaking way under the authority of the Secretary of War.

If any mistake has been made—I do not believe any has been—it has been in not opening the door wider. I know that, as I stated before, Mr. Keller has criticised the plan. He has devoted himself in season and out of season to criticism of this plan. He has had his own plan on exhibition in the city of Washington. But I have seen no criticism of the plan adopted by the War Department except the interested criticisms of Mr. Keller and those with whom he has talked and who have not investigated any other plan than the one presented to them by Mr. Keller.

I have heard the most satisfactory commendation of the plan adopted by the War Department, after this careful and painstaking investigation, and I firmly believe that they have recommended a structure that will be an honor to this country through all the ages to come. They have recommended a bridge that is superb and magnificent in all of its features, finer than any bridge in the world. That was testified to before the Committee on the District of Columbia by a number of distinguished bridge builders.

Now, I say if there has been any mistake made at all, it was in limiting the competition to four competitors. That was done by the War Department because of the limited appropriation made by Congress. The gentlemen who submitted the plans expended many thousands of dollars in getting up their plans, for which they got no compensation at all. The $5,000, which was to be expended under certain rules laid down by the War Department to aid them in getting up the plans, was a mere pittance as compared with the actual cost to the distinguished men who presented those plans in the competition.

The War Department did not have a sufficient appropriation to open the doors to the whole world, nor in my judgment was that necessary. When four of the most distinguished bridge builders in this country, each one assisted by a distinguished architect, put their minds to work on this subject they were amply equal to the occasion and able to present a plan worthy of this country in every respect. If the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts really wants to forward this matter, let the door be opened now and let Mr. Keller's plan come in.

Mr. CULLOM. And everybody else's.

Mr. MARTIN. And everybody else's plan that the Secretary of War is willing to consider. Let the Secretary of War be authorized to select a plan, but let him go to work now to expend the hundred thousand dollars, using so much thereof as may be necessary in getting additional plans, if he sees fit to get additional plans, and let him spend the balance of it in the commencement and prosecution of this work.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator from Virginia a question?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do I understand the last remark of the Senator from Virginia to imply that he is willing now to open this great work to competition by all the artists of the world?

Mr. MARTIN. I am perfectly willing to add to this clause as it is now in the bill that the bridge shall be built on a plan to be determined upon by the Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to expend, in his discretion, so much of the hundred thousand dollars as may be necessary for this purpose in securing proper plans for the bridge.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Opening the competition to the artists of the world?

Mr. MARTIN. Opening it to the whole world, if he sees fit, leaving it to the Secretary of War; and I want it open to the whole world; but I mean that the Secretary of War shall not be required to pay these competitors. Let them get up their plans at their own cost and expense. Do not fritter away this money indefinitely in securing hundreds and thousands of plans that may be submitted.

I am perfectly willing to let an amendment be put on here providing that the Secretary of War shall select a plan. I do not desire to adopt any plan. I am not a judge of these matters. I respectfully submit that very few members of the Senate are capable of judging of the plans and the designs for a great memorial bridge. It takes technical knowledge, it takes scientific knowledge and training and culture in that particular profession and art in order that a safe conclusion may be reached. I think the Secretary of War already adopted a wise plan when he selected competent experts to pass upon the plans which were submitted, but I am willing that he shall not be tied down to the plans that have been submitted, but that he may open the doors as wide as possible and consider any plan that may be presented.

I believe the distinguished chairman of the committee has drafted an amendment covering that view which will be offered, and which I hope will satisfy the Senator from Massachusetts and every other Senator who earnestly desires that this matter shall be proceeded with with a view to the accomplishment of some result, and not be kept here longer, after it has been held here in abeyance, in a tentative effort, with no practical result, from the year 1886 down to the present time.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia and I are so nearly agreed now that I will not detain the Senate by many further words.

I have never, as he seems to think, had anything to do with this matter except to express my hearty desire for its accomplishment except that at a previous session of Congress, when just in the closing hours it was proposed to commit us to a small, insufficient appropriation, I suggested that we ought to have a better bridge and a larger appropriation than was then contemplated.

The difficulty with the present situation is that the competition for the greatest architectural structure in the world, as we hope and believe and expect, has been limited to four architects, instead of being open to the whole world, and it is now proposed to have it settled by one man. The Senator agrees, and the Senate generally, I think, agree, so far as any purpose has been disclosed, to a provision that this shall be open to general competition, and I therefore suppose, if the reconsideration takes place, that amendment will be put in.

Now, the only other point of difference is that the four men, such as they were—and I dare say they were excellent men—did not know the extent and liberality and breadth of purpose of Congress. The Senator from Virginia states that the designers of these plans were hampered with the idea that we expected to build the bridge at this comparatively moderate cost. So we have plans designed by only four men, with nobody else admitted to competition, and designed by them undervaluing and underestimating the liberal feeling of Congress in the matter. Now, that is a clear mistake, as we all admit.

If the Senator from Virginia will give me his attention one moment—I think we are entirely in accord now in our feeling, with one exception—and I want to know whether the Senator on the whole does not agree with me in that. I think this ought not to be settled absolutely by one man, even with his subordinates. We do not know who will be the Secretary of War. We have a very distinguished and able gentleman whom rumor says—I do not know how true it is—is exceedingly impatient to get back to the great professional emoluments and activities which are before him in his own city. It is quite possible that if he does not do that, in the changes which may take place within a year or two he may be called to another and larger department of the Government.

We do not know who is to be Secretary of War hereafter, and I think these plans ought to come back to Congress before the five or six million dollars which have got to be expended are expended. I do not mean that the members of Congress are the best judges of architecture in this world. I do not profess to be one myself, although there are others much fitter than I am; I do not suppose any of us makes that lofty claim, but we can tell if a noble structure is proposed whether it is a noble structure, and we shall know when that comes to us what indorsement it has in the way of the approval of famous architects in the country, and in the Departments here. We shall give due weight to their judgment, but we ought to control it.

I do not know this Mr. Keller. I never spoke to him to my knowledge. I have glanced merely at this printed scheme which has been sent about. Whether it is a good one or a bad one I do not know. But eminent architects of the very highest distinction, men who have made some of the most magnificent buildings in this country, have written to me, and those who write to me write with one accord in disapproving the plan that has been selected. With one accord the eminent architects of the country condemn this proposition.

Now, what I want done is to have this appropriation made, and to have it so limited that it is not going to commit us to any one plan, to have the competition thrown open to the architects of the world, and then have the result proposed come back to Congress with the indorsements and certificates of the judgment of the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War may be some gentleman such as we have known, who would not be a better judge than the poorest judge here. But let it come back and then Congress will deal, I am sure, with a liberality that will not scrimp.

The American people want these great public works to be done in a way worthy of them. I have been here for thirty-two years, and I never heard a single American citizen who has come here, from my own State or anywhere else, complain of the money spent to acquire the splendors in this Capitol, which cost, I believe, in all from $13,000,000 to $15,000,000. I have never heard one single human being, of the hundreds and hundreds who have come here from my own part of the country and elsewhere and saw that noble and beautiful Library building, complain of its cost.

There is one expression from them of pride and satisfaction. A man says to himself: "I am a poor man at home, but I am one of the owners of this Capitol and this Library." Now, I want the bridge to be like unto them, and I agree with the Senator from Virginia when he says he does not want to be hurried in a way that will hurt the work.

So, Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa has such a draft as the Senator from Virginia understands, I am sure it will be a better one than I could make, and I hope we shall have it. I hope the reconsideration may take place, and then we can dispose of this question in two or three minutes.

Mr. MARTIN. I have very hastily drawn an amendment, which I hope will meet the views of the Senator from Massachusetts. I will read it.

After the word "thereto," in line 3, page 108, insert:

On a plan to be approved by the Secretary of War, and not to cost more than the estimated cost of the bridge provided for in the plan approved by the Secretary of War, as set out in Document No. 578, House of Representatives, first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

That is four and a half million dollars; and I add——

Mr. HOAR. No; that is not at all what the Senator said before.

Mr. MARTIN. I am perfectly willing to leave the amount absolutely in the discretion of the Secretary of War and strike out that limitation.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the Senator propose to have him submit his plans to Congress and let us see whether we approve them?

Mr. MARTIN. I do not think it is expedient to proceed with this bridge on that plan. We have been proceeding on that idea since 1886, and we will never get a plan here under it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why not leave the amount unlimited?

Mr. MARTIN. I am perfectly willing to leave the amount unlimited, though I believe the amount I have named is fully as large as will be needed. It will make the finest, the most magnificent bridge in the world. I had thought it was wiser legislation to fix some limit of cost rather than leave the Secretary of War with absolute freedom to go to any extent.

I have written the amendment with that limitation of cost. It is a liberal one. It is an ample one for the most magnificent structure in the world, and I think it is wiser legislation to put a limit on the cost and not leave to the discretion of anyone the determination of the final cost of this bridge. It ought to be limited, it seems to me, in the legislative act.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator that if he will fix a lump sum of not exceeding $5,000,000, if we are willing to go that high, or any other lump sum that the Senate may vote for, it will be much clearer and will obviate the Senator alluding to a document that very few of us have ever read or know anything about.

Mr. MARTIN. I think that suggestion is a good one and I will accept it.

Mr. HOAR. I wish you would make it $6,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN. I think that $5,000,000 is more than is necessary. I do not see any necessity or wisdom in it; and I believe it will weaken the bill when it goes to the House, and it will weaken it everywhere. It is an unreasonable and an unnecessary sum to spend for this purpose. Four and a half million dollars is ample. Four and a half million dollars will build a bridge finer than any in the known world. Men who have examined every important bridge in the world have testified before the Committee on the District of Columbia that this bridge, costing four and a half million dollars, will far surpass any bridge in the world. I do not believe that we ought to put in this amendment a provision for a bridge costing more than that sum.

Mr. HOAR. Make it $5,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN. I am willing to modify the amendment so as to fix the limit at $5,000,000, and the plan to be fixed by the Secretary of War. A further provision of my amendment is:

And the Secretary of War is authorized to expend so much of the amount hereby appropriated as may be necessary for the purpose of securing and determining on a proper plan, opening the competition to all who may desire to submit plans.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator read that last sentence again?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Read the whole amendment as you have it now.

Mr. MARTIN. I will have to state it, as it is not all written, until I can insert the $5,000,000 in place of the reference to the document:

On a plan to be approved by the Secretary of War, and not to cost more than $5,000,000. And the Secretary of War is authorized to expend so much of the amount hereby appropriated as may be necessary for the purpose of securing and determining on a proper plan, opening the competition to all who may desire to submit plans.

Mr. HOAR. Well, that is right.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right.

Mr. MARTIN. That amendment I am glad to see meet the view of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single word.

As a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia I did not join in this report. At the same time I sat here last evening and allowed the amendment to be adopted, and I am not going to object to it now.

There is a difference of opinion, a very grave difference of opinion. The plan adopted by the War Department contemplates a bridge a mile long. The publications in this country devoted to architecture have condemned that plan. The Keller plan proposes to treat the banks of the river, and by embankments to shorten the bridge and make it more massive in consequence. The Burr plan proposes to put in the center of the stream two magnificent pillars, I think 260 feet high, half as high as the Washington Monument, that will be used in part to open the draw.

The Keller plan and other plans that have been suggested propose to put a magnificent arch on the Washington side, so that the approach to the bridge will be the magnificent part of it, in place of putting these structures in the center of the stream.

I am not a sufficient judge to know which is the better plan. The latter plan has rather commended itself to me, but we had distinguished bridge builders before our committee who contended that the Burr plan, which is the plan I first described, is entirely in accordance with æsthetics and with the technique of architecture.

Now, Mr. President, I very much like the proposition just made by the Senator from Virginia, to throw this open to competition. Why, a young fellow in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, a little time ago, won a prize over all the great architects of the country. He was but a boy, but the matter was thrown open and he produced a plan that has astonished the country. I have forgotten exactly what the structure was.

It does seem to me that in this magnificent memorial bridge, which I favor very warmly and want to see constructed at the earliest possible moment, we ought not to make any mistake in the initiative. We ought to be sure that we are right before we expend one single dollar on the structure itself. I am not a judge of those matters, but I think $5,000,000 will not be too much, and I am inclined to think we will expend more than that before we get through with this project.

But, Mr. President, it would be a great mistake, it would be a crime, if we commenced this structure on plans that would be condemned later on and that would produce a bridge that would not be as magnificent a memorial as we ought to put over the Potomac River connecting the District of Columbia with the possessions of the Government on the Virginia side.

Now, Mr. President, I speak as a friend of this project, but I have not myself ever been able to be persuaded that we ought to go on and adopt a plan that was simply the product of four men, when we ought to have opened it, in my judgment, to the competition of the entire country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] offers an amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. It has been sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 3, page 108, insert:

Said bridge to be constructed on a plan to be approved by the Secretary of War, not to cost more than $5,000,000. And the Secretary of War is authorized to expend so much of the amount hereby appropriated as may be necessary for the purpose of securing and determining on a proper plan, opening the competition to all who may desire to submit plans.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend by adding the words—

And to appoint a commission to whom said plans shall be submitted to consideration before their final adoption, to consist of not less than five architects or engineers, and to conduct the competition.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the result of this amendment will be to throw open the whole project. It has already been through the process of submission to the Secretary of War upon bids of four constructors, and that is not a provision so inadequate as some Senators seem to believe. The four competitors (I know nothing about who they are) represent people who are acquainted with this whole subject and submit their projects and their bids to the Secretary of War, and he decides who makes the best bid.

Mr. President, we shall never get a bridge until it is left to the decision of the Secretary of War. If you limit him and control him by a commission of five or three, nothing will be done. It will be thrown open; it will be continued from year to year, just as it has been in the past.

I hope this amendment will not prevail. I want to remind the Senator from Massachusetts of the fundamental fact that objection never built a bridge. It is something that is not objection that builds bridges. It is done by lodging the power in a central authority. This memorial bridge will never be built, it will never be entered upon, until the one central authority, the Secretary of War, decides what is the best project.

If you surround him with a commission of a half dozen architects—and there are no such cranks in the world as architects; everyone who ever built a house or has known anything about a public building knows that, skillful, able, as architects are, every one of them has his own scheme—I notify the Senators from Virginia, if they limit this to the controlling power of a commission of architects, they may bid good-by forever to the project of a memorial bridge. You have got to lodge it at last in the discretion of the Secretary of War, who, by precedent, practice, and custom controls all of these structures—who takes the counsel of his engineers and everybody else he chooses, and decides upon what shall be the plan.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to call attention to the fact that when the Secretary of War acted on this matter before, he acted through a board of distinguished experts. I realize that under the amendment as I have offered it it will be absolutely necessary for him to call to his aid a board of that character when he proceeds further with this matter.

I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts that he realize as I realize, and as all Senators will realize, that the Secretary of War will do hereafter as he did before—call to his aid a board of technical men to dispose of this matter. I hope he will withdraw his amendment to my amendment and allow it to come before the Senate as I sent it to the desk.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that will be done.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the Senator's plan at all, as I have said more than once. I think all of us consider that this debate has not been lost when it is converting the Senator from Maine, who, for the last forty years, I think—I do not know exactly how long he has been in the Senate—has been the standard and the most standing objector in this world to a frame of mind which makes him see that objections never accomplish anything.

Mr. HALE. I never opposed a memorial bridge.

Mr. HOAR. I know that.

Mr. HALE. I have always been in favor of it.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly. Mr. President, it is true that objections do not build bridges, but it is also true that bridges are not very safe when they are built unless there is some care taken in laying their foundations—unless proper money is expended in making their structure strong and firm—and they are not very beautiful unless the keenest genius which is able to create great beauty is secured for their design.

Now, the Senator says that he hopes my amendment will not be adopted. The substance of my objection and criticism has been agreed to by every Senator who has spoken, unless the Senator from Maine. All that is left is this little point. I think it is better to put into the amendment in terms that the matter shall be submitted to a commission. The Senator from Virginia, whose interest and knowledge and study of the subject we all respect, thinks it is better not to put that in. I wish I could have the attention of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I am paying attention to both Senators from Massachusetts just now.

Mr. HOAR. I have no doubt the Senator can pay attention to forty at once if he has a mind to do so.

The Senator from Virginia says that of course the Secretary of War will do exactly the thing which I propose to put in the amendment; that he has done it so far. I think, therefore, I will not take up the time of the Senate by having a yea-and-nay vote and a long talk on that point, and I will yield to the request of my honorable friend from Virginia. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I wish to make just one remark. I am glad that the Senator from Massachusetts has withdrawn his amendment. I gave the subject all the attention I could this year. I examined Mr. Keller's plan, and I am confident the five-million limit would leave his plan out of the question, because he proposed to fill in those great flats and make it into a park. The bridge would be deeper and shorter, but I do not believe it could be built, if you fill up the flats and make a park, for $10,000,000.

So his criticism I did not think was very valuable. The Secretary of War will undoubtedly call in the advice that is necessary under this amendment. I agree with the Senator from Maine that there ought to be a head to it, and we should concentrate it so that we can get action.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to hear the amendment read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. HOAR. I have withdrawn mine.

The Secretary read as follows:

Memorial bridge across Potomac River: To enable the Secretary of War to commence the construction of a memorial bridge from the most convenient point of the Naval Observatory grounds, or from some point adjacent thereto, across the Potomac River to the most convenient point of the Arlington estate property, or property adjacent thereto, $100,000.

Said bridge to be constructed on a plan to be approved by the Secretary of War and not to cost more than $5,000,000. And the Secretary of War is authorized to expend so much of the amount hereby appropriated as may be necessary for the purpose of securing and determining on a proper plan, opening the competition to all who may desire to submit plans.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I caught the words, the $5,000,000 is to be paid for the plans instead of the bridge?

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. Read it over and see. I am speaking about the English now.

The Secretary read as follows:

Said bridge to be constructed on a plan to be approved by the Secretary of War and not to cost more than $5,000,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The appropriation is for $100,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to offer a few amendments that I omitted to offer when I was on the floor before.

In the first instance, I move to change the amendment on page 3, line 17, by striking out "twenty" and inserting "twenty-eight."

The SECRETARY. In line 17, page 3, strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-eight" before the word "thousand;" so as to read:

For rental of quarters at Cleveland, Ohio: For rental of temporary quarters for six months ending June 30, 1902, for the accommodation of Government officials, and for moving furniture, fixtures, safes, and other Government property, and other contingent expenses incidental to such removal, $28,000.

Mr. ALLISON. A a letter from the Secretary of War since the amendment was agreed to states that $28,000 is needed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 19, line 3, after the word "marks," I move to insert the word "buoys;" and in line 4, before "Porto Rico," I move to strike out "on" and insert "for;" so as to make the clause read:

Porto Rican light-house establishment: For maintaining existing aids to navigation and to establish and maintain additional day marks, buoys, and beacon lights where required for Porto Rico and adjacent islands, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On line 23, page 20, I move to insert:

For Lyle gun, the beach apparatus used with it, and two surf boats of the latest improved construction, for use on the coast at or near Cape Nome, Alaska, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

I have also a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury saying that this is essential.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] suggests that this amendment be inserted on page 21, after line 2, as a separate and independent paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be inserted at that point.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 63, after line 9.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after line 9, insert:

That the appropriation of $7,000 made by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 6, 1900, for coal bin for storage of coal, to be built in connection with area of the Pension Office building, is hereby continued and made available for the fiscal year 1902, for the same purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 93, after line 17.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 93, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

Toward the enlargement of Governors Island, $200,000, and for the erection of storehouses and other necessary buildings, in accordance with plans reported by a board composed of Maj. Gen. John R. Brooke, Col. George L. Gillespie, and Col. Amos S. Kimball, dated July 2, 1900, $60,000; in all, $260,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of War, which explains thoroughly the necessity for this amendment, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.
Washington, March 1, 1901.

DEAR SIR: I beg to call your attention to an estimate of $1,140,000 for enlargement of Governors Island, New York Harbor, and an estimate of $35,000 for the construction of buildings thereat, made respectively by the Chief of Engineers and the Quartermaster-General, and transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives December 29, 1900, and January 11, 1901, respectively (see House Docs. 235 and 319, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, copies herewith), and to request that a moderate appropriation be included in the sundry civil bill for the commencement of this work.

A substantial progress can be made, which in itself would be of great value to the Government, by an appropriation of $200,000 for the enlargement of Governors Island and $60,000 for the erection of storehouses and other necessary buildings in accordance with the plan reported by a board composed of Maj. Gen. John R. Brooke, Col. George L. Gillespie, and Col. Amos S. Kimball, dated July 21, 1900.

I transmit herewith a copy of the report of the board and of the maps which accompanied the same.

Let me briefly repeat the explanation which I have already made to you orally as to the purposes of the work and the reason why your attention is especially called to it at this late day. The interests of the military administration call for the use of very extensive facilities in and about the harbor of New York for storehouses, wharves, administration buildings, and other land and structures for the conduct of the enormous business involved in the support of the Army and its operations.

I find that we are now paying in rentals at that point over $97,000 per annum. At the same time we have, in the very center of the city, 57 acres of land constituting Governors Island, upon which are a number of buildings, very old, dilapidated, ill adapted to their purposes, and without wharves or bulkheads which are necessary to enable us to utilize the property.

Ordinary economy would dictate to any private person that, having such a valuable property, admirably adapted to the purposes of his business, he should utilize it instead of allowing it to lie unused while hiring facilities from others. Early last summer I convened a board composed of the officers whom I have named above, to consider and report plans for the improvement of the Government property in the island in such a way that it would be properly utilized.

The report of that board has been submitted to General Merritt, who was then in command, to General Brooke, who is now in command, to the Chief of Engineers, to Lieutenant-General Miles, and to many other of our recognized military authorities, and all agree that the execution of the plan is not only desirable upon ordinary business principles, but that it is of primary importance as a matter of preparation for any exigency that may require the use of troops and of military supplies upon the Atlantic seaboard or at any point in the West Indies or Central America.

If we construct an isthmian canal, it will be especially important that we should have some point where men, ships, and supplies can be readily brought together, so that without any such delays and confusion as were incident to the beginning of the Santiago expedition of 1898 an effective movement may be inaugurated. We have such a point in Governors Island.

The great number of railroads with extensive terminal facilities converging at the harbor of New York, and the enormous travel and freightage passing over those roads adapted to meet the fluctuating demands of three millions and a half of people, would make it possible to send, without any previous especial arrangements whatever, an army of any ordinary size and almost unlimited supplies for such an army to that point and put them on shipboard, provided only that we have the facilities at Governors Island for storage, the wharf accommodations for vessels, and room for transshipment.

The board found that if the United States could acquire the shoal land under water lying to the south of the island and fill it in, we could both acquire additional shipping facilities with deep-water frontage and immensely increase the facilities of the island by adding to its acreage; and their plan contemplates such a course. The land which they proposed to use, if acquired and filled, would add something over 70 acres to the present island, which is in the neighborhood of 57 acres.

The first thing, manifestly, to be done toward carrying out the plan was to acquire the title to this additional land. To that I have addressed myself and have been securing the passage through the legislature of New York of a law authorizing the commissioners of the land office of the State to convey the land and cede jurisdiction to the United States. Until such an act was passed, for reasons which will be apparent, I could not urge an appropriation. The act was signed by the governor on the afternoon of day before yesterday.

I wish to urge the consideration of this, both as a matter of plain business policy and as a matter of the highest importance in the way of the preparation of a strategical point for service in case of any of the exigencies to meet which the Army is maintained.

Very respectfully, yours,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. WM. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 6, after line 21, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

For necessary alterations in the Newport, R. I., post-office, and to provide additional space for the money-order, registry, and stamp divisions, $20,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment, to come on page 65, after line 12, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

For the purpose of providing the document room of the Senate with fireproof shelving, under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, $67,500, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 144 it is proposed to insert:

That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of preparing and improving a site and erecting and completing the erection of a monument to the memory of Dorothea Lynde Dix on the property now owned by the National Dorothea Dix Memorial Association at Hampden.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Maine if there is any law or authority for this amendment?

Mr. HALE. It is so meritorious that I think no doubt there is a law for it, though I am not able to find it at the present moment. I hope the Senator will allow the amendment to be inserted.

Mr. ALLISON. I feel constrained to make the point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KEAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 7. Newport, R. I., and Newark, N. J., are pretty close together, and I trust that I may get this little amendment for Newark adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 3, it is proposed to insert:

For the completion of the custom-house and post-office building at Newark, N. J., by a one-story addition, with basement, heating and ventilating apparatus, as required for carriers' room and storage, according to plans of the Secretary of the Treasury, $85,000.

Mr. ALLISON rose.

Mr. KEAN. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not object to this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I am constrained to make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I think the point of order does not lie against it.

Mr. ALLISON. It is for a public building, and I do not know that there is a law for it, or that it has been reported from any committee.

Mr. KEAN. It was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. KEAN. Yes; it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to call up the amendment I offered early in the evening, which I consented to have put aside at the request of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], in charge of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment referred to by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of the property known as the Corcoran Art Gallery, in the city of Washington, D. C., $332,500, and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, empowered and directed to acquire for and in the name of the United States, for the purpose hereinafter provided, the following-described real estate, with the improvements thereon, known and designated as original lots Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8, in square 167, in the city of Washington, D. C., and containing 17,733 square feet, lying and being at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Seventeenth street NW., fronting on Pennsylvania avenue 106 feet and on Seventeenth street 160 feet, and being the property of the Corcoran Gallery of Art.

Said property to be used by the Court of Claims, or for such other purposes as may be determined: Provided, That the same can be secured for a sum not exceeding $332,500; and so much of the act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a building for the Department of Justice," approved March 3, 1899, as provides "that said building shall be constructed so as to provide a court room and necessary accommodations for the Court of Claims," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. ALLISON. That, I take it, is in the law, and I shall not object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHOUP. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 122, after line 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 122, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

The Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall cause to be inspected the buildings on the Fort Sherman Military Reservation, in Idaho, and the grounds contained therein, and make a report to Congress at its next session relative to the advisability of establishing a Branch Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at that place, and what additional buildings, if any, should be erected thereon for the use of such a Branch Home.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to offer an amendment of three lines, to come in before the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], in regard to the appointment of commissioners for the revision of the laws. Before the first word, "That," in the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, I move to insert:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized to nominate and appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, five commissioners, inclusive of.

Then follows the amendment as adopted on the motion of the Senator from Indiana:

The commissioners heretofore appointed in pursuance of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1897, to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States, be, and they are hereby, directed to revise and codify, in accordance with the terms and provisions of said act and the acts supplementary thereto, all laws of the United States of a permanent and general nature in force at the time when the same shall be reported.

I beg leave to say that the amendment as I formerly offered it was submitted to the consideration of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. HOAR] and to the chairman of the Committee on the Revision of Laws [Mr. BURROWS], and they stated that it was entirely satisfactory to them. Had the Senator from Michigan been here, I think he would have accepted it; but the part which made provision as to separation, as to some being of one party and some of another, was objected to. I have now put the amendment in such form that I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator's amendment, it differs from his former amendment in this: That the President is not restricted, in nominating the commissioners, to any particular party.

Mr. DANIEL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. And the only change made from my amendment is to provide for the appointment of five instead of three commissioners.

Mr. DANIEL. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] to his amendment. The word "be," in line 7 of the original amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana ought to be stricken out, to meet the changed grammatical construction of the amendment. I have shown it to that Senator, and anyone who will read it will see that the word "be" is not necessary. The words "and they are hereby" are all sufficient.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 15, on page 7, it is proposed to insert:

That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to complete the public building at Cheyenne, Wyo., the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1896, entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes," are hereby amended so as to extend the limit of cost of said building and site to $325,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the completion of said building within the limit of the cost hereby fixed.

Mr. ALLISON. That has been provided for in another bill. I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] to the amendment just offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I am willing that the amendment may be agreed to, and it can be stricken out in conference if it shall be found that it has already been provided for.

Mr. WARREN. That is entirely satisfactory. I should like to have it go into the bill tentatively.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment, which has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce, favorably reported, and very strongly urged by the Superintendent of the Live-Saving Service. I move to strike out all after line 16, on page 19, to and including line 2, on page 21, and to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, after line 16, on page 19, all to and including line 2, on page 21, and to insert:

For salaries of superintendents of the Life-Saving Service, as follows:
For the superintendents of the First, Second, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eleventh, Twelfth, and Thirteenth districts, $2,500 per annum each.
For the superintendents of the Third, Ninth, and Tenth districts, $2,000 per annum each.
For the superintendent of the Eighth district, $1,500 per annum.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator from Iowa will allow that amendment to go in. I will not detain the Senate if he will, but otherwise I shall want to make a little appeal.

I will say that this is very strongly recommended by the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service. He is asking for it. It has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce and favorably reported. I hope the Senator will let it go into the bill and consider it in conference. I think he will see the justice of the provision.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word respecting this amendment. I am quite sure that it can not be finally agreed to, but I do not wish to occupy further time with this bill. If the bill is to be passed at all, it must be passed to-night. This proposition has not been considered by the other House, so far as I know, nor has it passed the Senate; and it changes existing law in many particulars.

Mr. GALLINGER. At one time it was favorably reported in the other House, if I may be permitted to cite that fact.

Mr. ALLISON. And I ought not to have cited any fact respecting the other House. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think the point of order will lie against the amendment. It covers precisely the text that is in the bill, changing slightly the appropriation, and it has been reported by a standing committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was it reported from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. GALLINGER. It was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire what are the stations provided for in the amendment? It is impossible to tell from the numbers, and I have not any book before me to which I can refer. The amendment was read, merely giving the stations by numbers.

Mr. GALLINGER. It includes all of the thirteen stations. They are numbered. I will say that I find that this amendment was reported from the Committee on Commerce, but I can not give the Senator the precise stations by name. The salaries, however, are fixed entirely in proportion to the importance of the station and the increased work the superintendents have had imposed upon them.

Mr. MALLORY. I understand that, but at the same time I should like to exercise my own judgment in reference to the matter, or at least I should like to have the opportunity to do so. We have some life-saving stations on the Gulf, which I think are as important as those anywhere else.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly; and beyond all question they are equally cared for under this amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to have the names of the stations stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unfortunately, I can not state the names.

Mr. MALLORY. I presume the names of the stations are given in the original bill. We can not tell what they are from the mere reading of numbers.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no doubt, I will say to the Senator from Florida, that they are all included. This is an amendment revising the entire scheme of life-saving stations.

Mr. GALLINGER. It increases the salaries to the amount of $7,500. We have just given $10,000 for two additional commissioners, and I think we can afford to give something to the 13 superintendents of life-saving stations in this country. Their compensation is utterly inadequate.

Mr. MALLORY. I agree with the Senator about that. The only question with me is why some of the superintendents should be discriminated against in the increase of salaries.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator, if he will turn to the text of the bill, he will notice that the salaries are not all equal under the existing scheme.

Mr. MALLORY. Yes; I notice that.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the increase is simply upon that basis. It is entirely fair so far as the increase is concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. For the information of the conference committee—and I have no doubt they will have time to read it—I will ask to put in the RECORD the report of the Committee on Commerce in regard to the amendment just adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. I can say to the Senator that we have a great number of copies of that report in the room of the Committee on Appropriations. I think every member has read that report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well. That being the case, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is not necessary.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] entered a motion to reconsider one amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I claim a separate vote in the Senate, Mr. President, on the amendment bestowing bounties on St. Louis, Buffalo, and Charleston. I want to get our friends on record, so we shall know who they are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama desire a separate vote on the amendment about which he entered a motion to reconsider?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the amendment reserved by the Senator from Alabama, will be concurred in. The question is on concurring in the amendment relating to the Buffalo, the Louisiana purchase, and the South Carolina expositions. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the ayes have it. The ayes have it, and the amendment is concurred in.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a second to the demand for the yeas and nays?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to have a record of the names of those who second the demand.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CLAY. I ask the Senator to withdraw that suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Daniel,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Bard,	Fairbanks,	Mallory,	Spooner,
Berry,	Frye,	Martin,	Stewart,
Beveridge,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Sullivan,
Butler,	Hale,	Nelson,	Taliaferro,
Carter,	Hanna,	Pettigrew,	Teller,
Clapp,	Hawley,	Pettus,	Tillman,
Clark,	Heitfeld,	Platt, N. Y.	Warren.
Clay,	Kean,	Proctor,
Cockrell,	Kearns,	Scott,
Cullom,	Lodge,	Sewell,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the roll call 41 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the roll of absentees be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll of absentees will be called.

The Secretary read the list of absent Senators.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to notify the absent Senators that their presence is necessary in the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

At 12 o'clock and 35 minutes a. m. (Saturday, March 2) Mr. PENROSE entered the Chamber and responded to his name.

At 1 o'clock a. m. Mr. PRITCHARD entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. PENROSE (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes a. m.). Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to know the exact status of the business of the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHOUP in the chair). The Chair will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that at this time, the attention of the Senate having been called to the absence of a quorum, the Sergeant-at-Arms is trying to secure the attendance of absent Senators, of whom the Senator from Pennsylvania was the first to respond.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, would it be in order to send the assistant sergeant-at-arms after the Sergeant-at-Arms?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The assistant sergeant-at-arms is already performing his duty.

At 1 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m. Mr. WELLINGTON entered the Chamber and responded to his name.

At 1 o'clock and 12 minutes a. m. Mr. DILLINGHAM entered the Chamber and responded to his name.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, after the routine business is completed, I shall address the Senate briefly on the bill providing for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. BUTLER. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 4306) for the relief of settlers under the public-land laws to lands within the indemnity limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m., Saturday, March 2, 1901) the Senate adjourned until Saturday, March 2, 1901, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 1, 1901.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADMISSION TO THE HOUSE—CLOSING DAYS OF SESSION.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit for immediate consideration a resolution which I send to the desk. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That from midnight March 3 until 2 p. m. March 4, 1901, admission to the House wing of the Capitol shall be by the lower east door only, and no persons, except members of Congress, members-elect, and employees of the House shall be admitted except by ticket. Tickets issued under this order shall admit to all galleries of the House except the executive, diplomatic, and reporters' galleries. The number of tickets issued under this order shall not exceed three for each Member and Delegate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DALZELL. I will state, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeds, I desire to ask him if the resolution embraces the secretaries or clerks of members? Are they included in the terms of the resolution? For if not, they ought to be.

Mr. DALZELL. They are not included expressly. They are not, I suppose, employees. The terms of the resolution are "House employees."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Some provision should be made for their admission.

Mr. DALZELL. Of course; if they are not included in the terms of the resolution, I think they ought to be. I have no objection to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As I understood the reading of the resolution they are not included.

Mr. DALZELL. We can easily make some arrangement which will permit them to enter the building if they are not allowed under the terms of the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would suggest that some such provision be inserted in the resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. I have no objection——

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, may we have this resolution again reported? It was not distinctly heard.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be again read.

There was no objection, and the resolution was again read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he so modify the resolution as to include the clerks or secretaries of members.

Mr. DALZELL. The only difficulty, in my judgment, would be this: It is possible that the doorkeepers in charge of the building would not be able to recognize a number of these secretaries, not being familiar with the members' clerks. It seems to me it would be a better arrangement to allow tickets to be issued to them by the Doorkeeper or some similar arrangement which would make provision for them.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I would like to submit an inquiry to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I would like to ask if the resolution includes members-elect? As I understand it, it does not read that way.

Mr. DALZELL. They ought to be included, if they are not, in the terms of the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that they be included, so as to read, "members and members-elect."

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if this contemplates giving the members-elect the same number of tickets provided for the members?

Mr. DALZELL. No; it only admits them.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if I understand this resolution correctly to provide that nobody can come into the Capitol except with a ticket?

Mr. DALZELL. That is right.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. To say that nobody shall be admitted without tickets until 2 o'clock on Monday, March 4, and giving the 357 members three tickets each not more than a thousand people can be admitted into the Capitol, when perhaps 50,000 people, coming from all parts of the country, may by this resolution be denied the opportunity of getting into the building itself.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I think my friend does not understand the situation. The order now in existence in regard to this is that there shall be no admission at the other end of the Capitol except by tickets.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. At the Senate end?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; the Senate end.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. That is all the more reason why, in the House of the people, people ought to be admitted to the building.

Mr. DALZELL. But those who have tickets for the other end of the Capitol can come in here, and members are aware that perhaps a large number will come over here to witness the closing scenes of the House and then go to the other end of the Capitol; so, when you take that into consideration, and when you take into consideration the three tickets which are given to each member and the tickets issued——

Mr. CANNON. Two from the Senate end.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; two from the Senate end, and three tickets to the members and five to the stands and other tickets that committees have issued—when you consider all this, more people will seek to be admitted to the Capitol than can possibly get in. In all previous inaugurations entrance to the Capitol at either end has been denied save by ticket.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I was in the gallery with a constituent and did not distinctly understand the resolution. When does the resolution begin operating?

Mr. DALZELL. At midnight, March 3.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. Then it is practically for the inauguration ceremony?

Mr. DALZELL. For the inauguration.

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I see that the tickets, five in number, that admit our visitors to the stands here, do not admit to the Capitol. The gentleman is certainly under a misapprehension. The five tickets will not admit to the Capitol.

Mr. DALZELL. That is true; but I will say to the gentleman that there will be a modification of the order which prevents access to the platform save from the outside, so that parties having tickets to the platform who come into the Capitol may have access over the bridge.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It may be very cold, and they might want to warm here.

Mr. DALZELL. That is true, and they may do so here.

Mr. DINSMORE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he make it apply to ex-members also. We will have a good many friends who have been here who would like to be admitted.

Mr. DALZELL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It ought also to provide for members-elect.

Mr. DALZELL. That is already provided for.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is the intention, in the interest of public business, to somewhat limit the privileges of the floor from this time on to the adjournment of Congress?

Mr. DALZELL. I have not heard of any such suggestion.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I suggest, for the consideration of the gentleman, that it will greatly aid the conduct of public business if that could be done.

Mr. DALZELL. That would require a change of the rules.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That could be done by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DALZELL. Has the gentleman a suggestion to make?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I think the privileges of the floor should be denied from this time out in the interest of public business.

Mr. DALZELL. Introduce a resolution and send it to the Committee on Rules, and it will be considered.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will not do that.

Mr. DALZELL. I consent that the resolution may be amended by adding ex-members.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the words "members-elect" the word "ex-members."

Mr. MORRIS. I ask for the reading of the resolution as amended.

The SPEAKER. It has been read twice already. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up for immediate consideration the bill H. R. 14093.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I call for the special order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects and calls for the special order. Pending that, the Chair submits the following to the House:

Members of the temporary Committee on Accounts, as authorized by law, Messrs BULL of Rhode Island, JOY of Missouri, and BARTLETT of Georgia.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a correction will be made in the Journal of February 26—a clerical error by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do.

Mr. CANNON. Is it the intention of the gentleman to ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the revenue bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I want to submit to the gentleman that there are some matters of suspension, as well as conference reports upon appropriation bills, and I am informed that some other bills will soon come over from the Senate that must receive attention. Does the gentleman from Iowa think that it is just to the public business——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object to what is going on unless we can hear.

The SPEAKER. The House is in unusually good order, but the Chair can not put lungs into members. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the anxiety of the gentleman from Illinois for the dispatch of business. I remember a night or two ago how the gentleman aided in losing an hour that might have been devoted to public business. [Laughter.] This matter now in hand will not occupy, in my judgment, an hour's time. Therefore I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering House bill 5499.

Mr. CANNON. In the interest of public business I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will say that this is in the interest of public business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 5499. What is the point of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CANNON. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to move to postpone the consideration of this bill until the 4th of March?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. It is the regular standing order. The motion before the House is to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CANNON. I ask if upon that it is in order to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. The bill is in the Committee of the Whole and not in the House.

Mr. CANNON. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. That will be done on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole. The motion to go into Committee of the Whole is equivalent to raising the question of consideration. The House will be able to express its desire whether to consider this bill or postpone it.

Mr. SULZER. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. I understood that the vote of the House, the overwhelming vote of the House yesterday afternoon, was to go into Committee of the Whole on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. SULZER. That is my point of order.

The SPEAKER. That was yesterday and this is to-day. [Laughter.] The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill 5499.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HEPBURN) there were—ayes 99, noes 84.

Mr. CANNON and Mr. MANN. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 134, answered "present" 5, not voting 92; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5715. An act granting a charter to the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. Res. 306. Joint resolution concerning printing of additional copies of the Annual Report of the Geological Survey.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 13189. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 13067. An act to enlarge the powers of the courts of the District of Columbia in cases involving delinquent children, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11881. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of birds, preservation of game, and for the prevention of its sale during certain closed seasons in the District of Columbia."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolutions:

House concurrent resolution 84.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed from the stereotype plates in the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies of House of Representatives Document No. 171, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, entitled Agricultural Resources and Capabilities of Porto Rico, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture, the quality of paper and style of binding to be the same as in the original edition of the publication.

House concurrent resolution 83.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed from the stereotype plates in the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies of House of Representatives Document No. 355, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, entitled Fourth Report on the Agricultural Investigations in Alaska, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture; the quality of paper and style of binding to be the same as in the original edition of the publication.

House concurrent resolution 65.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be 6,000 additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals for the calendar year 1899, bound in cloth and wrapped, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

And be it further resolved, That there also be printed 8,000 additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint, covering the operations of the mints and assay offices of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, to be bound in cloth and wrapped, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5943. An act to establish Lowelltown, Me., a subport of entry.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to House bill 13189—the river and harbor bill—and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the river and harbor bill, and ask for a conference thereon.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order against this bill, and to suggest that there are many important amendments which I think should be considered in Committee of the Whole House, and I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

APACHE INDIAN RESERVATION IN ARIZONA.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report and ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report and read the statement.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 10899. An act to restore to the public domain a small tract of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation in the Territory of Arizona.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read and the reading of the report omitted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask if all the conferees signed the report?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the statement.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10899) to restore to the public domain a small tract of the White Mountain Apache Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Alaska, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment on page 2, line 13, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment on page 3, line 6.

That the Senate recede from its amendment on page 3, lines 6 and 7.

That the Senate recede from its amendment on page 3, line 10.

J. S. SHERMAN,
C. D. SHELDEN,
JOHN S. LITTLE,
Managers on the part of the House.
JNO. M. THURSTON,
J. V. QUARLES,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The Senate recedes from all amendments save one, and that one simply makes a correction in a description of property, making a course read "east" instead of "west." The conference report therefore presents the bill in the form in which it passed the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the report be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted was laid on the table.

GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The conference report on the bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with, and that in lieu thereof the statement of the House conferees be read.

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12396) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Insert in line 8, page 1, after the word "assistants," the following: "Appointed by the United States district court."

Strike out the word "a," after the word "including," in line 8, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the word "the."

Strike out the word "an," next preceding the word "interpreter," in line 8, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the word "the."

Strike out, commencing at the end of line 8, page 1, the following: "Appointed by the United States district court as provided in section 34 of said act."

Strike out all of section 5, on page 3.

And the Senate agree to the same.

H. A. COOPER,
R. R. HITT,
W. L. JONES,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. B. FORAKER,
J. H. GALLINGER,
S. R. MALLORY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 12396, to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education provided for by said act, respectfully submit the following statement as to the action agreed upon in the accompanying conference report:

The first amendment proposed by the conferees is inserted for the purpose only of making clearer the intent of the section.

As now agreed upon by the conferees, the first section fixes the salary of the commissioner of education for Porto Rico at $4,000 per annum, and empowers the executive council of Porto Rico to determine the salaries of all the officials and assistants appointed by the United States district court for Porto Rico, including the clerk and the interpreter, and also provides that they shall be paid out of the revenues of Porto Rico, as other salaries and expenses of like character are paid.

The second amendment proposed by the conferees strikes out the word "a," after the word "including," in line 8, on page 1, and inserts in lieu thereof the word "the," and is merely verbal.

The third amendment proposed by the conferees strikes out the word "an," in line 8, on page 1, and inserts in lieu thereof the word "the," and is merely verbal.

The fourth amendment proposed by the conferees strikes out certain words in order to avoid a repetition of the same words.

The fifth amendment proposed by the conferees strikes out all of section 5 of the Senate amendments. This Senate amendment related to the public lands of Porto Rico and made an appropriation of $16,000, which the Secretary of the Interior was authorized and directed to expend, if, in his judgment, advisable, in ascertaining the location and quantity of such lands, and in compensating a surveyor-general and the necessary clerical assistants.

Your conferees are of the opinion that, in view of all the circumstances, the whole matter of the survey of the public lands in Porto Rico should be deferred until the next session of Congress.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, allow me a word of explanation. There has recently been made a report by a commissioner appointed by the War Department to ascertain the public lands in Porto Rico, with a view to fortifying the island. That report, which, as I have said, is quite recent, has not yet been thoroughly digested; there has been no opportunity to do so; and in view of the importance of the subject the conferees were unanimously of the opinion that the whole subject had better be deferred until the next session of Congress.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can give us some approximate idea of the quantity of public lands remaining there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The governor-general wrote a letter on that subject to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Porto Rico and the Pacific Islands. As we computed the amount yesterday, it is about 120,000 acres.

Mr. GAINES. From what revenues is this superintendent of public instruction paid—from the local revenues or from the United States Treasury?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. From the revenues of the island of Porto Rico.

Mr. GAINES. Is the fixing of the salary of this officer left to the local legislature down there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is not. The gentleman misapprehends the purport of that section.

Mr. GAINES. I did not hear the report read. There was so much confusion.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. All that is left to the executive council is the fixing of the salaries of the officers and assistants appointed by the district court. The reason for enacting the law in its present form is the fact that one of the Solicitors of the Treasury rendered recently a decision in which he said that the original Porto Rican act was so worded as to preclude the payment of salaries to the clerk of the court, so that this officer was obliged to rely upon his fees. As I understand from a letter which I have recently received from Judge Holt—a letter written last week—there have been only 19 cases filed in his branch of that court at San Juan.

That would not give the clerk sufficient compensation, and the judge has paid a part of the salary out of his own pocket. In order to enable the clerk to receive a sufficient salary, we have conferred upon the executive council the authority I have just stated.

Mr. GAINES. Then Congress has created this office and authorized the compensation of the officer to be paid out of the revenues of Porto Rico.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Congress has not determined the amount of salary, but has left it to be determined at the discretion of the executive council.

Mr. GAINES. From revenues paid into the Porto Rican treasury or into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. These revenues are paid into the treasury of Porto Rico.

Mr. GAINES. Is not that contrary to the fundamental law? Does not the Constitution require that all revenues collected anywhere in the United States shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman will remember that under the Porto Rican act passed last spring a very large amount of revenue is collected from Porto Rico, something like a million and a half of dollars. Moreover, there will be in the treasury of Porto Rico additional revenue arising from local taxation upon the property of the islands to meet the insular expenses.

Mr. GAINES. What is your judgment as to whether that revenue should be paid into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not know that I am here to interpret constitutional law. I am willing that the question shall be decided by the Supreme Court of the United States; and pending that decision I do not want to decide the question.

Mr. GAINES. I knew that I was asking a gentleman who is good authority, and I expected a clear-cut answer.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I prefer to leave the question to the Supreme Court of the United States—for the time being at least.

I move the adoption of the report.

The question being taken, the report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted was laid on the table.

ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9829) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States, by holding an international exposition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mines, forests, and the sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with, and that the statement of the House conferees be read instead.

Mr. KING. I desire to reserve all points of order against this report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The gentleman from Utah reserves all points of order.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, at the proper time I desire to make a motion to recede from the disagreement of the House to the second amendment of the Senate and concur in that amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that after this report is acted upon it will be my privilege to ask the House to further insist on its disagreement to amendment No. 2, and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to dispensing with the reading of the conference report.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 9829, "An act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mines, forests, and sea, in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

"That the House recede from its disagreeing vote on Senate amendment No. 1, and agree to the same."

That the conferees have been unable to agree to Senate amendment numbered 2, providing for the erection of a Government building and the making of a Government exhibit at the Interstate and West Indian Exposition in the city of Charleston, S. C.

J. A. TAWNEY,
GEO. W. STEELE,
JOHN S. WILLIAMS,
Managers on the part of the House.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW,
H. C. LODGE,
GEO. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9829) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mines, forest, and the sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in the accompaning conference report on each of the Senate amendments, namely:

By the action of the conference submitted in the accompaning report, the House recedes on amendment numbered 1.

On amendment numbered 2 the conference committee were unable to agree.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this report.

Mr. HAUGEN. I suggest that we are entitled to know what the Senate amendments numbered 1 and 2 are. I do not think the matter is made sufficiently plain in the statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. Amendment No. 1 is what is known as the Sunday-closing amendment, and amendment No. 2 is the appropriation for the exposition at Charleston, S. C. We agree to the first amendment and disagree to the second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 2 and ask for a further conference.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I move that the House recede from its disagreement on amendment No. 2 and agree to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first upon the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TAWNEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rules, how much time is allowed for discussion under this proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is entitled to the floor for one hour; he can yield such time as he may desire.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I ask the gentleman to yield me twenty minutes, as I wish to yield to other gentlemen on the floor.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not expect to occupy one-half of the time. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to occupy only three minutes of my time, and wish to be informed when that has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the gentleman's attention when three minutes have expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the Senate in which I move to concur provides for holding an Interstate and West India Exposition at Charleston, commencing December next and lasting until the following June. The appropriation of $250,000 that is asked for is solely for the purpose of furnishing a Government exhibit, and no part of it whatever is to be appropriated to paying the current expenses of the exposition.

Two hundred thousand dollars have already been subscribed by the citizens of Charleston and others, $50,000 by the State of South Carolina, and $50,000 by the city of Charleston, making in all $300,000 already subscribed, and it is estimated that there will be, including the sale of concessions and tickets, $1,000,000 spent in carrying it through. The greatest interest has been exhibited throughout the country in behalf of this exposition. A number of States have determined to erect buildings and furnish exhibits; also a number of cities in the North.

Everywhere throughout the country the project has been encouraged in every way, and it remains to be seen whether the House of Representatives, which is the special representative of the people of the country, will deny to us what everybody else has given. Why should we not have an appropriation of $250,000, one-twentieth of the amount given to St. Louis? It is, as I say, purely for a Government exhibit. All the expenses of the exposition will by paid by the company that has organized it.

What excuse can be given, Mr. Speaker, for denying Charleston this small appropriation when we are giving $5,000,000 to St. Louis, $500,000 to Buffalo, and have heretofore made appropriations to Omaha and other cities? You will observe that this money is simply for the purpose of giving the people who visit Charleston the right and privilege of inspecting the Government exhibits, which are all the time exhibited to the public here in Washington at the expense of the Government. Why should not the people who visit the Charleston exposition have the right to see what visitors to Washington see every day? I can not imagine how gentlemen can consistently vote for these other appropriations and deny this small sum to South Carolina.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Charleston have put forth the most strenuous efforts to make their exposition a success. They have planned it on broad and comprehensive lines. They have provided for 13 exposition buildings. They are making the most earnest efforts in all parts of the country to make it a national affair. They have met with no check so far, and an adverse vote here will proclaim to the world that their undertaking is unworthy of encouragement. I earnestly hope that the motion to concur will be adopted.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina means an appropriation of $250,000 for a Government exhibit at the Southern Interstate and West Indian Exposition to be held at Charleston. I am in favor of this appropriation. I know of no reason why we should deny to the exposition at Charleston this comparatively small sum when we have repeatedly appropriated much larger sums for like expositions in other sections of the country.

This bill carries an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the celebration of the centennial of the Louisiana purchase. I am in favor of this appropriation, although I know that this sum is to be turned over to the commissioners to be expended in behalf of that exposition. It should be remembered that Charleston does not ask aid from the Government for the exposition itself. They only ask that the Government shall patronize the exposition to the extent of making an exhibit there, just as it has at Atlanta, Nashville, Louisville, New Orleans, Chicago, and other places.

I believe that exhibits of this kind are of great benefit to the people and to the country. They are a source of education. They give new inspiration to the genius of our country, cause our people to become better acquainted with each other, and are of lasting benefit to all concerned.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another reason why I shall vote for this appropriation. I remember, less than three years ago, on the floor of this House, the Representatives from South Carolina and other Southern States stood shoulder to shoulder with those from Wisconsin and the North and voted $50,000,000 for the national defense. That act was most generously applauded. The old sectional line had been wiped out, and we all rejoiced that we were one people, having but one country and one flag. A few months after that, when volunteers had been called for and two regiments from Wisconsin, having been for weeks at Chickamauga, where they contracted the germs of typhoid, had started on their way to Porto Rico, they waited for transports at Charleston.

The transports finally sailed having the Wisconsin regiments on board, but there were left behind in the hospitals of that city 87 boys from my district and adjoining counties, sick with fever. Upon the adjournment of Congress I went down there to visit them and do what I could for their relief. The mayor of the city took me in his carriage out to the hospital. As we approached the buildings, looking out across the harbor I could see Fort Sumter, and I remembered that it was there where the first guns were fired on that dark and dreary night in April, when the storm of secession broke over this Union. I went into the hospitals, and I visited the boys. I found there Major Morgan, Captain Abel, Private Kelsey, and many others. I found there the best ladies of the city of Charleston, caring for and nursing back to life those brave Wisconsin boys who had gone out to serve their country in her hour of need. Those who had recovered sufficiently to be up and about the building told me that repeatedly the ladies had called with their carriages and taken them to drive, and had shown them every courtesy and every attention, and I want to say to you that in my judgment many of those boys owe their lives to the kind treatment received at the hands of the people of the city of Charleston. [Applause.] I went back to my home in Wisconsin and told the mothers and the families of those boys of the treatment they were receiving down at Charleston, and when the boys came home they corroborated what I had said.

From that time to this there has ever been a feeling of tenderness and affection from the people of my district toward the people of Charleston, and there is not one of the 500 boys of my district who went out with the Second Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers in the Spanish war but what wants me to show my appreciation of what Charleston did for Wisconsin by voting for this appropriation.

You may call this sentiment—and so it is—but thank God, I am not ashamed of it. There is some sentiment in it, and I think there ought to be. I would be ashamed to go back to the people of my district and say to them that after I had voted millions of dollars for commercial purposes I was afraid to vote the paltry sum of $250,000 for the Charleston Exposition.

Believing as I do that these exhibits are of benefit to the people, and because the old sectional lines have been wiped away, and the people of the South, and especially the people of Charleston, have shown their loyalty to the flag and their affection for the people of the North, and for the boys of Wisconsin at a time when care and attention were of very material benefit to them, I shall vote for this appropriation. [Loud applause.]

Mr. ELLIOTT. I will ask the other side to use some of its time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not care to occupy any of my time now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota declines to use any part of his time now.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I propose to vote for this amendment. I believe in these expositions. I believe that every one of them has done a great and general good. I believe in promoting at each and every one of them a Government exhibit. As I understand it, this amendment calls for a Government exhibit. We have voted appropriations for exhibitions at Omaha, at Nashville, at Buffalo, Chicago, and Philadelphia, all of them largely in excess of the appropriations asked for in this case. I believe Chicago was given $5,000,000 or more, St. Louis $5,000,000, and Buffalo $500,000. Now, this is an interstate exposition, and not only that, but an exposition that relates to the industries of the islands of the West Indies, and I believe it will serve a good purpose. I am in favor of this amendment.

Mr. GAINES. Is this exposition at St. Louis to be closed on Sunday?

Mr. TAWNEY. The House has just agreed, by the adoption of the conference report, to the Senate amendment, which is intended to close the exhibition on Sunday.

Mr. GAINES. Then it will be closed?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether it will be closed or not; whether it will have that effect I do not know.

Mr. STEELE. That is not fair; there is no question that it will be closed.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that by the adoption of the conference report it is the understanding that this exposition will be closed on Sunday.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. BROSIUS. That has been adopted.

Mr. TAWNEY. That has been adopted.

I will only occupy a few moments in answer or in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina. I am not, in opposing this motion, necessarily opposed to the South Carolina exposition, nor am I necessarily opposed to the Government appropriating a sum of money for the purpose of making an exhibit there. But in the last session of this Congress we enacted a law whereby we agreed with the people inhabiting the Louisiana territory, or the States and Territories carved out of that purchase, to appropriate $5,000,000 to aid in carrying forward to success an exposition to commemorate that important event in our national history. The conditions upon which that promise was made were that the people in those States should raise, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000,000, which they have done. With the evidence of that before us we passed this bill and sent it to the Senate, thus fulfilling our express promise. Many men voted in favor of the bill who were opposed to our making the pledge, but the pledge having been made, they felt in honor bound to keep it.

Now, those members of the House who thus voted are, by the action of the Senate in attaching to our bill carrying out this agreement a condition to appropriate money for an exposition at Charleston, placed in a position where they will have to either vote against the Government keeping its pledge or vote in favor of a proposition that they are unalterably opposed to. And it was exactly for this purpose that this amendment was made to the bill we passed. If legislation can be obtained by the aid of such methods as are being employed in respect to this amendment, then it is not necessary for this House to waste any time in the discussion of the merits of any proposition.

Why could not this proposition come before the House in a way whereby it might be considered and voted upon independent of the question of whether or not we are going to vote in favor or against the Government keeping the pledge which it made at the last session of Congress? That, Mr. Speaker, is a very substantial reason why this amendment should not be concurred in.

Mr. GAINES. Which do you think is more meritorious of the two projects—the one that makes a direct gift of $5,000,000 to St. Louis, to do as they please with, or the one that gives $250,000 to make a Government exhibit pure and simple in South Carolina?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman's question involves more than is the fact. We do not propose to give $5,000,000 to the people of St. Louis for them "to do as they please with." We give it to them for the specific purpose of aiding in the success of an exposition that will commemorate an event that contributed more than any other to the industrial welfare of the people, and to the power and influence of our nation at home and abroad.

Mr. GAINES. Is it to make a Government exhibit?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not for the purpose of making a Government exhibit, and nobody claims that it is.

Mr. GAINES. That is all that it has been heretofore, except at the Columbian Exposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg to differ with the gentleman. New Orleans got $1,250,000 from the Treasury of the United States to aid in carrying forward that exposition. The Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia got $1,550,000.

Mr. GAINES. The last was purely national.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Chicago Exposition got over $3,000,000.

Mr. GAINES. That was purely national.

Mr. TAWNEY. That was, and so is this; this is a national and international exhibition. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that you are asked by this amendment to invest as much money in the Government exhibit at Charleston, S. C., as there is to be invested in the entire exposition in that city by the people interested.

Now, I have here the prospectus showing that the State of South Carolina has appropriated $50,000, and the city of Charleston $50,000, and the exposition company have raised in addition to that $150,000, making a total of $250,000.

Mr. STEELE. Let me correct the gentleman. It is not invested; with the exception of $50,000 it is all prospective.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Oh, no; $200,000 has been subscribed by citizens, 3,000 subscriptions in all, showing how popular the subscription was; and all the installments have been called for except three or four, and have been paid in.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand, the purpose of the exposition at Charleston is practically the same as that of a respectable State fair, and where there would be no more reason for making the appropriation for that than there would for appropriating money for any State fair.

Mr. TAWNEY. None whatever. We are asked to invest in a Government exhibit at that exposition an amount equal to the total amount which has been subscribed, if you please, and possibly paid in, for the purpose of carrying on the exposition. In other words, the Government exhibit will be practically the whole show at this Charleston Exposition.

Now, some gentlemen on the other side appeal to the sympathy of this House on the ground that we ought not to discriminate against different sections of the country. I find, Mr. Speaker, that we have appropriated heretofore for two classes of expositions, one international and the other purely local. The Centennial Exposition was the first, and then the Columbian Exposition, and then the proposed Louisiana Exposition. Now, in addition to those three, we have had eight expositions, and of the amount appropriated by the Government either to aid in carrying forward these expositions or for the purposes of making a Government exhibit I find that $1,990,000 went to the Southern section of our country. The South has had four of these expositions, the North four; and the Northern expositions that were purely local received $1,660,000. As the gentleman from Massachusetts says, the Southern section has far less than one-half the population that the North has. The appropriation for the St. Louis Exposition, it may well be said, will benefit the South far more than the North. So that gentlemen have no ground to claim that we are discriminating against the Southern section of the country if we disagree to this amendment.

But there is a vast difference between these two propositions. The one is international in its character; the one commemorates one of the greatest events of the history of our country, and it will also commemorate the first great international event in our national history, while the Charleston exposition is, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] said a moment ago, nothing more or less than a State fair, such as almost every State has every year; and we are asked to contribute to that fair an exhibit which will cost the Government of the United States an amount equal to the total amount invested by the people of South Carolina in that exposition.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH].

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to distinguish between sections of our common country in gifts of this character or between one exposition and another. They are all praiseworthy and educational. We have voted liberally for expositions in the North. This measure contains an appropriation of $5,000,000 to the St. Louis Exposition in celebration of the Louisiana purchase. It seems to me a small sum that South Carolina asks, when compared to those heretofore voted. I believe that expositions of this character are a benefit to our country. They are the gathering places of our citizens, who attain the best advantages of an educational character. They are places where new ideas get into the minds of our citizens, where genius is stimulated and invention born for the benefit of civilization and mankind; and I am willing to take this one additional step in the interest of our national fraternity and the welfare of that historical city of Charleston and the State of South Carolina.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman think——

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I can not yield in my time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman think that this applies to the members of this House?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If the gentleman will give me more time, I will yield.

Mr. Speaker, the exposition proposed to be held at Charleston, S. C., is an Interstate and West Indian Exposition. Charleston is admirably located for such a purpose. It is an historic city, full of great interest to the country and its people. It was at Charleston that one of the first victories of the Revolutionary war was won, and old Fort Moultrie still raises her historic head in that city, from whose walls Sergeant Jasper leaped and rescued the American flag when the staff had been shot away by the British invaders. It was at Charleston that the first shot of the war of the rebellion was fired, calling millions of men—fathers and sons, brothers and neighbors—to the country's service and the nation's defense; and I shall be glad to join in celebrating the return of good will between the North and South by this splendid evidence of appreciation on the part of the Congress of the United States.

For my part, I believe that this appropriation should be given. If it is proper to give such an appropriation to Buffalo, if it was proper to give such an appropriation to St. Louis, why should we not give it to Charleston, and allow the citizens of that city and State to have an exposition worthy the period through which we are now passing, and illustrative of the genius of the age.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to say a word in this debate, but I could not sit by without making a protest against the proposed appropriation for the exposition at Charleston, S. C. True, five millions are given for the St. Louis Exposition. St. Louis has raised ten millions. These five millions are a gift. St. Louis puts up two dollars to every one that the Government advances.

I stood and worked and voted as hard as I could against committing the Government to the St. Louis Exposition; but when committed, that committal became an obligation. Now, upon a provision to meet that obligation, another body, in the closing days of this Congress, adopts this additional legislation giving $250,000 for the purpose of having a Government exhibit at Charleston. So far as the Senate is concerned, it says to friends of the St. Louis Exposition: "The obligation to St. Louis shall not be fulfilled unless you will drag through also this appropriation for Charleston."

Now, as I have said a hundred times before, the rule is that the body which proposes legislation upon an appropriation bill must recede if the other body insists upon its objection. I have no doubt that the Senate will recede, if the House will insist on its disagreement of this amendment.

Now, upon the merits: I have no pride of opinion in regard to granting anything to any exposition; but I say respectfully it seems to me that the Charleston proposition does not commend itself to Congress. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to be appropriated by the Government, with a second $250,000 to be subscribed in South Carolina——

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman suggests that this proposition does not commend itself to Congress. I wish to know whether any proposition for an exposition anywhere in the United States other than the exposition at Chicago, in his State, has, in the gentleman's view, commended itself to Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I made the fight on this side and against the other side—and I think I had more to do with procuring the appropriation than any other man in Congress—for the Atlanta Exposition. I made the fight for the New Orleans Exposition. I helped also in securing the appropriation for the Nashville Exposition. But this matter has reached a point now where the exposition racket runs to the point of State fairs, and soon it will extend to county fairs. [Applause.] In my judgment the time has come to call a halt.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask the gentleman to let me make one statement in connection with that which he has made.

Mr. CANNON. I have only five minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. This will only occupy a second. The gentleman stated that an appropriation of $250,000 had been made by the city of Charleston.

Mr. CANNON. So I have been told.

Mr. FINLEY. I hold in my hand a telegram signed by the mayor of that city stating that the amount of the appropriation by the city of Charleston is $350,000.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; I am glad if it is $350,000. The amount was stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] as $250,000, and he was not contradicted.

It is all very nice to talk about "the old flag and an appropriation," and about sentiment, and about "the first battle of the Revolution" (if the first battle was fought in that part of the country), and about Moultrie, and about Fort Sumter, and about the "bloody chasm," and about "the era of peace and good will." I submit that with appropriations piling up mountain high the time has come to have a little sentiment for the taxpayer. [Applause.] Therefore, I want to give notice now that to the best of my ability, my voice, weak though it may be, and my vote, though it counts but one—from this on my voice and my vote are against any and all propositions that will take money from the public Treasury for expositions. "Give us a rest." [Loud applause.]

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT].

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, let us look at this matter dispassionately and without excitement. Let us look at it as a business proposition, for it is one of plain business. This Government is asked to spend $250,000 in order to place its own exhibits where they can be seen at the Charleston and West Indian Exposition by visitors from every section of the country. Charleston has raised $250,000 and the State legislature has given $50,000. Now, will the Government do it? This money is not a gift from the Government, but only spending its own money to place upon exhibit its own resources. The gentleman from Minnesota says the St. Louis Exposition will be an international one. I say Charleston's will be a national one and will be equally as important as the other. Let us ask if South Carolina's history does not entitle her to consideration along this line, as well as the State of New York, Tennessee, Louisiana, or any other of them.

Yes, sir, the record of South Carolina in our struggle for independence can very safely challenge a comparison with any other of her sister colonies. In the patriotism of her women, none excel her, and she can recall with pride the devotion of Mrs. Motte, whose palatial residence being occupied by the British, furnished the patriots with the means of destruction of her own beautiful home. She can point with pride to the perilous trip of Emily Geiger on horseback from old Cambridge to Charleston, carrying the message to General Greene that foiled the brutal Tarleton in his murderous designs. Many other names might be mentioned, but time forbids, and then I am only speaking from memory on the spur of the moment about some of the noble women and men of my native State.

I know her statesmen were potential and prominent in the organization and establishment of our magnificent system of government. She gave to the struggling patriots the "Swamp Fox" in the person of Marion, who was never caught; the gamecock Sumter, who was never defeated, and the gallant Moultrie, who never gave up the fort; and when the chivalric Frenchman, the gallant soldier, the sincere lover of liberty, and Washington's friend and associate, Lafayette, was imprisoned in the Fortress Olmutz it was one of South Carolina's most distinguished soldiers and patriots, Colonel Laurens, who, without regard to the dangers involved in such an enterprise, at his own expense went to France and undertook to effect the release and escape of his illustrious companion in arms.

When future generations shall read the history of our Continental war, there is nothing in prose, poetry, or song, in fiction or reality, more captivating and instructive than South Carolina's part in accomplishing the independence of America. There stands to-day at the head of Broad street, in the city of Charleston, that grand old city by the sea, the very building, then used as a prison, in which patriots were confined by the Tories, and visitors may now see the very spot, with the very iron staples, in which the patriot Hayne was confined, and from which he was taken to cruel and bloody execution, and many other places may be seen there which makes Charleston one of the most historic cities in the United States.

Whatever may have been the history of South Carolina in later years I will not now speak, except to say that her sons have nothing to apologize for or to be ashamed of. I can simply refer now to her earlier actions and repeat with pride Mr. Webster's reference to Massachusetts in his famous debate with Senator Hayne, "There stands Massachusetts with her Boston Commons, her Fanueil Hall, and her Bunker Hill, and there she will stand forever." The same grand and eloquent tribute will equally apply to South Carolina, where she will stand upon her record forever. Now, Mr. Speaker, South Carolina invites her sister States to come and erect buildings there and place their products on exhibition. She asks the General Government to do so.

We invite the people from the North, South, East, and West to come to South Carolina to see our people and become better acquainted with them. Let us have this small appropriation, and come down into the country whose patriot soldiers have moistened the soil of this nation, as I have already said, upon every battlefield from Bunker Hill and Lexington to Yorktown for American liberty. Come down amongst us and see our marvelous advancement in agriculture, manufacturing, mining, and all the other industries. Come down amongst and help us to prove to the world that we do not punish the most humble citizen, red, white, black, or blue, without a just cause, and help us to give the lie to the slanderous statements recently published in the North American, published in Philadelphia. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, there is an old and a wise saying that consistency is a jewel. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has probably never heard that saying, if we are to judge by his actions, his votes, and his speeches. He has originated and passed some of the most lavish and extravagant appropriation bills.

He has advocated and voted for some of the most reckless and uncalled-for expenditures of the people's money. He has done as much as anyone on that side of the House to make this a billion and a half dollar Congress, the most costly and expensive Congress in all the history of our country. When we compare his record with his professions, he is as disingenuous as he is inconsistent.

He is strenuously opposed now to this appropriation of $250,000 for a Government exhibit and the necessary and incidental Government building at the Charleston Exposition. At the last moment—in the dying days of this Congress—he is awakened and rises up in patriotic indignation to sound the alarm, and in stentorian tones declare these appropriations must cease or the exchequer of the Government will be depleted. It seems to me the gentleman's good intentions are rather late, and should have been put in execution long ere this.

Sir, I am at least consistent. I am in favor of the exposition in Charleston, S. C., and I shall do all I can in my humble way to make it a success and an object lesson that will help the Southland and reflect credit on the whole country. I believe in these expositions of our progress, our industry, and our material resources.

I believe they do great good; that they are great object lessons to the people and great educators for the masses. The Government should participate in all of them and give what aid it can. The benefits to the people are inestimable and the small sum spent wise and prudent economy that will ultimately be returned an hundred fold.

Entertaining these views I shall cordially stand by my friend from South Carolina, and I trust his motion will prevail. I am on record in favor of expositions. I voted for the Omaha Exposition, for the Pan-American Exposition, for the St. Louis Exposition, and on the roll call I shall vote in favor of the Charleston Exposition. I like the people of the South; I believe in them, in their future, and I want to help them demonstrate to the world in an educational way their greatness, their grandeur, their commerce, their resources, their progress, and their material industries.

In my judgment, this exposition is most desirable and will do incalculable good. It will astonish many, and rivet the attention of America on the New South, with its innumerable opportunities, its untold wealth, and its myriad possibilities. Give the grand old South a chance, and the result will be as surprising as the vast amount of invaluable information disseminated will be beneficial.

This, sir, is not a local or a sectional matter. It will help and benefit our whole country. I dissent from the provincial and narrow view taken by some gentlemen on this question. The Columbian Exposition at Chicago did more for this country in different ways than the most eloquent tongue can ever portray.

Every exposition ever held in this country has been a great national blessing that has made for peace, for progress, and for civilization. We spend yearly millions and millions of dollars for useless objects and worthless matters, but when a few thousands of dollars are asked for educational purposes, for the benefit of humanity, for the diffusion of information, some all-wise and far-seeing cheeseparing statesman gravely arises and in sepulchral tones objects.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. I am more than delighted to know that there is at least one voice upon the Republican side that is raised against the reckless appropriations made by this Congress.

Unfortunately, his voice, so far as its influence upon the Republicans is concerned, is like "one crying in the wilderness."

And yet my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is not entitled to much credit for his plea for economy. It is a deathbed repentance. Millions and hundreds of millions were appropriated this session, and he felt no duty resting upon him to warn the majority in Congress to halt in their wild and heedless efforts to plunder the public Treasury. Democrats upon this side of the House again and again raised their voices against the maladministration of the party in power, and the unconstitutional, unwarranted, and meretricious "grabs" which were made upon the National Treasury.

When nearly a billion dollars have been taken from the people in three months, then a faint voice is heard from the darkness of Republican jungles, crying out in doleful and lugubrious sounds, "We are lost; woe is me!"

And yet, Mr. Speaker, in the interest of fairness and truth I am compelled to say that, in my humble opinion, the record of some members upon this side of the Chamber in regard to certain appropriations is not free from criticism.

Mr. Speaker, since I have been in Congress I have come to believe that no proposition can be suggested in a legislative body, which involves the appropriation of money from the Treasury, that can not be supported by some kind of an argument and some show of reason.

We hear that we should appropriate $5,000,000 for the St. Louis fair because it commemorates the splendid achievement of Jefferson in securing by peaceful means a great empire; and that we should give to South Carolina $250,000 because of "sentiment."

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this whole scheme. I think it is wrong and indefensible to take the people's money, as it is purposed by the bill under consideration. I voted against the St. Louis proposition. If it were within my power I would defeat the scheme by which $5,000,000 are taken from the people and turned over to a private corporation in the city of St. Louis.

The whole system is wrong. We are running wild upon the subject of "fairs" and "expositions."

It is an easy thing, apparently, to organize a private corporation, subscribe a few dollars, and then lobby through Congress a bill to put into the treasury of the corporation hundreds of thousands of dollars, and even millions, for the ostensible purpose of having a "fair." When is this thing to end?

One State asks to-day, to-morrow another makes its appearance, and next week some county will be heard from. Of course each "exposition" is "international." By labeling it "international" the robbery of the Treasury becomes a virtue.

It is similar to the villainies found in the river and harbor bills; a dribbling, shallow creek is called a "river," and forthwith it becomes so important for "commerce" that an appropriation should be made to widen and deepen it.

Mr. Speaker, we have a Constitution, although the party in power treats it with supreme contempt. There are limitations placed upon the legislative department of the Government. It is a crime to tax the people for any purpose other than to raise revenue for the economical administration of the affairs of the Government.

It is revolutionary to use the taxing power to aid private enterprises. All history teaches that the persistent and flagrant abuse of this sovereign power is destructive of liberty, and the sure precursor of tyranny.

I am interested in the great State of South Carolina. I am proud of her history, and glory in her mighty achievements. I hold in sacred memory the illustrious Democrats who have held her banner.

In all that will advance her interests I shall rejoice. But I hope I may never support a proposition that I regard as a violation of the spirit and letter of the Constitution of the United States, no matter how apparently beneficial it may seem to the great State of South Carolina or any other State of our Union.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I just wish to say one word. It is estimated that the expense of this exposition outside of the Government appropriation will be $1,000,000.

I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague [Mr. LATIMER].

Mr. LATIMER. I yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX].

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, the other day, when this appropriation was up, I opposed the appropriation for the St. Louis fair, and referred to this that was to follow. Now, I am like my friend from Illinois. I think the time has come, on this question, when there should be a halt upon these appropriations; but I can not see how this House can stand here and propose to make an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the St. Louis fair and refuse an appropriation to the city of Charleston.

But our friends on the other side, and especially the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Illinois, say that we have obligated ourselves at a previous Congress to make this appropriation of $5,000,000 to the St. Louis fair. Let me call your attention to another thing. On the 19th day of April, 1898, you obligated yourselves to the world and especially to Cuba to do certain things; and I say now that before the sun sets you will violate those obligations openly and aboveboard [Applause.] Now, see if you do not do that; see where your obligations lead you, and see if you are as loyal to the obligations you made on April 19, 1898, as you are to the St. Louis fair.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. There is no more time remaining.

Mr. LATIMER. I had three minutes.

The SPEAKER. You yielded two minutes; your colleague used half a minute, and now the time has all expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague have two minutes. He yielded under a misapprehension.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LATIMER. I want to appeal to this House and gentlemen to show now that you feel and will act in accordance with the expressions that have been given out by the President of the United States and members on the floor of this House in regard to the hostilities that have been exhibited for the last twenty-five years toward the South and especially toward South Carolina. This is an opportunity to show absolutely that the feeling of hostility toward the South, and toward South Carolina, has been obliterated. This is the first time that South Carolina has come before Congress and asked for an appropriation from the National Government. This is an opportunity to show that State that you feel toward her just as you feel toward St. Louis, Chicago, and New Orleans, and Buffalo. This is a small appropriation, and I hope this House will vote for it, and agree to the Senate amendment, keeping this $250,000 in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] says this is a business proposition. I thoroughly agree with him in that statement, and it is because the business end of the proposition is all on the side of the Charleston exposition that I object to the appropriation of the money carried by this amendment. You come to Congress and demand that we make an exhibit there wholly disproportionate to the character of the exposition which you propose holding. This is the result of tacking onto the bill which we passed and sent to the other end of the Capitol a proposition wholly different and not germane. It comes to us now in such a way that the House can not consider, correct, or amend any defects that exist in the Senate amendment.

This, Mr. Speaker, is alone a sufficient reason why this amendment should not be concurred in. By this amendment the House is literally held up. You will now either vote against keeping the promises which you have made to the people of St. Louis or else you will vote in favor of a proposition which, if it stood alone in its present form, would not receive any favor whatever in this House. The plea made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER] in favor of this proposition, that it would be the highest evidence of the complete wiping out of sectional lines, has no foundation in fact. We have been appropriating money for the purpose of making exhibits at Southern expositions ever since 1884. We appropriated in 1884 for the New Orleans Exposition $1,350,000, and in addition to that we appropriated $300,000 for a building and exhibit.

We appropriated for the Louisville Exhibition; we appropriated for the Atlanta exposition, and we also appropriated for the Nashville Exposition. It is not on that ground, it is not because it is in the South, that I object to this proposition, but I object to having the proposition coupled with a bill that is intended only to carry out our agreement, a proposition that otherwise many members of this House would oppose, and I should oppose in its present form. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the yeas and nays on this.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 91, nays 164, answered "present" 9, not voting 89; as follows:

So the motion was rejected.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For this day:

Mr. DAHLE with Mr. MCCULLOCH.

Mr. BULL with Mr. WILLIAM E. WILLIAMS.

For this vote:

Mr. CONNER with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. MUDD with Mr. DE ARMOND.

Mr. BAILEY of Kansas with Mr. BREWER.

Mr. O'GRADY with Mr. GASTON.

Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. GRIGGS.

On Charleston amendment:

Mr. KAHN with Mr. COX.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. STOKES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I was present and listening, but did not hear my name called, and I desire to vote.

The name of Mr. NEWLANDS was called, and he voted as above recorded.

The result was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TAWNEY], that the House further insist on its disagreement to amendment No. 2 and ask for a further conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as managers on the part of the House Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. STEELE, and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, having under consideration House resolution No. 441, report the same herewith with a recommendation that it be agreed to:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14017) making appropriations for the Army and without intervening motion to move to concur in the Senate amendments thereto in gross; after two hours' debate (one hour on each side) the previous question shall be considered as ordered on said motion, and a vote then be had thereon without delay or intervening motion.

Mr. DALZELL. Upon that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. HAY. A division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEELE. The call for a division came too late. It came after the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was putting it rapidly, not anticipating any opposition, and the gentleman was cut off from a fair opportunity to demand a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 118, noes 93.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 120, answered "present" 4, not voting 90; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

On this vote:

Mr. BARHAM with Mr. GLYNN.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin with Mr. BELL.

Mr. JOY with Mr. RIDGELY.

Mr. KAHN with Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. FARIS with Mr. BRENNER.

Mr. BULL with Mr. SPIGHT.

Mr. SPRAGUE with Mr. ZIEGLER.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.

Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. UNDERHILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. MCDOWELL.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition at this time to discuss any of the questions that may be incidentally involved in the discussion of this rule. The proposition embodied in the rule is that the Army appropriation bill, which comes back from the Senate with sundry amendments, shall be voted upon on a motion to concur in the Senate amendments, and the proposition is that there shall be two hours' debate—one hour on either side.

In addition to that, of course, there are forty minutes, under the rules of the House, for debate on the rule—twenty minutes on either side. As far as my twenty minutes are concerned, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman to say that we shall have forty minutes' debate on the rule.

Mr. DALZELL. That is the understanding.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, we are brought by this rule to the consideration of one of the most important legislative subjects ever presented to the American Congress. This rule forces a vote of the House of Representatives, after one hour's debate, upon a general appropriation bill carrying appropriations for the Army for the next fiscal year, loaded down with the most offensive, obnoxious, and unconstitutional provisions that were ever ingrafted, in my judgment, upon a bill presented to the American Congress.

Mr. Speaker, these provisions of legislation are ingrafted upon this general appropriation bill in defiance of every sound legislative principle and in absolute defiance of the rules of this House. The rules expressly provide that no such legislation shall go upon a general appropriation bill; and yet in defiance of that provision we are brought to the consideration of these far-reaching and most monstrous propositions. We are to have no opportunity to offer a single, solitary amendment to them or even discuss them before the House and country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say this rule ought to be voted down. We propose in these amendments—and I shall not have an opportunity to refer to them except in the briefest manner—by one of them we are called upon to make legislative provision for 10,000,000 people in the Philippine Islands. We send to govern them a commission composed of five men, or, what would be worse, a military governor, who is to have no restraint placed upon him except his own sweet will and the instructions of the Chief Executive of this nation.

He is not required to support the Constitution of the United States, and such an obligation may not be put upon him here. The rights of these ten millions of people are wholly disregarded, and they are to be governed indefinitely under the provisions of this bill. Some gentlemen, justifying their action in voting for these Senate amendments, may cite the Louisiana purchase. They may cite other precedents in our history and undertake to say they find something to warrant this far-reaching and unconstitutional legislation, but I deny it.

I deny that there is anything comparable in the government of the Louisiana territory in 1803 with the methods contemplated in this bill. Why, Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen are satisfied with the provisions as to the Louisiana purchase, let them present that here as a substitute for the pending provision for the Philippine Islands and there will be no division between the parties. If they are sincere in citing that as a precedent, let them tender the same plan for the government of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Speaker, under this bill there will be a government set up in the Philippines over 10,000,000 people who are denied every guaranty given by our Constitution—the right of trial by jury, the right of representation, the right to a voice in their government—and must submit to oppressive taxation without representation of any kind or character. A party founded on freedom, as our friends on the other side claim their party was founded, a party brought into its existence to give freedom to a suffering people, are now proposing to place upon 10,000,000 subjects of America a slavery more galling, if possible, than was ever known in our history or was applicable to those in African slavery.

No right to trial by jury; no constitutional restrictions; no obligations to control them; nothing except the arbitrary will of the men who are sent there to govern them. All the sacred guarantees in the bill of rights are denied them. They are not to look with favor to any provision in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the country under which they live—the Constitution of their country does not apply to them.

Mr. Speaker, this provision is contrary to the traditions and principles of Republicanism and Democracy and every other party that ever existed in this Republic. This rule ought to be voted down for the reasons I have mentioned. In addition to that the Senate amendments deal with Cuba. On April 20, 1898, we gave the people of Cuba and the world a solemn pledge that in waging war on Spain we did not do so for conquest, and did not intend to interfere with the people of Cuba except to give them a stable government and insure them their independence.

Our solemn declaration was—

That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

And again:

That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

This bill denies to the people of Cuba a free, independent government. Yet we are not to be permitted to amend it; we are not permitted to mention in detail the provisions of the bill, because it can not be done in the short space of an hour. No man can discuss this measure properly if he consumed all the time given for the discussion. I take it that the majority have prepared their minds to vote to concur in the Senate amendments in gross. On yesterday they were ready to nonconcur, and a resolution was presented and reported to the House proposing to nonconcur in these amendments. To-day this great party in the majority, without a policy, it seems, as to these foreign subjects, reverses its action of yesterday and now comes and proposes to concur in every amendment proposed by the Senate.

Mr. GAINES. Just a moment for a question. The gentleman says that this proposed law is different from the law which was passed with relation to Louisiana and Florida. Does not the main difference consist in the fact that under this bill the President is to make the law, whereas in the other cases the President executed the existing law?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Undoubtedly that is so; but a still greater difference is that in the former cases the Government by the President was temporary. There was a time at which they died.

Mr. GAINES. Louisiana act continued eleven months exactly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If we had the opportunity to amend this bill we might provide that at the end of the next Congress the government now put in force should cease to operate, but now no provision of that kind is offered. The proposition is simply that this form of government shall last indefinitely, because when this bill is once passed there will be no opportunity ever to change the law until there shall be a Democratic President, a Democratic Senate, and a Democratic House of Representatives. And I say, Mr. Speaker, God speed the time when these blessings shall rest upon our Republic. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Of course, Mr. Speaker, in five minutes it would be utterly impossible to discuss the question before the House. We now have the first test, the first real, definite Congressional test of imperialism upon these mighty issues. Heretofore, with Congress shirking its duty, with Congress hesitating to act, with Congress willing to let the Constitution and the traditions of the country be disregarded and violated, the President has ruled with the hand and the power of an emperor. Now, with no opportunity for discussion, scarcely with the opportunity even for a protest, we are to have imperialism sanctioned by the Congress of the United States. There is thrust into this Chamber now, by the tyranny of the majority, by the connivance of others who had power and did not use it, a mighty question, which can not be considered here, but which is to be settled here.

In the closing hours of this sessions the body which could have prevented, the men who could have barred from this Chamber these great questions, for reasons of their own which I have not time to bring into light and upon which I do not care now to enter—for reasons of their own, yielding to inducements sufficiently powerful upon them and with them, have allowed this measure to come with these amendments to this House; and the House, taking the bidding of its master; the House, ready to surrender its prerogatives; the House, obedient and subservient, denies the right of debate which might be given, shrinks from the discussion of an hour or two, which might easily be given in addition to what is given, rushes blindly along the pathway of imperialism, spits upon the honor and the pledge of this great Government, dishonors the United States of America, and wrongs millions in the Philippines and in Cuba. Ah, weak, ignoble House! Ah, mean and contemptible tyranny—abject evidence of abject slavery!

There never has been a day fuller of fate for freedom and liberty in the Republic of the United States than this; and here, with the representatives of the American people shackled with trades and bargains and connivance, with cringing and bending of the knee that thrift may follow fawning, the rights of the American people are to be frittered away, their Constitution is to be disregarded, the people in the far-away Philippines are to be outraged, the risk of war in Cuba is to be hazarded, and all, all that those subservient enough to do it may register the decrees of imperial majesty here in the Congress of the United States of America; and, shame upon shame, this is to be done here in what is supposed to be the House of Representatives of the American people, but which really is the House of Representatives of the bosses and the managers and the traders and the traffickers, those who have no respect for the Constitution, those who have no respect for their constituencies, those who have no respect for what ought to be their own manhood, those who surrender their every right, those who grovel in the dust and seem to rejoice that they are so constituted that they may crawl instead of standing erect, as God probably intended that they should do. [Applause.]

If I had the time I would be glad to discuss this infamous measure. I would be glad to discuss the infamous procedure, the infamous surrender, the infamous cowardice, the infamous trading and trafficking, the infamous disregard of everything sacred and holy and decent and honorable and glorious in these United States of America. But the time is lacking. The people abroad, perhaps, in their day (for their day, I hope in the good providence of God, is coming) probably the people abroad may brand as they deserve, and may lash from public places, as ought to be done, the recreant men—men in appearance—recreant creatures, who are ready now to surrender everything and forego everything that is decent, honorable, and constitutional, and right—everything that has tended to make our nation glorious, and who resort willingly to everything that may make it infamous now and in all the hereafter.

I commend to the tyrants here, I commend to the sycophants and the traders and the traffickers elsewhere, the plunder they get. For one, I will stand here, even in the brief time that I have, true to my conceptions of the Constitution of my country, of the honor of the great Republic, of our duties to our own people and to civilization, and protest. I condemn, fruitlessly though it may be here, the infamy that you are perpetrating. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE].

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, this rule introduced here comports most harmoniously with the purposes which it seeks to accomplish. Resorted to in violation of all the observances of the House, in violation of our laws, with the deliberate purpose of imposing upon the country an infraction of every tradition, an abandonment of every principle we have professed, an absolute reversal of our history as a nation; and you propose to drag down the honored name of the Republic in the dust, to crush out liberty where we have promised to establish it, to break national faith, to violate our publicly proclaimed national promise, and for what? From motives of greed and lust of power alone.

Mr. Speaker, the die is cast; the purpose has been deliberately formed and will be relentlessly carried out, to go forward and fix the position of the United States amongst the nations of the earth as the oppressor of humanity rather than as heretofore the friend and the uplifter of the oppressed.

For one, while we have not the opportunity to discuss the infamous features of the measure proposed, and shall not have, for you dare not let us discuss it, I shall at least in the remainder of my life regard with satisfaction the fact that I had the opportunity, even though by but a word, to express my unutterable abhorrence of such infamous conduct.

What is it we do? I must put it in two brief propositions. We establish a tyrannous rule in the Philippine Islands against their will, depriving the inhabitants of the most valued and valuable rights of self-government, denying to them the right of citizenship, and make them subject entirely to the will of the President of the United States, the laws being administered by officers upon whom there is not imposed even the obligation of an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

On the other hand, after we made war against Spain to make the Cubans free and solemnly declared that we had no motive of conquest, that we had no intention of exercising sovereignty or jurisdiction except for the pacification of the island, and that when this was accomplished our forces should be withdrawn for the Cuban people were and of right should be free and independent, it is now proposed to force upon them permanently our own superintendence, and to require them, by the amendments on the pending bill, to recognize in their constitution, their organic law, our right to intervene when we see fit, to enforce a government such as we think is required to preserve life, property, and liberty.

Whatever gentlemen may think of the importance of American domination of Cuba, we may, under invocation of the Monroe doctrine, enforce our every right, a policy which we have never asserted in vain and under which we could continue honorably to protect all our interests; but even if we should suffer I hold that the preservation of a nation's honor is of the highest importance and that its plighted faith must be kept.

In all business and social relations society has laid upon the individual an obligation to keep his word, to perform his promise, and he can not, without the sacrifice of honor, break it. It is no less binding upon nations, and that man is no friend to his country who would have it violate this law. Commercial spirit has made us mad, and greed has taken the place in the hearts of men where patriotism should abide. Shall we, who struck the foremost nation in all this world to achieve our liberty, sell the mighty span of our large honors for so much trash as may be granted thus?

You steal away the liberties of men. It is not only an assault upon the liberties of the Filipinos and of the Cubans that you make, but it is an attack upon liberty everywhere, and one which threatens every household in our own land, because if we can force upon others this obnoxious and wrongful oppression it will ultimately steal away the liberties of Americans themselves. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have only one minute left, and I hope the gentleman will use some of his time.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Nineteen minutes and a half.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention of the Democratic members of this Congress to the excellent precedent for the bill which is denounced now as tyrannous. I want to invite their attention to the act of 1803, in the second General Statutes, page 245, enacted under Jefferson's Democratic Administration, providing:

JEFFERSON'S PLAN FOR LOUISIANA IN 1803.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Approved October 31, 1803.

In 1804, the following year, a further act was passed, which is found in the Second Statutes at Large, page 284:

JEFFERSON'S PLAN FOR LOUISIANA IN 1804.

SEC. 4. The legislative powers shall be vested in the governor and in thirteen of the most fit and discreet persons of the Territory, to be called the legislative council, who shall be appointed annually by the President of the United States from among those holding real estate therein, and who shall have resided one year at least in the said Territory and hold no office of profit under the territory of the United States.

The governor, by and with advice and consent of the said legislative council or of a majority of them, shall have power to alter, modify, or repeal the laws which may be in force at the commencement of this act. Their legislative powers shall also extend to all the rightful subjects of legislation; but no law shall be valid which is inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, or which shall lay any person under restraint, burden, or disability on account of his religious opinions, professions, or worship, in all which he shall be free to maintain his own and not burdened for those of another.

The governor shall publish throughout the said Territory all the laws which shall be made, and shall from time to time report the same to the President of the United States, to be laid before Congress; which, if disapproved by Congress, shall thenceforth be of no force. The governor or legislative council shall have no power over the primary disposal of the soil, nor to tax the lands of the United States, nor to interfere with the claims to land within the said Territory. The governor shall convene and prorogue the legislative council whenever he may deem it expedient. It shall be his duty to obtain all the information in his power in relation to the customs, habits, and dispositions of the inhabitants of the said Territory and communicate the same from time to time to the President of the United States.

These were the Democratic provisions for the government of the Territory of Louisiana from which the bill, which is now criticised, has substantially been copied. And it was under these laws that the region now occupied in part by Iowa was governed for many years.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If you will give us the provisions of that bill we will take it now.

Mr. LACEY. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for his suggestion, but he will find on examination that the proposition in the present bill is the same as that of Jefferson's governmental act for Louisiana in 1803, only slightly modified to adapt it to the existing conditions in the Philippines.

I will read the propositions of the present bill, inviting the attention of the House to its close adherence to the lines marked out by the fathers in 1803 with regard to the government of Louisiana.

You will note that the differences are in the nature of limitations on the power of the Government to legislate, which were not contained in the Louisiana act. The following is the proposition of the present bill:

PROPOSITIONS AS TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS, 1901.

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion: Provided, That all franchises granted under the authority hereof shall contain a reservation of the right to alter, amend, or repeal the same.

Until a permanent government shall have been established in said archipelago full reports shall be made to Congress on or before the first day of each regular session of all legislative acts and proceedings of the temporary government instituted under the provisions hereof; and full reports of the acts and doings of said government, and as to the condition of the archipelago and of its people, shall be made to the President, including all information which may be useful to the Congress in providing for a more permanent government: Provided, That no sale or lease or other disposition of the public lands or the timber thereon or the mining rights therein shall be made: And provided further, That no franchise shall be granted which is not approved by the President of the United States, and is not in his judgment clearly necessary for the immediate government of the islands and indispensable for the interests of the people thereof, and which can not, without great public mischief, be postponed until the establishment of permanent civil government; and all such franchises shall terminate one year after the establishment of such permanent civil government.

MONROE'S PLAN FOR FLORIDA IN 1822.

Mr. LACEY. Now as to Florida. It was provided in 1822 under another Democratic Administration:

And be it further enacted, That the legislative power shall be vested in the governor and in thirteen of the most fit and discreet persons in the Territory, to be called the legislative council, who shall be appointed annually by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the citizens of the United States residing there. The governor, by and with the advice and consent of the said legislative council, or a majority of them, shall have power to alter, modify, or repeal the laws which may be in force at the commencement of this act.

Their legislative powers shall also extend to all the rightful subjects of legislation; but no law shall be valid which is inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, or which shall lay any perso. under restraint, burthen, or disabitity on account of his religious opinions, professions, or worship; in all which he shall be free to maintain his own, and not burthened with those of another.

It will be observed that in 1822, while the action in regard to Louisiana was still fresh, and while the Democratic party was still in power, they followed the precedent of the Louisiana act by a similar enactment for Florida. It will be observed, further, that in the Louisiana legislation the power of lawmaking was vested in a governor, by and with the consent of a legislative council of fifteen, both the governor and council being appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. Bryan would call this imperialism, and so would the gentleman from Tennessee.

When it came to legislation for Florida the legislative power was vested in "a governor and thirteen discreet persons," who should be a legislative council, all appointed by the President. The Florida act almost literally follows the Louisiana act. In later years similar legislation has been enacted, without any objection from our Democratic brethren, for Alaska.

So we have most eminent precedents for the bill that is now denounced as tyranny, precedents from the fathers themselves, going back to Jefferson and Monroe; and that law worked well, and it resulted in giving freedom, it resulted in giving good government, to the people of Louisiana and Florida. And, Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with the same proposition now, only in addition to the situation that existed then in Louisiana and in Florida we have actively a war upon our hands in the Philippine Islands, a war in which, I regret to say, our enemies have received much aid and comfort within the limits of the United States of America.

In looking at this morning's dispatches I noticed the arrival of the body of Lieut. John Morrison, jr., a native of the Congressional district which I represent, at San Francisco. He was recently ambushed and murdered in cold blood by the insurgents in Luzon; and yet, Mr. Speaker, one gentleman has arisen on the floor of this House and said that the soldiers under Morrison's command ought to desert, and approved the desertion of those few degenerates who have gone over to the Filipino enemies.

The country was confronted with difficulties on the annexation of Louisiana in many respects like those which now embarrass President McKinley in the Philippines. An alien population, speaking the French and Spanish languages, together with the aboriginal savages, inhabited the territory, and like legislation is proposed to meet analogous circumstances.

THE CUBAN SITUATION.

As to Cuba the situation was different. The purpose of this Government was outlined in the resolution by which we intervened in the affairs of that unhappy island. The binding force of that resolution nobody in the United States will now deny, but it does not follow by any means that this country has no rights in Cuba, or power to direct its destiny.

We have spent vast sums of money and sacrificed many valuable lives in securing for Cuba her independence from Spain.

We had, however, another purpose in view in that intervention, which was to abate an insufferable nuisance within 90 miles of our shores. Having, at a cost of millions of dollars and the sacrifice of thousands of lives, freed Cuba from her oppressors, we not only have the right, but it is our duty, to be sure that Spanish tyranny is not followed by anarchy in that island, and the assurances in this bill are both reasonable and moderate. They are in the best interest of Cuba and of ourselves. Let us look at the conditions proposed in the bill:

Provided further, That in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled "For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect," the President is hereby authorized to "leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people" so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows:

I.

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain, by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

II.

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt to pay the interest upon which and to make reasonable sinking-fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government, shall be inadequate.

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

IV.

That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised, or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the Southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

VII.

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

VIII.

That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

These conditions are but simple modifications and adaptations of the Monroe doctrine, applying that doctrine to conditions as they exist at present, as it is our right to do.

I will not detain the House longer at this time. We have a right, both on principle and precedent, to legislate as is proposed in the present bill.

Mr. Speaker, we have these most excellent precedents to which I refer, and which have been followed by the Senate in making the amendment which we are called upon now to ratify and confirm. Of course this class of legislation, this method of government of any country, must be a temporary expedient; permanent government must follow; but these are the necessary preliminaries followed in the part, and will be found successful in the present. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Now, if the gentleman desires to use the balance of his time, I wish he would do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have only one minute.

Mr. DALZELL. I have no applications for time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, in that minute of course I can not say anything further than I have said in the way of debate. I propose now, however, if the gentleman from Iowa who has just taken his seat will bring forward for the government of the Philippines such a bill as he has charged was passed for the government of the Louisiana territory, we will cease all contention and give him the solid Democratic vote of this side of the House. [Applause.]

We will stop all contention and dispute and further controversy; we will govern the people of the Philippine Islands just as the people of Louisiana were governed by Jefferson. Now, let the gentleman come forward with his proposition, and we will have peace and harmony here on this subject. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, one would suppose from what has been said on the other side of this Chamber that something out of the ordinary run is sought to be done by the adoption of this rule. That is not so. We simply are adopting the method adopted always by the party of the House responsible for legislation when called upon to finish the public business when it is necessary that it should be done without undue debate.

Why, I recollect the time when, under a Democratic administration of this House, a rule was brought into the House which provided for the introduction of bills aimed at all the great industries of this country, which provided that those bills should be considered without being printed, without being sent to a committee, and considered with only fifteen minutes of debate, and yet here is complaint that we are unduly cutting off debate, when two hours are allowed for the discussion of a subject which has been debated month in and month out during the last three years of our history.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to interrogate the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. DALZELL. I do.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Did not the Republicans at that time protest against that kind of procedure?

Mr. DALZELL. Undoubtedly, and protested in vain; and if you would undertake to bring in such a rule now we would protest again. But between that situation and this situation there is no analogy. What is the present situation? We are within four days of adjournment—the compulsory end of the session.

The Army appropriation bill comes over to us carrying two propositions, two main propositions, about which the majority of this House have no doubt, and in the discussion of which gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber have not been at all curtailed.

These propositions in substance have been discussed time and again during not only this Congress but during the preceding Congress. One proposition is that we shall enact into law substantially the Louisiana resolution of 1803. The other is that we shall make such a provision——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Did not the Louisiana resolution to which the gentleman referred by its own terms extend only until Congress should meet again?

Mr. DALZELL. It did.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But this resolution provides otherwise. It provides that it shall continue until Congress directs otherwise, and that will have to meet with the approval of the President; and therefore this resolution continues as long as the President wills that it shall act.

Mr. DALZELL. I will answer the gentleman. This resolution, while it is substantially the Louisiana resolution, is a much more generous resolution than was that, and the provisions of this resolution are much more generous toward the people of the Philippine Islands than was the Louisiana resolution toward the inhabitants of the Louisiana territory.

It is more generous even than was the legislation which succeeded it for the government of the Louisiana territory. Let me read from a historian of repute as to what that government was—a government under the Democratic Administration of Thomas Jefferson. I read from the historian Adams:

It created a Territorial form of government in which the people of Louisiana were to have no share. The governor and secretary were to be appointed by the President for four years. The legislative council, constituted of thirteen members, was to be appointed by the President without consulting the Senate, and was to be convened and prorogued by the governor as he might think proper. The judicial officers, also appointed by the President, were to hold office for four years instead of the usual term of good behavior. * * * The bill—

I continue to quote from this historian, this impartial historian—

It seemed to set the new Territory apart as a peculiar estate, to be governed by the power employed in the right to acquire it.

With the passage of this act and its twin statute for collecting duties in the ceded territory the precedent was complete. Louisiana received a government in which its people, who had been solemnly promised all the rights of American citizens, were set apart, not as citizens, but as subjects, lower in the political scale than the meanest tribe of Indians, whose right to self-government was never questioned. By these measures the Executive and the Legislature recorded their decision in regard to the powers of government over national territory.

There is a Democratic precedent as against your protest of to-day.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. In the Louisiana act is it not a fact that trial by jury was provided for, and that there was also an express provision that the inhabitants of that territory should have the right to be jurors?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly not. There was no provision of that kind in the original Louisiana act.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me I will read it.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman can be heard in his own time. I can not yield now.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I want to read the law. I will state that there is an express provision guaranteeing the right of trial by jury.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I have been all over the question and know what was in the original act, and what was in the Territorial act. There was nothing in the original act as to trial by jury. I have read to you the judgment of the historian Adams as to what was the meaning of the Territorial act, and I will set that up in connection with the provisions embodied in this bill.

I have listened to the gentleman from Missouri repeat here what he repeated on the stump, but the verdict of the people on the stump last November was against him, and the same verdict will continue to be repeated whenever this matter shall be submitted to them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I will read from the act itself, while he has been reading from a commentary.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not yield now. The gentleman knows, and every gentleman knows who will be honest and frank about the matter, that under the instructions given by the President to the Philippine Commission every guaranty of liberty existing under the Constitution of the United States, so far as it is possible to extend that guaranty, has been extended to the citizens of the Philippine Islands.

Now, the other provision here is simply a provision for carrying out the Monroe doctrine in connection with our relations to the island of Cuba and in making proper sanitary provisions, not only for the protection of the people of Cuba, but for the protection of our own people. Upon these two subjects every gentleman in this House has already made up his mind, and it can not be changed by any debate, limited or unlimited.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will my friend yield to me for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. What is the question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman says that this act, as to Cuba, is simply reenacting the Monroe doctrine. Does the gentleman imagine that at this day it is necessary to pass any act in respect to Cuba of that kind?

Mr. DALZELL. It is not a reenactment of the Monroe doctrine. It is simply a declaration as to the pertinence of that doctrine to our relations with Cuba.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman does not think it necessary to pass an act in respect to Cuba of that kind or any South American Republic, does he?

Mr. DALZELL. I think, under the existing circumstances, it is proper and necessary for us to pass this act, so that it may be accepted by the people of the island of Cuba.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HAY. A division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 145, nays 127, marked "present" 4, not voting 77, as follows:

So the resolution was adopted.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. WILSON of South Carolina.

On this vote:

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. NORTON of Ohio.

Mr. WOODS with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know whether Mr. FITZPATRICK is recorded as voting. The reason I ask is, I think the Clerk got the response from me for his name.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded.

Mr. FLEMING. I am quite sure that the gentleman is not here, and that they mistook my response for his.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia wish to vote?

Mr. FLEMING. My vote is all right, but I think the Clerk got my response for my name and also for Mr. FITZPATRICK's, as there was some confusion at the time.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order, and desire to be heard briefly upon it. I ask as a preliminary that the Clerk report the first two or three lines of the rule just adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is sufficient. The point of order I make, Mr. Speaker, is that the rule is inoperative, because the bill which this rule, by express words, orders taken from the Speaker's table is not on the Speaker's table, but is in the Committee on Military Affairs. On yesterday, the Chair will remember, when the bill came from the Senate, that unanimous consent was asked to take it up and by unanimous consent agree to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, objection was made. Thereupon, under the rule, the Speaker must refer the bill to the committee to which it belongs, and that is the Committee on Military Affairs. Of course, the Speaker did his duty. No gentleman would presume to say that the Speaker did not do what the rule provides he shall do. The bill, we conclude, was referred, therefore, to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that committee is considering it.

This rule does not discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the bill, but the bill is now in that committee and it is now considering it, or it should be, being a bill of so much importance. This being true, the motion to take it from the Speaker's table provided for by this rule must be inoperative. The bill is in the Military Committee, it is not on the Speaker's table; and the motion to take it from the Speaker's table does not discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from its consideration, and therefore this rule just passed is absolutely void and inoperative.

Mr. HULL. Why, Mr. Speaker, that point is too late. It is too late to raise it now.

Mr. DALZELL. Of course it is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not at all.

Mr. HULL. It should have been raised when this resolution was introduced.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I could not raise it until now. It is absolutely inoperative, because the bill is not on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HULL. The point comes too late.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The rule calls for the bill to be taken from the Speaker's table, and it is in the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DALZELL. But the bill has never been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not make that defense, as that assumes the Speaker did not do his duty.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read clause 2 of Rule XXIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows:

Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by members; but House bills with Senate amendments which do not require consideration in a Committee of the Whole, may be at once disposed of as the House may determine, as may also Senate bills substantially the same as House bills already favorably reported by a committee of the House, and not required to be considered in Committee of the Whole, be disposed of in the same manner on motion directed to be made by such committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will not detain the Chair more than a moment.

This is a bill which, I submit, can not be taken from the Speaker's table except by unanimous consent. Under the rules it requires consideration in Committee of the Whole. Otherwise the gentleman from Iowa need not have asked unanimous consent yesterday to call it up and nonconcur. He could have made a motion to that effect. But the very fact that he made a request to call it up by unanimous consent is a concession that it is a bill which should go to the Committee of the Whole; and I assume, of course, the Speaker did his duty and sent it to the Military Committee.

If it were not a bill which required consideration in the Committee of the Whole it would have been in order to take it from the Speaker's table, or it would have remained on the Speaker's table until laid before the House by the Speaker, and a motion to concur or nonconcur in the Senate amendments would have been in order. But it requires consideration in Committee of the Whole. No one will controvert that. The gentleman from Iowa, as I have said, acted on that assumption. He asked unanimous consent because he could not by motion take it from the Speaker's table for consideration, and I assume the Speaker, under the rule just read, did what the rules required him to do—that is, sent it to the Military Committee.

This morning the House bill making appropriation for the improvement of rivers and harbors came back from the Senate with Senate amendments, which required consideration in the Committee of the Whole just as the amendments to this bill did. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] following correctly the same line of precedents followed by the gentleman from Iowa, rose in his place and asked unanimous consent to take up that bill and nonconcur in the Senate amendments. Unanimous consent was refused. What then did the Speaker do? He sent it to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

So yesterday he must have sent this bill to the Committee on Military Affairs. That able committee, I have no doubt, is at this moment considering this bill, and we can not, by a motion to take it from the Speaker's table, discharge that able committee from its further consideration.

Of course the Chair is familiar with the rule I have already recited. I read from the Digest:

The three requisites for calling up a Senate bill directly from the Speaker's table are that it be not such as to require consideration in the Committee of the Whole, that there be a similar bill on the House Calendar, and that it be called up by authority of a committee.

This bill does require consideration in the Committee of the Whole. No bill like this has been reported by the Military Committee or any other committee before in any legislative body that ever sat on the face of this earth. It is sui generis. Therefore the Speaker must have referred it to the Committee on Military Affairs. And therefore this motion to take it from the Speaker's table must be inoperative.

The SPEAKER. The House is well aware—and the Chair presumes no one more so than the gentleman from Tennessee who submits this point of order—that in the rule which the Chair has had read the language is "may be referred"—not "must be referred."

Furthermore, every Speaker since the service of the present occupant of the chair began in this House, has exercised a discretion in regard to the matter of making references of bills immediately. This bill, according to the practice for many years—the Chair does not know how long—was not referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and is in fact upon the Speaker's table. If the Speaker erred or departed from the rule in retaining the bill on the table, that error would not do away with the fact that here is the bill upon his table; and that alone destroys the effect of the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee.

But the Chair believes that in this matter he has simply exercised a discretion which has usually been exercised in this House by occupants of the chair. There is scarcely a member of this House who, when interested in a bill coming from the Senate, as this bill came, has not requested the Chair to hold the bill upon the Speaker's table until it could be disposed of by unanimous consent or otherwise.

It was just as easy to make this special rule applicable to the bill in the Committee of the Whole as on the Speaker's table. It was absolutely within the right of the Committee on Rules to provide for discharging the Committee on Military Affairs from the consideration of the bill and taking it up in the House for consideration. But the bill was not with that committee.

There is another point to which the Chair desires to invite the attention of the House. No member of this House has lost any rights by reason of the bill remaining upon the Speaker's table. No one is injured. If it had gone to the Committee on Military Affairs the special rule would have been differently drafted.

The Chair must overrule the point of order on two grounds——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be kind enough to allow the Chair to conclude.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was going to state something that I should have read when on the floor before.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has practically decided this matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Very well; I can read it afterwards.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled; first, because the bill is on the Speaker's table. That being the fact, nothing more need have been said in deciding the point of order. Whatever else the Chair may have said in this ruling was designed to show that he has been acting in the line set by his predecessors and in accordance with the practice of this House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the Chair allow me to read three lines?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not in the habit of allowing a matter of that kind after the point has been decided; but if the gentleman insists the Chair will hear him. When a matter has once been decided it is better that we go on with the work of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The Chair said that according to the reading of the rule the Chair "may" refer the bill on the Speaker's table; that the language was "may" and not "shall." But in the Fifty-first Congress Mr. Speaker Reed decided that—

A House bill with Senate amendments requiring consideration in the Committee of the Whole should be referred from the Speaker's table to the proper standing committee under the rule.

"Should be"—not simply "may be."

The SPEAKER. That is true as to ultimate action; but nowhere in the rules or the decisions can be found any notation, decision, or ruling saying just when a bill shall be referred. This course is pursued—and the Chair invites the attention of the gentleman—in the interest of the public business, to facilitate and expedite the work of the House. It is the course that has been repeatedly and in fact daily pursued, and the Chair thinks it has been for the good of the public service, no one being damaged.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I very respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DALZELL. I make the point of order that the motion is dilatory. It is purely for the purpose of delay. Gentlemen on the other side have been delaying the proceedings all day.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is not for delay. I have made no dilatory motions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the appeal be laid on the table.

Mr. GROW. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 116, answered "present" 3, not voting 87; as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. DAYTON with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. MORRELL with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. THAYER.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. NAPHEN.

Mr. PEARRE with Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. BLUL with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. WEYMOUTH with Mr. BENTON.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. WILSON of New York.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. JENKINS with Mr. HENRY of Mississippi.

Mr. FARIS with Mr. DENNY.

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. TURNER.

Mr. JOY with Mr. NORTON of Ohio.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. SMALL.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. WOODS with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. LANE with Mr. MCDOWELL.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments in gross.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House concur in the Senate amendments in gross, and the gentleman from Iowa is recognized for one hour and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HULL. Before proceeding, Mr. Speaker, with the debate on the bill, I ask unanimous consent that general leave to print be given for five days to all members of the House, their remarks to be confined to the subject embraced in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general leave to print on the bill be given for five days, the speeches to be confined to the discussion of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. To that, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SULZER. I trust, Mr. Speaker, there will be no objection to that request. There are many gentlemen who want to speak on the bill and can not get time.

Mr. HULL. I do not yield anything out of my time.

The SPEAKER. The right to object is absolute in any member, and the objection is not withdrawn.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the bill as it passed the House dealt only with the Army and the pay of the Army for the next fiscal year. The Senate has taken it as a vehicle for legislation outside of these purposes and has made amendments to the Army bill proper which, if there had been an opportunity, would have been probably objected to by some of the members of the committee. But, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing on the bill, so far as the pay of the Army or the government of the Army is concerned, which will materially affect the organization of the Army and which could not be remedied at our next session of Congress. We have but two days more for legislative work, and everyone realizes the importance of getting the great appropriation bills through, and the Committee on Military Affairs, or a majority of it at least, thoroughly indorsed the proposition to pass the bill without sending it to conference. The main change in the bill, so far as organization of the Army is concerned, is with regard to the staff corps, and they are opened up to the line of the Army, so that a man who is serving in the line heretofore is eligible to an appointment in the staff. Outside of that one proposition there is nothing in the bill that need give us any concern. Many members of the House believe that it is wise to enlarge the number of persons eligible to staff positions.

Mr. HAY. What does the gentleman understand to be the age limit as to these staff appointments from the line?

Mr. HULL. There is no age limit——

Mr. HAY. That is the way I understood it.

Mr. HULL. Except as to chaplains. As to those we increased the age limit two years.

I apprehend, Mr. Speaker, there would have been no controversy over this bill in the House but for the radical amendments placed on it in the Senate affecting Cuba and the Philippine Islands. For that reason I do not desire to occupy any great amount of time in discussion unless some one desires to ask a question in regard to the Army bill proper. So far as those two amendments are concerned, there is no member of the House who has not been giving attention to every provision incorporated in the bill from the time they were introduced in the Senate down to the present time.

There is no doubt that if we had a month in place of two days they would not have been inserted in this bill. It is putting them here or having an extra session of Congress. So far as I am concerned personally, I believe the provision as to Cuba conservative and exceedingly wise. So far as the Philippine Islands are concerned, the provision is more a limitation upon the power of the President than it is an enlargement of his power.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee has told us that the two great provisions of this bill, which have come to it by way of amendment attached to it in the Senate, are in derogation of the principles of the American Republic and opposed to the traditions of the Democratic party. He has gone beyond that and stated, in effect, that these were provisions destroying the whole theory of liberty in the islands and wresting from those people the degree of liberty which he says is traditional with the American character. He used language which in substance and in effect charged that the whole history and policy of the Democratic party had been opposed to securing from other people territory or land or dominion without the consent and advice and willingness of those who were thereby acquired. He spoke of it as the hereditary policy of the present Democratic party. I do not quote his language, but I do him justice in this comment. Let us see how the matter stands. Let us see what has been the traditional policy of the Democratic party.

In 1854 the Democratic party was in full power in the United States; its authority in every branch of administration was uncontested and unquestioned. At that time the Democratic President called to his aid, by a secret letter of instructions sent to them by special messenger, unrecorded in the Department of State, a secret and clandestine message directing James Buchanan, minister to England; John Y. Mason, minister to France; and Pierre Soulé, minister to Spain, to assemble at Ostend, in the Kingdom of Prussia, and decide what ought to be done in regard to Cuba. Spain at that time was at peace with the United States. In no way had she trespassed upon our rights. There was perfect peace in the island of Cuba. There were no complaints that the Cuban people were being trampled under foot. The cry of "Cuba libre" had never yet been raised in this country. These three emissaries of annexation, these three emissaries of rapine and seizure, acting under secret authority, assembled at Ostend, met afterwards at Aix-la-Chapelle, and issued a proclamation, called the Ostend manifesto. They, in the first place, proposed to offer to Spain $100,000,000 for the island of Cuba. They did not have the money—Democratic Administrations seldom do—and the whole Democratic party and the Administration did not have that amount of money; but they proposed to get it in some way. Later on they proposed that $120,000,000 should be given; and then this is a part of the Ostend manifesto: "Does Cuba in the possession of Spain seriously endanger our internal peace?"—not our external peace—and this question answered in the affirmative, they said:

> Then by every law, human and divine, we shall be justified in wresting Cuba from Spain if we possess the power, and it is upon the very same principle that would justify an individual in tearing down the burning house of his neighbor if there was no other means of preventing the flames from destroying his own house.

That was the deliberate secret act of the Democratic Administration, and was approved two years later by the nomination of the chairman of that commission at Ostend for President of the United States upon the Democratic platform, and indorsing in effect and in substance the Ostend manifesto thereby. That is one of the traditions of the Democratic party, and another is to vote to repudiate a tradition for a political purpose.

Mr. CARMACK rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CARMACK. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would prefer to be permitted to continue my speech; but I do not want to be uncourteous.

Mr. CARMACK. Do you indorse the proposition of the Ostend manifesto?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No, I do not; but it has never been repudiated by the Democratic party.

Mr. CARMACK. It has been repudiated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman is wholly mistaken. It had been the settled policy of his party to seize Cuba until slavery had been abolished. The gentleman from Tennessee says if you will bring in a bill like the Louisiana bill he and all his side of the House will vote for it.

Now, see how a man does when he wants to bluff somebody upon a very small organization in his own hand. If you will bring in a bill "like the Louisiana purchase," then we will have peace and harmony and all vote for it! There is a difference between the two conditions. In the case of the Louisiana purchase we had not possession of it; and the second difference between the two conditions is that one came by purchase from France by peaceful measures, and this comes by treaty from Spain at the close of war and as the result of conquest. The gentleman from Tennessee knows that on our acquisition of Florida, which we have discussed here so often and which had undergone no softening-down process, is a very different question from those now confronting us. There does seem to have been a softening process at the other end of the Capitol in this particular instance. There was in the Florida case no deliberate consideration of what also we know of the glamor of collateral or incidental questions that seems to have been looming up in the rear of the more recent step of the Democratic party, and in that particular instance regardless of anybody. Hardly knowing who the people were we had acquired in Florida, we sent an army under the direction of Monroe to seize the people and take possession, and have ever since governed them according to the Constitution and laws of the United States as we applied them.

What else? Throughout the whole history of this country we have done nothing to denounce or deny the justice and legality of our acts. Take all the traditions of our country and there is not a single instance of a repudiation of that history. If this debate is to be of value, let me suggest to somebody that he tell me where we acquired a foot of territory that we have treated differently from the manner we are treating the Philippines to-day. When did we send to Alaska to inquire what the people over there wanted us to do? When we discovered the territory of Oregon, when we acquired territory at the close of the Mexican war, whenever in the whole history of our country have we taken one step that we have not taken in the case of the Philippine Islands? The whole of this is a mere appeal to a sentiment that does not exist in this country; and I want to say to our friends on the other side these appeals in the name of liberty, these appeals in the name of the consent of the governed, sounded well in the balmy days of last summer; they came with mellifluent utterance from the leader of the Democratic party, and were feebly imitated on every stump and in every newspaper by his supporters.

These songs were sung with great exultation, and while you were doing this we were looking up our traditions, representing our history, and understanding the organization of this mighty empire. We took for our candidate the man who more fully represented the very opposite of all claimed by the Democrats in the arguments in their campaign and gave him a majority for the Presidency of the United States without precedent in the history of the country, and we put such a majority against Mr. Bryan as testified to the popular view of the American people. [Applause.] That was the decision of the people, and the position of the gentleman from Tennessee was left by that great popular verdict and judgment in the graveyard of your defeat last fall. I beg you to leave your dead in undisturbed slumber.

For fear my time may be exhausted, I want to come to another matter. There seems to be mistrust that some wrong is to be done somewhere, by somebody, name and locality unknown, Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is anything wrong about this bill, about its presence here, about the support the Republican party and the Administration and the Senate are giving to these measures now pending on this bill in the House, I know nothing about it, and I do not understand that anybody complains about that. These are our principles, and we stand upon our historical traditions. There seems to be something the matter with Democratic gentlemen and with the Democracy generally with regard to this matter. Whoever heard here in the history of the American Congress the like of what I am going to read to you?

We have heard language here within the last half hour more astonishing to me than any language I have heard in this Hall during the long period which I have had the honor to be a member of Congress. I have heard in very general terms complaints made about other public men outside of this body and inside of this body, but I never before heard an organized, deliberate arraignment of the Senate of the United States or of any member of it upon this floor before. The rules of the House of Representatives, the rules of Jefferson's Manual, the rules that must be the rules of all parliamentary bodies to insure respect and consideration for the views and opinions of others, have not served to stay the tide of wrath which poured itself out of the inimitable sarcasm and bitterness of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]. Was it justified? Is it justified? I know not; I care not. It is enough for me, Mr. Speaker, to know that great good has come of whatever acts the members of the other House have been guilty of.

I read from a speech made a few moments ago by the distinguished and able gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]:

> There is thrust into this Chamber now by the tyranny of the majority—

That is us; we are the fellows—

> by the connivance of others who had power and did not use it, a question which can not be considered here, but which is to be settled here. In the closing hours of this session the body which could have prevented, the men who could have barred from this Chamber these great questions, for reasons of their own which I have not time to bring to light—

I wish the gentleman had time to bring it to light—> and upon which I do not care now to enter, for reasons of their own, yielding to inducements—

What inducements did the gentleman refer to? Will he tell us?

> sufficiently powerful to them and with them, have allowed this measure to come with these amendments to this House.

To what people did the gentleman refer? Who are the people thus corrupted by reason of inducements sufficiently powerful? Who are they? There seems to be some light thrown on that later on:

> If I had the time I would be glad to discuss this infamous measure. I would be glad to discuss this infamous procedure, the infamous surrender, the infamous cowardice, the infamous trading and trafficking, the infamous surrender, the infamous disregard of everything sacred and holy and decent and honorable and glorious in these United States of America.

Who did that? Not the Republicans of the Senate. Surely not.

Not the President and his Cabinet, surely not, for we are standing upon the very platform of this resolution. Who has done this infamous act?

I commend to the tyrants here—

That is our side—

I commend to the sycophants and the traders and the traffickers elsewhere the plunder that they get.

What did they get, in the name of the Benevolent Father of all? [Laughter.] What did they get? Will my friend from Missouri make a public statement that the sycophants whom he has pointed out with sufficient accuracy, so that everybody knows who he means, will he kindly tell us what they got? What was the inducement? It goes directly to the charge and commends to them the plunder, the loot, the bribes, which they have got; and I can give to the language no other meaning.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CAPRON. I will yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. COONEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. If it is very short.

Mr. COONEY. I understand the gentleman from Missouri, to whom the gentleman from Ohio refers, is not here; but in his behalf I will ask the gentleman if he will procure him sufficient time in the consideration of this bill to answer his charge?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, the gentleman has an hour on that side, and I am not making a charge. I am reading the language of the gentleman, and he will not deny the meaning. So, Mr. Speaker, I think our friends on the other side are a little bit worried that we are bringing out of chaos, with the aid possibly of some auxiliary conditions—that is a good word for it [laughter]—we are bringing out of the body of men who have been attempting to hold this Government to conditions that would be intolerable up to conditions that in my judgment meet the demands of the patriotism of the people of the United States. [Applause.] Let us see what we have done. We have driven Spain out of Cuba. Peace has been restored, whether good order has or not. A stable government has not been established and can not be during the life of this Congress; but the material interests of that people have been improved to such an extent that in my judgment the blessings of the people of the island of Cuba are constantly heaped up on the name of the American Republic. [Applause.]

What have we done in Porto Rico? There you suffered so very greatly over the sorrows of that people. You really thought there was going to be some trouble in Porto Rico. You said we were taxing them unreasonably; you talked about the Constitution and the flag; you said we were seizing upon the little 15 per cent that we placed as a tax upon their products in their own interest. What has come of that during this one brief year that has rolled over your heads and which has thrown light upon your prophetic utterance? They have had a free government; they have established legislative authority; they have met and considered the conditions; they have adjourned while the burdensome Porto Rican tariff is still in full force. By a single resolution they might have lifted the 15 per cent off of their imports and effected the repeal of the law that gave us so much trouble here a little over a year ago. They adjourned without any action in that direction, thereby writing their indorsement on the action of the Republican party, and to-day the people of Porto Rico are the happiest, the best educated, the best clothed, the best fed and with better prospects ahead of them than ever appertained to the inhabitants of any of the islands in the Caribbean Sea. [Applause on Republican side.]

Prophets of evil, pessimists, and croakers join technical lawyers and disappointed politicians grumbling and growling over the sad fate that has indicated the estimate the American people place upon them over the situation in Porto Rico, and the outcry went from ocean to ocean that the poor people of that island had been downtrodden under foot by the Republican Administration. Sage men rushed into print to prate about the consent of the governed, and the doctrine of ex proprio vigore was rolled as a sweet morsel upon the tongues of men, all drifting toward a Presidential election in 1900. Men who ought to have taken a different stand threw little barbed arrows of sarcasm and doubt upon the legality of the Porto Rican legislation, and have spoken of the people down there as under the oppressive force of our tyranny.

Now, Mr. Speaker, looking at the map of the world and its history combined, I challenge any living man to show where a people transformed and transferred by a treaty, whether made in pursuance of conquest of war or purchase or annexation or what not, has ever under any circumstances been treated with the liberality and generosity that have the people of the island of Porto Rico; and they feel it and they know it, and the genius of American institutions extended to them by the hands of William McKinley, the Republican President of the United States, backed up by the sincere Republicans of this House and of the Senate and supported by the great moral influence of the intelligent people of the United States, has done all this and set an example to all the world of what the American Republic can do under conditions like these. Where stands the pessimist to-day? Where stands the croaker? Where stands the man who predicted all sorts of evil? Wrapped up in the mantle of their own self-estimate, refuted by the facts and figures of the beautiful demonstration in Porto Rico.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. My time is very short.

Mr. CARMACK. I only want to ask a question. Suppose the people of Cuba should refuse to submit to these limitations on their independence provided in the Spooner amendment. What is this Government to do?

Mr. GROSVENOR. We have thus far, Mr. Speaker, been able to cross the bridges when we came to them, without the aid of gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. CARMACK. You are at the bridge now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no time to talk about what we will do if——

Mr. CARMACK. That is because you will not give us time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." The question is, What shall we do to-day? To-day we put forth the ultimatum to the people of Cuba, not one branch of which will be held by the American people, by civilized people of the world, or, in my judgment, by the people of Cuba to be onerous or unjust to them.

Mr. CARMACK. The gentleman says "an ultimatum."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; I used the word "ultimatum" with absolute accuracy of understanding and meaning. The people of this country understand what it is. The people of this country will be proud of the party that will uphold the dignity and authority of the American people in the island of Cuba until the conditions are reached which will justify us, in the light of our pledges and in the light of the deliberate judgment of mankind, to withdraw our military operations and occupation and turn over to the people of Cuba their own island to their own government.

I used the word "ultimatum" as referring to the present. It is the ultimatum of the American people to-day. It is what we are willing to adjourn with having enacted. We are willing to turn over the question now to the action of the people of Cuba, and the future will take care of itself. No act of injustice has been done to the people of Cuba; no act of wrong or seizure of their rights; no intervention as against the best interests of Cuba, and everybody in the world knows it. We have fortified their harbors, we have subjected and eliminated their most fatal disease, we have put in motion the wheels of commerce, we have stimulated enterprise, we have suppressed insurrection, we have eradicated the evil conditions that have existed in that island for so long, and the success that we have had has been wonderful in view of the fact that we have a party in this country willing to block the wheels and impede the onward progress of the country.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, about the Filipinos.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will leave the Filipino question to somebody else. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS].

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate the importance of these amendments and would not trespass upon the time of the House if I were in full accord with the spirit and letter of both amendments. I am in hearty accord with the amendment with reference to the Philippine Islands, because it assures to the people of those islands the rights, protection, and liberty that always go with the American flag. We can safely trust the President with the government of these islands until they have become entirely pacified and their people taught to recognize and appreciate the blessings of American sovereignty.

I am constrained to vote for the amendment with reference to the island of Cuba, because I believe that the adoption thereof will insure the continuance of our sovereignty. I am unalterably opposed to the surrender of the sovereignty of the United States over the island of Cuba. We intervened in the cause of humanity, and humanity, in my judgment, demands the maintenance of our flag in order to insure to the people of Cuba future peace, prosperity, and happiness. Their future depends upon our action. Remove from the island of Cuba the protection of the Stars and Stripes, and riots, civil strife, and revolution will follow. General Gomez expressed the dangers in store for the Cuban people when he declared that in the present condition of the island, should our flag be removed, he would go with it.

I hold in my hand public resolution No. 21 (Teller resolution), in which we declared that the people of Cuba are, and by right ought to be, free and independent. I voted for that resolution, and intended thereby to extend to them the same liberty, freedom, and independence enjoyed by the citizens of our own territory.

What greater liberty and independence can be obtained than that enjoyed under the protection of our flag? All fair-minded men, familiar with the conditions of Cuba, recognize their inability to maintain peace and independence without the protection of our country. We should guard and protect not only the people of Cuba but our own citizens and their interests on the island. I hope and expect that the adoption of the present amendment may continue our sovereignty and induce the people of Cuba to voluntarily ask for the annexation of Cuba, and thereby extend the blessings of humanity for which our country intervened.

I do not forget the humiliation of the American people when a Democratic President hauled down our flag in the islands of Hawaii. Our citizens universally condemned that act, and I rejoice that with the cooperation of the people of those islands our flag has again been raised and our sovereignty perpetually established for the future glory of the Pacific. I would not again humiliate our people, endanger the peace and happiness of the Cubans, disturb our peaceful relations, or render it possible for a second intervention, which would certainly be necessary to insure peace, happiness, and prosperity to the people of Cuba with the removal of our flag.

Mr. HULL. I suggest now that my friends on the other side use a part of their time.

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS].

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] would consume as much time in defending Republicans who need defense as he wastes on Democrats, his remarks would be far more interesting and he would come more nearly earning his salary as a member of this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He seldom takes the floor that he does not have something to say as to what Jefferson did. Now, if he would only devote a little of his time to defending the great national boss of his own party, who seems to have control of this Administration, or the worst part of it, at least, his remarks would receive the greatest attention.

No one regrets more than myself that this very dangerous proposition for the government of the Philippines should come before this House in the closing hours of its session and at a time when it is impossible for it to receive that consideration which its importance demands. And I can not accept the apology for its being sent here at this late hour, that the President is already exercising in the Philippines the power granted in the proposed amendment. I deny it. The power now used by the President in the Philippines is executive and military power, while the power given him by this amendment is legislative and judicial power. Here is the language of the amendment:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

By this amendment the President is given absolute power in the Philippines; not only executive, but legislative and judicial as well. This is one-man power, pure and simple. The President is made the complete master of the Filipinos unrestrained by Congress, the Constitution, or anything else. This is imperialism run mad. The Constitution provides that all legislative power under our Government shall be vested in Congress. Then what right have we to turn this power over to the President?

But then we are no longer proceeding under the Constitution. Every gentleman on the other side who has attempted to defend the despotism in this amendment has cited as a precedent for this action the law under which Jefferson governed the Louisiana Territory. In order that the repeated misrepresentations of these gentlemen may be understood by the House and the country I here give the law under which Jefferson then acted, and so often referred to by members on the other side of the Chamber.

Until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said Territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

You will observe that this law was intended for temporary government only, and by its own terms was to expire with that session of Congress. You will further notice that the officers appointed by Jefferson were to exercise the same powers as was then being exercised by the officers of the existing (French) government in the territory; while under the pending amendment Mr. McKinley's appointees are authorized to enact new laws and establish a new government, and not to merely carry on the one already existing.

Besides, the treaty under Jefferson provided the inhabitants of the new territory should be citizens of the United States, and Jefferson governed them as citizens and in accordance with the Constitution, while McKinley is authorized to govern the Filipinos as subjects and in violation of the Constitution. The legislative council under Jefferson were required to be inhabitants of the territory and could pass no law in violation of the Constitution of the United States, while under this amendment for the Philippines the legislative assembly are not required to be inhabitants of the island and are not bound by the Constitution. In fact an amendment offered in the Senate requiring these new officers to take an oath to support the Constitution was voted down by the Republicans, Senator HOAR being the only Republican who supported it. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me no just President could desire such despotic power over any people, and the man who would seek it is a dangerous person to be intrusted with it.

Think what a wretched and helpless condition you place those Filipinos in when you authorize the President to establish over them, without restraint, a carpet-bag government, composed, in part, at least, of Neelys and other plunderers who will go there to enrich themselves and rob the people whom they are sent to govern. It will not only result in corruption there as in Cuba, but will breed corruption at home also.

No, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Jefferson never attempted to exercise any such despotism as this. What king wields a greater power over his subjects than that given to the President by this amendment? How fast is the President of the United States becoming the Government of the United States. What member of this House would rise in his place and say that the President of the United States does not to-day control both branches of Congress on all important political legislation?

By the shrewd use of his great patronage he is able to influence not only his own party in both branches of Congress, but often a good per cent of his opponents, and so successful has been the present Executive in his assumed legislative functions that it is now intimated that he is even venturing upon the Supreme Court of the United States. Surely the time has come when the people should take warning at this increasing power of the President.

I care not how able or honest he may be, no one man is safe to intrust with all the rights and liberties of a people. As I said on a former occasion, I am opposed to retaining the Philippines under any form of government, but so long as we do attempt to control them we should endeavor to govern them in accordance with our Constitution and form of government. I repeat that no one man is good enough to govern another just as he pleases and without any restraint whatever; and yet this is just what the President is authorized to do by this amendment.

Is it possible that Congress can have so little regard for its own acts as to pass a measure of this importance without any consideration either in committee or by the House? If so, it only shows what a revolution is going on in our form of government, and apparently with the approval of the people. Indeed this is the day of imperialism in America, but I hope late in the evening. I trust the morning of liberty will again soon dawn upon the American people, and they will return to the ways of the Constitution our fathers gave us.

A few words only with reference to the Cuban amendment, which attempts to give the United States control over the domestic as well as the foreign affairs of the island. If we adopt this amendment we openly violate our sacred pledge to Cuba, in which we declared the Cubans were, and of right ought to be, free; that we were intervening for the independence of Cuba, and would withdraw from the island whenever peace was established. If we pass this amendment against Cuba we advertise to the rest of the world what supreme hypocrites are in control at Washington. I would rejoice to see Cuba peacefully annexed to the United States, but I am not willing to steal it.

If this Administration had treated Porto Rico with that justice and fairness to which she was entitled, Cuba to-day would have been standing with outstretched hands appealing to the United States for annexation. But is it strange that our cruel and selfish treatment of Porto Rico should cause Cuba to look with some suspicion upon our pretended friendship? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] said at one time some Democratic Administration had attempted to buy Cuba. If he is correct in that statement it only shows the difference between that Democratic Administration and the present one is the Democrats attempted to buy Cuba while the Republicans are attempting to steal it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I believe the parties in control of this Administration are just as anxious for the good things in Cuba as in the Philippines, and every effort will be made to provoke Cuba into war in order that the Administration may have an excuse to take possession of the island for these greedy beneficiaries.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks I wish to submit a few observations on the subject of appropriations. This bill now under consideration appropriates for the Army for the next fiscal year $115,735,644.10, while the amount appropriated for our Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, was only $23,129,844.30.

This is the swift and bitter fruit of imperialism. It costs the people five times as much to maintain our army now as it did three years ago. At this rate it will cost a county of 25,000 people about $40,000 per year to help maintain our standing army. And all this increase not for the benefit of the taxpayers, but to enrich those greedy speculators who want to hold on to those foreign islands. And this new policy of imperialism has greatly increased our expenses in other directions.

The appropriations for the Navy this year are over $78,000,000, an increase of forty-five millions over 1898. The total appropriations for the next fiscal year just completed by this Congress are over $729,000,000, which does not include anything for rivers and harbors or public buildings, while the total appropriations for 1898 were less than five hundred and twenty-nine millions. That is, it will cost the people over $200,000,000 more to run the Government next year than it did in 1898.

To conduct this Government with its present extravagance one year costs every man, woman, and child about $10 apiece, or a family of five $50, or a county of 25,000 $250,000. If the people quietly submit to this increasing extravagance in the use of public money it will not be long until every laboring man must pay one-half his earnings to maintain a large standing army and navy and other increasing expenses of the Government.

How can the people hope for any substantial reduction in taxes unless they call a halt on Congress in these extravagant expenditures? This rapid increase in the expenses of our Government is due almost entirely to this new policy of foreign conquest and imperialism. And in order that the President may have plenty of money to spend away from home on these vicious schemes, the people at home are deprived of the necessary public funds to repair their rivers and harbors, erect public buildings, and for other purposes. In fact, the old soldier, who fought for liberty and Union, is often denied his just pension in order that the money may be used on a large standing army to carry on a war of conquest in a foreign land.

It is to be hoped that our people will soon grow tired of wasting so much blood and treasure in foreign islands in which they have no interest and from which no good to them can ever come. Why not spend our lives and our money in trying to make our own people prosperous and happy, instead of wasting them on foreign races? Why should not America be satisfied with America, where, with good government and proper conditions, every citizen may become prosperous and happy under his own vine and fig tree? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PIERCE.]

[Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition, if I was able physically to do it, to make a speech. The speaking ought to take place at the other end of the Capitol. I think they ought to have spoken there until December had rolled around again before this thing should have ever been passed. Just one suggestion. I have voted from the commencement of this Philippine question against what is going on. I voted against the war, without saying to those people what you were shooting them for and giving them an opportunity to adopt for themselves a government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. Let me complete this sentence.

Mr. SULZER. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. COX. You have got in this legislation a declaration that the United States owns territory where the Constitution can not extend. You have got in this legislation another proposition, and that is that the power of one man can take the life of a man or he can take his liberty from him without trial by jury. You have got another thing. Against every rule of policy, against the genius of our Government, and against every true principle that has ever been taught of respect and honor for the law of legislation, you insert it at the end of an appropriation bill.

Mr. SULZER. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New Jersey.

[Mr. MCDERMOTT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HULL. In connection with that, I ask that all others who speak on this bill, at least, shall have the same privilege for a period of five days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen speaking on this bill may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five days. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. If they are confined to the bill, I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. With the condition requiring them to be confined to the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SULZER. In connection with what the gentleman from Iowa has said, there are a number of gentlemen on this side of the House who have asked me to make the request for unanimous consent for general leave to print on this bill for five days. I trust there will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that there be general leave to print on this bill for five days.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I object.

Mr. SULZER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, in the name of the American people—in the name of consistency and justice and truth—I want to protest against the resolutions in reference to Cuba inserted by the Senate as an amendment to this Army bill, and which we are called upon now to concur in. I protest against them because they violate our expressed promise, and because they are inconsistent with our national honor. Before we went to war with Spain, and as a preliminary thereto, we openly, frankly, and plainly declared our purpose. That purpose we fully and unequivocally stated in the following solemn resolution:

[PUBLIC RESOLUTION—No. 21.]

Joint resolution for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Habana, and can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April 11, 1898, upon which the action of Congress was invited: Therefore Resolved, etc., First. That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States, the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

Approved April 20, 1898.

No one will contend that there is any ambiguity in the language of this declaration. No one will undertake to point out a single word of doubtful meaning. When we said "that the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent," we but quoted from our own blessed Declaration of Independence the words that have thrilled the hearts of freemen for more than a hundred years.

The fathers who framed that immortal Declaration said "that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States." And so when Congress, on the 20th of April, 1898, wanted to express the full and complete idea in reference to Cuba's struggle to rid herself of the galling yoke of Spanish tyranny, we employed the words so well known and so dear to every American heart. Following these resolutions, and to carry out the spirit and purpose there set forth, we declared war against Spain. Columbia's sons from North and South and East and West rallied to arms in the cause of liberty.

Our victories were speedy, startling, and complete. Castile was vanquished and Cuba was "free"—so we proclaimed. Before taking up arms we solemnly declared "that the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or contol over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people."

An archipelago in the Orient and islands in the Atlantic were ceded to us in the treaty of peace, but not Cuba. Spain agreed to quit that island, as we had demanded she should, and we made no pretense of right to occupy it with our Army except for the "pacification" of its people and to see that "a stable government" was formed. More than two years have passed since then, and during all the weeks and months that have intervened the Cuban people have been submissive and peaceful.

No riotous disposition has been manifested and no disturbances have occurred. So soon as we gave them opportunity, their delegates assembled in peaceful convention to frame their organic law. That instrument is now, I believe, here in Washington. It ought to be submitted to Congress before we adjourn.

We know that it provides for a republic and contains all the essentials of a government by and for the people. But though that constitution is now probably in the hands of the Administration it will not be submitted to us, and now in the closing days of this Congress, while we are rushing through this Army bill, the managers for the dominant party offer, as a rider upon the bill, the resolutions against which I am protesting. They are engrafted upon it as it comes back to us from the Senate. That they will be accepted in this House no one who is familiar with the spirit of the times can for a moment doubt. Here they are, and in the name of justice, I protest against them:

That in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled "For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect," the President is hereby authorized to "leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people" so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows:

I.

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

II.

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt to pay the interest upon which and to make reasonable sinking-fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government, shall be inadequate.

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

IV.

That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised, or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

VII.

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

VIII.

That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we are complacently told by gentlemen who favor these resolutions that they are exceedingly mild and are merely "suggestive" to the Cuban people of a few things we have the right to expect from them. Let us see. We are about to say to them that they will not be permitted to make treaties with other countries which will impair or tend to impair their independence, and we are to be the judges of the tendency of all proposed treaties.

We are about to say to them that they can not go into debt beyond such limit as we may regard as safe for them. We are about to prescribe a restriction for them which the Federal Government has never yet undertaken to prescribe for any one of the States of the American Union. Let me read again:

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt, to pay the interest upon which, and to make reasonable sinking-fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which, the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government, shall be inadequate.

We are about to say to them that their health laws must be made to suit us before we will remove our soldiers from their midst. And yet here at home we regard the right to make laws for the preservation of the public health as one of the reserved rights of the States. We would not think of sending an armed force into one of the States of this Union because, forsooth, its health laws or its sanitary condition might not be up to an approved standard. "That is all true," said a gentleman in discussing this matter with me the other day, "but circumstances alter cases; it is different, you know, when it comes to Cuba."

Mr. Speaker, it is not different "when it comes to Cuba." Principle should control us, and not expediency. We should give the people of that devoted but hapless isle at least a fair opportunity to voluntarily and gracefully show their gratitude to us. I believe the true and real Cuban is grateful to us. I doubt much whether that class of so-called "business men" on the island who sympathized with Spain during the Cuban war and who sympathize with Spain to this good day are grateful to us.

I doubt whether the money-making classes of Habana and Santiago—those gentlemen who meet at city clubs to discuss political ethics and who offer us much voluntary advice with many insinuating suggestions to the effect that the native Cuban is not capacitated for self-government—I doubt, I say, whether we should give much heed to them. They are not the class for whom we struck the blow at Spain; they are not the patriots we had in mind when we declared war; they care nothing for liberty; they care alone for the almighty dollar.

"The people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent." We have said it, and let us stand to it. Let us not be persuaded by the advice of those who now argue that we ought never to have made these promises. Let us be just, as we have been generous; as noble as we are brave. Addressing this House the other day on the subject of our treaty obligations, I said what I now wish to repeat in this connection.

Are obligations resting upon the people in their collective capacity as binding as when entered into by the individual? For one, I believe they are. For one, I am anxious to see my country as prompt and scrupulous in keeping its obligations as I should expect an honest man to be in keeping his.

There on the wall of this Chamber, standing side by side with Washington, is the portrait of Lafayette. Facing the Executive Mansion in this city is a bronze statue of this illustrious friend of our Republic, and I feel like raising my hat whenever I pass it. He came to aid our struggling colonies in the darkening days of the American Revolution, when hope had almost ceased to lighten the pathway of our patriotic fathers. By his aid and the aid of his countrymen defeat was turned into victory and our independence was established. I point to his example and to the example of his country.

France did not assume, because she had been our benefactor, to become our dictator, nor did she presume to prescribe conditions upon which she would recall her soldiers from our soil. I commend now that shining example to this House, to the Executive of this Government, and to my countrymen. If Cuba, by reason of turbulence or bad sanitary laws or improper treaties, shall ever hereafter menace this country, we can deal with her in some proper and timely way. Let us at least wait for some such justification.

Mr. SULZER. I now yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am not vain enough to suppose for a moment that anything I can say will have any influence whatever upon the vote we are soon to take upon the pending measure. Indeed, if that were the only consideration I should not trespass upon the time of the House at all, but representing on this floor, as I do, a district, and in part a State, which extends nearer to the island of Cuba than any other, whose people are more deeply interested in the relations which we are to sustain to that island and to the Cuban people than those of any other section of the country, I feel that I would be derelict in my duty should I not enter my feeble protest against the action we are to take here to-day.

We are about to perpetrate, in my judgment, a great wrong, not only upon the Cubans but upon our own people as well. We are about to cast a blot and a stain upon our fair name and do a wrong to civilization which all the centuries will not wipe out or efface.

A little less than three years ago, beneath the Dome of this Capitol, and on a memorable occasion, we solemnly declared that Cuba ought to be free and independent. We were then about to engage in a war with Spain, ostensibly for the benefit of the Cubans. They had not asked us to take this action or to intervene in their behalf at the risk of war. Indeed, through their leaders they had made it known to the President and the members of Congress here that they did not desire us to assist them in that way. They did wish the powerful influence of the United States in their behalf. They desired only, however, that we should recognize their belligerent rights.

For two years war bloody and cruel had been going on between Spain and the Cubans, the latter fighting for freedom, the former that she might hold her sway over an unwilling people. This struggle has attracted the attention of the entire civilized world. In this country the sympathies of the people went out to those struggling patriots, and the demand came from every village and hamlet, from every section, North, South, East, and West, that Cuba should be free. To these sentiments the Administration for a time turned a deaf ear; it was not even willing to accord to the Cubans the only recognition they had ever asked—that of belligerent rights.

They asked no more than this because they considered themselves capable, if belligerent rights were accorded them, of coping with the Spaniards in this war for liberty. But that was not all. They had other reasons for not desiring such a war. They were afraid of the result to them of a war between this country and Spain. They knew full well that war meant the occupation of Cuba by us, and the fear was natural that even this Government, though founded upon the principles of liberty, might not be able to resist the temptation to remain once the Stars and Stripes should float over the island. Examples such as this were not wanting in history. Other nations during the centuries that have gone had undertaken to do similar acts of benevolence and had not been able to resist the temptation, and why, thought the Cubans, should not this Government be liable to the same temptation.

Finally the President concluded that war, ostensibly at least, for the liberation of Cuba should be waged, and on the 11th day of April, 1898, sent a message to Congress, breathing the very spirit of freedom and philanthropy as well as of defiance to the power of Spain, practically recommending a declaration of war.

Meanwhile the American people began to doubt and fear the motives, not perhaps of the President, but those who surrounded and advised him, and the demand was made that if war were declared some guaranty of good faith on our part should be given. In obedience to this sentiment the instrument by which war was declared proclaimed that the people of the island of Cuba were and of a right ought to be free and independent.

But that was not all this remarkable document, which will ever live in history as the grandest triumph of our Christian civilization or the blackest exhibition of national perfidy the world has ever seen, contained; for it further declared that the United States had no disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserted the determination of the American Government that when this should have been accomplished to leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people.

Upon this declaration we unsheathed the sword, broke the Spanish power almost in a day, and liberated the Cubans from the Spanish yoke.

But how have we kept faith with them? For nearly three years the Spaniard has been gone, the island has been absolutely quiet, and peace has reigned from one end of the island to the other. The Cubans have been ready to establish a stable government, and have been capable of so doing. Yet our Army is still there. The island is still under military control, while we come now with the proposition to hold on to Cuba forever. True, the resolution makes no such claim. Oh, no! It is too artfully drawn for that. Why, it actually starts out with the statement "that in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled 'For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba,' etc., the President is hereby authorized to leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people' so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows:"

I.

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes, or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

II.

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt to pay the interest upon which and to make reasonable sinking fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government, shall be inadequate.

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

IV.

That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

VII.

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

VIII.

That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

Now, these provisions are in absolute violation of the compact under which we undertook to aid the Cubans. We agreed that we had no intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over the island except for its pacification, and asserted our determination when that had been accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people; while our proposition now is to create a condition of things by which we are to hold on to the island indefinitely. The proposition to leave the island to the control of the Cubans is absolutely inconsistent with that to restrict the power of the Cuban government in the matter of contracting debts, with the right to "intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence," with that restricting the right of immigration to the island, as also with that reserving to the United States coaling stations on the island.

Why, Mr. Speaker, what nation can be free with all these restrictions upon its freedom of action? No Commonwealth in this Union of indissoluble States but has more freedom of action than Cuba will have under the plan for her control by the United States as embodied in these eight provisions. What State but has the power, so far as the Constitution and laws of the United States are concerned, to contract debts to any amount, even to the verge of bankruptcy if it so desires?

Into what State is immigration restricted? Why, sir, no State in the Union but that throws open wide its doors to immigrants from all civilized lands. It is by that means largely that this country has grown great and strong. Yet we say to the Cubans that colonization, which means immigration, shall not be allowed into that country. Of course, this right of emigrating to Cuba from the United States is not denied, for it is no doubt the intention, as well as the hope, that Cuba shall be colonized from our own country; but the emigrant from every other nation is debarred from the island and the Cuban government can not invite them without the risk of rendering such action obnoxious to the provisions just cited, and of incurring our displeasure, for we are to be the judges at all times as to whether any given act is an infringement of this or any other provision in the proposed amendments. And thus the sword of Damocles is to be forever suspended over the Cuban people and their government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all this is rank injustice and ought not to be done by a great and magnanimous nation to a weaker one, and of whose people when we thrust ourselves between them and those who would coerce them we declared were, and of a right ought to be, free and independent. Yet we should have some concessions, I grant you, but these should be sought along the line of proper trade relations.

Now, what are the reasons assigned for this continued control of Cuba, in violation of our solemn pledge?

First it is said that in some way we have obligations growing out of the treaty of Paris which necessitate a constant and perpetual supervision of Cuban affairs, but I undertake to say that we owe no such duty. What was this undertaking? It is to be found in Article I of that treaty, and is as follows:

Spain relinquishes all claim of sovereignty over and title to Cuba.

And as the island is, upon its evacuation by Spain, to be occupied by the United States, the United States will, so long as such occupation shall last, assume and discharge the obligations that may under international law result from the fact of its occupation, for the protection of life and property.

Thus we are to assume and discharge the obligations that may under international law result from the fact of our occupation of Cuba for the protection of life and property. But how long was the occupancy to last? Only until the island should be pacified; and I assert that it has been in that condition for more than two years. No people have ever been less turbulent; no country more peaceable. Hence the occupancy should end, and with it our obligations under the Paris treaty.

Again, it is said that the Cubans are not capable of self-government, but this, too, is a mistake. The Cubans, or those of them belonging to the white race, are the descendants of a proud and once powerful people who for more than a century dominated the globe. They have fallen into adversity, it is true, and have lost their political prestige, but they have retained their intellectual power and self-respect. The Cuban census, taken under the auspices of the War Department of the American Government, shows that the native whites constitute 58 per cent of the total population and the foreign whites 9 per cent, making a total of 67 per cent in all belonging to the white race, while of the entire population above the age of 10 years three-fourths can read and write.

Can we boast of a degree of education and literary advancement much higher than that? I think not, at least in many sections of the country. So, too, in the matter of industrial pursuits they will compare favorably with the people in our own country. In the United States 58 per cent of the population are at work or engaged in occupations for gain. In Cuba 68 per cent are similarly employed, and thus again the comparison between the Cuban people and our own is in favor of the former. We have, Mr. Speaker, anarchists and turbulent spirits everywhere, but they are not found among the laboring classes or breadwinners in any country.

Certainly such people are capable of self-government, and as a matter of fact they have shown themselves to be thus capable. In June of last year municipal elections were held everywhere throughout the island. These elections were peaceable and attended without a single disturbance, although the United States soldiers were not present, so it is said.

And what of the constitution they have prepared? It provides for a republican form of government, founded upon the true principles of liberty, and is modeled after our own Government. If left to themselves, their government will be what it should be—a government of the Cubans, by the Cubans, and for the Cubans. I have not seen the constitution, it is true, for we are called upon to act before that instrument has been submitted to this country; but if newspaper reports are to be believed the constitution recently framed by the Cuban convention leaves little to be desired in addition to the work already done by that convention.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are those, and they constitute a respectable minority, who claim to believe that we should create a protectorate or suzerainty over that island, and the amendments to the Army bill which we are now discussing are designed to bring about that condition. But, sir, this, too, is unnecessary, for the Monroe doctrine, established three-quarters of a century ago and recognized and acquiesced in by all the great powers of the earth, affords sufficient protection to Cuba and her republican form of government. In the face of that doctrine no foreign nation could interfere with Cuba so as to change her form of government or to take permanent possession of the island.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, each of the amendments is in violation of our pledges contained in the declaration of war between this country and Spain. They furnish such a violation of a solemn compact as would not be tolerated in the case of any individual, and the same moral code by which individuals are to be governed should likewise govern that aggregation of individuals called the United States.

Now, I know that our Republican friends claim that in all this there is no intention to annex Cuba to the United States; but, sir, the tendency is in that direction, and while it may not take place this year or next, or even for a decade, the danger is imminent. Should it come, and free trade exist between this country and that island, the American people, as I have shown on other occasions, will receive no benefit from such a condition. Cuba can and will in that event supply this country with all the smoking tobacco, cigars, and sugar our people can consume, and thus destroy these industries in every State in the Union where they exist. My own State would be one of the chief sufferers, but she would not suffer alone, for perhaps 30 others would sustain irreparable injury, so far as some of these industries are concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not enter into any exhaustive argument as to our power under the Constitution to do what we are trying to do by these amendments to the appropriation bill, but I believe the whole principle contended for by the leaders on the other side is outside of the Constitution of the United States. I can find no warrant whatever therein for the creation of a condition of things such as these amendments, even if accepted by the Cubans, will create. The Constitution does not provide for the establishment by this country of a protectorate or a suzerainty over any other country. I can find in the Constitution no warrant for the owning or controlling by this Government of foreign lands or countries except for the purpose of eventually bringing them into the Union as States. Indeed, such a condition is not consonant with our theory of government, which is founded upon the idea that all just powers of government must come from the consent of the governed.

Mr. Speaker, we have done many things during the past two and one-half years that we ought not to have done, many things which have caused a dangerous and unnecessary strain upon our form of government and upon our institutions. From these and their resultant conditions we may not now be able to turn away; but we yet have time to retrace our steps and to do justice to the Cubans and incidentally to ourselves. Of us much is expected. To us have been given more than ten talents. Let us, therefore, improve them in the interest of freedom and humanity. The opportunities for good, such as have not in all the years of the past come to any other nation or people, have come to us in our present relations with the Cuban people; opportunities which, if improved, as they may be improved, will shed luster upon our national life, both past and future.

Let us, then, keep faith with our neighbors across the Gulf, and in our treatment of them erect one more monument to liberty and civilization among those already builded by us along our national pathway during the century which has just taken its place among the ages which are gone.

Mr. SULZER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has ingrafted upon this bill—a measure appropriating the enormous sum of $120,000,000 for the support of our military establishment—two amendments embodying propositions so obnoxious to my sense of justice and fair dealing, and so utterly at variance with my conception of the powers vested by the Constitution in Congress, and the views which I entertain as to the policy which the United States should pursue toward the inhabitants of Cuba and the Philippine Islands, that I desire to enter my earnest protest against their adoption.

But, before I enter upon the discussion of this most important subject, let me call attention to a statement just made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. That gentleman made an assertion which I can not permit to go unchallenged. In concluding his remarks upon the resolution now before the House he declared that when the Porto Rican act was under consideration here the Democrats denounced in unmeasured terms the provision which imposed tariff duties on all merchandise coming into the United States from Porto Rico and coming into Porto Rico from the United States, but that so well pleased were the people of Porto Rico with this tariff tax of 15 per cent of the duties imposed by the Dingley act that their legislative assembly, although it was perfectly competent for it to do so by the passage of a simple resolution, had adjourned without removing this customs duty. In other words, that the people of Porto Rico had, after an experience of nearly two years in paying this, as I believe, unconstitutional tax, deliberately, and of their own free choice, elected to continue paying it.

Mr. Speaker, there was never a more misleading and unfounded statement made upon this floor. The act of Congress of April 12, 1900, entitled "An act to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," contains these words:

> Whenever the legislative assembly of Porto Rico shall have enacted and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the government of Porto Rico, by this act established, and shall by resolution duly passed so notify the President, he shall make proclamation thereof, and thereupon all tariff duties on merchandise and articles going into Porto Rico from the United States or coming into the United States from Porto Rico shall cease, and from and after such date all such merchandise and articles shall be entered at the several ports of entry free of duty.

This is the provision, and the only provision, of the Porto Rican act to which the gentleman from Ohio could have referred as enabling the legislature of Porto Rico to rid the people of that island of this tariff tax. By it the legislative assembly of Porto Rico is empowered "to enact and put into operation a system of local taxation to meet the necessities of the government of Porto Rico," and that has been done. I hold in my hand an act passed by the legislative assembly of Porto Rico at its recent session, approved by Governor Charles H. Allen on the 31st day of January last, entitled "An act to provide revenue for the people of Porto Rico, and for other purposes." It covers 33 closely printed pages, and provides a complete system of taxation for the people of Porto Rico, and the President of the United States has been duly notified thereof, as is required in the act from which I have quoted. So it seems that instead of being well satisfied to pay this unjust, discriminating, and, as I believe, unconsitutional tax, the Cuban people have done all in their power to rid themselves of it forever, and their action is a complete and absolute refutation of the unwarranted statement made by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. Speaker, more than two years have elapsed since the establishment of peace between the United States and Spain. The pacification of the island of Cuba has been accomplished, and its people have called a convention and framed for themselves a constitution. By an act of Congress approved by President McKinley on the 20th day of April, 1898, it was declared:

> Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:
>
> First. That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.
> Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.
>
> Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.
> Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

There can be no mistaking the language of these resolutions. They were carefully drawn and clearly worded. They were written to be read of all men. They declare, in language dear to every citizen of this American Republic, that the people of Cuba "are, and of right ought to be, free and independent." We not only declared to Spain that the people of Cuba, then struggling to free themselves from Spanish tyranny, were free and independent, but we proclaimed to the wide world that they were, and that they were entitled to enjoy their freedom and independence. We went even further. We disclaimed both the disposition and the intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over the islands save only for the purpose of pacification.

When law and order were established our troops were to be withdrawn and the island left to the control of its people. How have these pledges been redeemed? Thus far, what single step has been taken in the direction of their redemption? Is it seriously maintained that the fulfillment of this solemn pledge is to be found in the Platt amendment, placed by the Senate upon the Army bill, and placed there in violation of every rule of parliamentary procedure? I can not believe it. The pledge which we gave to the people of Cuba was unqualified; was accompanied with no conditions, no limitations and no restrictions. And yet we say to this people in this amendment that, as a condition precedent to the withdrawal of the troops of the United States, you shall engage "never" to "enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, or in manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain, by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island."

We say they shall agree, before we will give them the freedom we promised, that they shall "not assume or contract any public debt to pay the interest upon which and to make reasonable sinking-fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of the government, shall be inadequate." We insist upon reserving "the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence." We arrogate unto ourselves the right to require that the Cubans shall execute certain plans and devise others "for the sanitation of the cities of the island;" we demand "that the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba," and, lastly, we stipulate that "the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specific points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States." Gentlemen tell us these stipulations are all reasonable, and most of them are necessary to safeguard the interests and protect the health of the people of the United States.

My reply is that they are inconsistent with the full and complete enjoyment by the people of Cuba of sovereign rights which we are in honor bound to respect, and therefore violative of a most solemn pledge given the people of the whole world as well as those of Cuba. I do not believe this great, enlightened, and Christian nation can afford to commit an act of such palpable injustice and such glaring bad faith. There is no immediate necessity for any Congressional action, and certainly no earthly excuse for this hasty, ill-advised, and perfidious legislation, likely at any moment to provoke hostilities between the United States and the very people for the establishment of whose freedom and independence we waged a costly and a bloody war with the Kingdom of Spain.

That this bill, as it has been amended, will be enacted into law, thus carrying out to the uttermost the programme of President McKinley and his advisers, I do not for one moment doubt. If it be the desire and the purpose of those who are directing the affairs of our Government and who are responsible for this vicious proposition—to drive the Cuban people into open revolt, I can conceive of no surer means for the accomplishment of that end. Is it to be expected that a high-spirited people like the Cubans will be content with an American protectorate when they were promised freedom and absolute independence? I do not believe that the framers of this faith-breaking amendment even hope that they will. Their desire and evident purpose is to arouse in the Cubans a spirit of resistance.

Mr. Speaker, bad as is the legislation proposed in the amendment which relates to Cuba, it does not compare in atrocity to the Spooner amendment, which is intended to place in the hands of one man all legislative, executive, and judicial power over the lives, liberties, and fortunes of the ten or twelve million of human beings who inhabit the Philippine Islands. Such legislation as this is not only unparalleled in the history of legislative enactments, but it is absolutely subversive of those principles of free government upon which the American Republic is founded.

For two years President McKinley, as Commander in Chief of the Army, has been attempting to establish, at the point of the bayonet, a military despotism in the Philippine Islands.

Now he asks for, and is to be given by a subservient Congress, authority to establish a civil government with undefined and absolute powers, to be supported, of course, by a powerful military establishment. The amendment, or that part of it which clothes the President with autocratic power for an indefinite period, is in these words:

> All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that such absolute and unrestricted power as is contained in this amendment was ever before conferred upon any ruler, in any age, by any people, in any quarter of the civilized globe. That it is within the constitutional power of Congress to confer upon any man, or any set of men, such absolute undefined and unlimited power, I can not believe. The Constitution declares that:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

The power to legislate for territory belonging to the United States is expressly conferred upon the legislative branch of our Government, and it must be that Congress can not delegate that power to the Chief Executive, to be by him in turn delegated to an irresponsible commission. There is no excuse for this ill-advised and unprecedented action. We are now within three days of the closing hour of this Congress. If this pernicious legislation is necessary now, it was necessary when the Fifty-sixth Congress assembled more than a year ago. It comes now coupled with the threat that unless the power demanded is given the President he will call the Fifty-seventh Congress together in extraordinary session, and cause to be enacted legislation affecting the Filipinos even more vicious than that which is now proposed.

This Congress is arrogantly told that unless it accedes to the demands of the President another Congress, more largely Republican, and therefore more subservient, will be immediately convened and legislation enacted more objectionable even than this. Speaking for myself, an extra session, under circumstances such as these, could have no possible terrors for me. Thus, Mr. Speaker, is to be extorted from Congress the most shameful and pernicious enactment that ever blotted the legislative history of the American Republic—legislation which the wisest and most patriotic of all the Presidents of these United States would have shrunk from executing if required to do so. It has been said upon this floor and elsewhere—and a Republican press has published it abroad over the land—that this Spooner amendment was an exact reproduction of the language of the act of 1803.

It is true that a portion of the language of the act of 1803, authorizing President Jefferson and his appointees to establish temporarily a civil government in the Louisiana Territory, has been incorporated in the Spooner amendment; but an examination and comparison of the one with the other will, I think, demonstrate very clearly that the two are in no wise analogous. The distinction between the two acts is as broad as the different purposes to be served could make them. They are totally and radically dissimilar in most essential particulars. The Louisiana act is in these words:

> Until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said Territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

The treaty under which the Louisiana Territory was acquired provided in terms that its inhabitants should become citizens of the United States, and as such be entitled to enjoy all the rights and privileges attaching under our Constitution to that citizenship. The Paris treaty, under which we are attempting to subjugate and hold the Philippine Islands, contains no such provision. On the contrary, it was solemnly declared not to be our purpose to confer upon the Filipinos the rights and privileges of American citizens at the very time of the ratification of the Spanish treaty. The act of 1803 conferred no legislative authority upon the President and his agents. It recognized the existence of a civil government and authorized the President to administer laws then in existence. It was intended to be temporary and provisional, and was in effect for less than five months.

The Spooner amendment, as I have already said, confers legislative and judicial as well as executive powers upon the persons appointed by the President as the instruments to carry into effect his autocratic and unlimited powers, and there is no limitation placed upon the period during which they may be exercised. The same persons who are to make the laws for the Filipinos may construe and execute those laws. The property, liberty, and lives of millions of human beings are placed absolutely at the mercy of one man and his irresponsible satraps. It is not true, as has been said, that the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, has this absolute power now. If that were true we would not be called upon to enact the legislation embodied in this Spooner amendment. As Commander in Chief of the Army the President would not dare exercise such vast and unlimited powers as are now to be conferred upon him by Congress. It is difficult to realize the extent and tremendous scope of these powers.

A carbetbag government is to be established and numberless fat offices created. Thousands of civil officers are to be appointed and millions of dollars expended by one individual, without accountability therefor. No such absolute, autocratic, despotic, imperialistic, and monstrous power was ever exercised by the Czar of all the Russias. The very contemplation of what is in store for the downtrodden Filipino is appalling to one who believes in the principles of free self-government and is not dead to every sense of justice. When the people grow weary of the task of self-government and turn it over to any man, be he the best and greatest of men, it must inevitably prove the commencement of that fatal descent which in the history of nations has been so rarely checked.

Mr. Speaker, I realize to-day as never before during my whole service in this House, that that "eternal vigilance" which is the "price of freedom" has been lulled to sleep, and that if it is ever to be awakened again the liberty-loving people of this great Republic must shake off the fatal lethargy by which they now seem oppressed and once more assert their right to govern themselves and to direct and control their own affairs. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SULZER. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the resolutions known as the Spooner resolutions, placed on this bill as a rider in the Senate, raise two very important questions. First, what steps, if any, should now be taken to define our future attitude toward the republic of Cuba; and, second, shall the Congress definitively sanction the establishment of arbitrary government in the Philippine Islands, ignoring the Constitution, and invest the President with the powers of all?

Concerning the proposal to lay down, at this time, ironclad instructions for the guidance of the constitutional convention now in session at Habana and the government it is about to establish, I desire to make a few observations. I concur in the views of many of my colleagues, who have declared in my presence that in respect to several matters of the utmost importance it is the duty of this Government, and its right, to have something to say as to the affairs of Cuba.

I am of opinion that the question should not be broached by this Government until the Cuban constitutional convention shall have finished its work. It has agreed upon a constitution for the republic. The Cubans know what we desire, and their representatives have under consideration at this time the very matters to which the pending resolution refers.

News comes from Cuba that no objection will be interposed to a stipulation guarding this country against the danger of treaties with foreign countries inimical to the interests of the United States. I am glad to know this, for I unhesitatingly declare that it is not only the right but the duty of this country to supervise the foreign power relations of the island in such a way and to such an extent as will save Cuba from embroilment with foreign powers. I think we should see to it also that Cuba shall contract no debts or obligations of a nature or in quarters which might in the future imperil her safety.

Mr. Speaker, not long ago the German Emperor sent a man-of-war to the island of Santo Domingo as the bearer of a sight draft against the Government of that island. Bombardment and invasion were threatened, and the poor islanders were compelled to pay the claim. Five or six years ago Nicaragua was invaded by the English and a similar outrage was perpetrated there. Are these cases to be regarded as precedents?

Our Government made no protest, and so the proceeding was at least tacitly approved at Washington. It may be said the claims were just, but who knows they were just? The little Republics thus assailed demanded arbitration, and the fact that it was refused is some evidence that they were robbed.

The United States is bound by the highest considerations to safeguard Cuba against similar complications; for, Mr. Speaker, any attempt of a foreign power to repeat in Cuba the proceedings in Santo Domingo and Nicaragua, to which I have referred, would not be tolerated by the United States. To put it plainly, whatever would endanger Cuba in the future is of interest to the people of the United States, and it is only reasonable that we should seek to throw about the island such safeguards as are manifestly necessary to her safety.

I do not believe we have any right to demand the cession of coaling stations in Cuba, or that we have any right to lay claim to the Isle of Pines or any other appanage of the island. I deplore the fact that any such demand is to be made, for I firmly believe it will lead to friction and probably to disaster.

I deplore the fact that any demands whatever should be made upon the island while the representatives of its people are in session considering the very questions dealt with in this resolution. Under such circumstances any action whatever on our part is an insult. We have no right to suspend over the heads of the delegates to the Habana convention as a menace the sword of a dictator.

I firmly believe that as to all matters concerning which we have reasonably a right to be consulted the people of Cuba stand ready to make most ample concessions. To project into the deliberations of the constitutional convention this brutal threat of intervention in the affairs of the islands if this or that be done or omitted is to endanger the peace of the island and may lead to a tragedy. Sir, we are not unfamiliar with conditions existing in Cuba.

We know that in the island are numerous factions, each anxious to gain ascendency in public affairs. We know that naturally the inhabitants are intensely jealous of any interference of Americans in the affairs of their country. We know that the designing demagogue is sure to call in question any concessions made by the constitutional convention. We know that as a result of a decade of civil war the island has suffered pitiable demoralization, and that its chief danger arises from the presence of a large class, debased by evil environments, ready for the resumption of the life of the guerrilla soldier, because they would rather fight than work.

Mr. Speaker, to this debased element and to over-zealous patriots who will be angered by this unjustifiable proceeding, the demagogues and the disturbers of the peace who make no concealment of their hostility to Americans will appeal. By these classes the patriotic men of the Cuban constitutional convention must expect to be assailed. No matter how well the work intrusted to them may be performed—no matter if the concessions made to the United States be plainly for the best interests of Cuba, still there is small hope that the members of the convention will escape bitter denunciation and unwarranted criticism. By passing this resolution we multiply the difficulties with which they are dealing.

We put a club into the hands of their enemies. Sir, the ink will not be dry upon the Presidential sanction of this measure before Cuba will be ringing with denunciations of those responsible for its passage and any Cubans who favor compliance with its requirements. And may Heaven decree that nothing worse than verbal warfare may result from it. Deplorable indeed is the fact that the party in power feels constrained to take a step which will unmistakably tend to prevent the growth of affection for the great Republic in the hearts of the people of the island, for of all the Spanish-American states of whom Columbia is the mother, Cuba should be her favorite daughter.

Sir, from the beginning I have looked forward to the time when, amid joyous acclamation of her people, Cuba will seek political union with the United States, and I condemn not only as unwise, but as criminal, a measure which assuredly will postpone, if it does not wholly prevent, this consummation so devoutly to be wished. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, the resolution providing for what has been misnamed civil government in the Philippine Islands marks the passage of the line which separates the republic from the empire. Its passage will accomplish the revolution foreshadowed soon after the occupation of Manila by American troops.

The first step in the direction of this revolution in our form of government was taken when we bought from Spain a country of which Spain did not have possession, and to which, under old-fashioned American ideas, she had no shadow of a title—a country which had cast off by force of arms a government of force endured for centuries, and which, when we purchased it, was in the hands of its inhabitants, its only legitimate owners.

The next step was taken when our army in the Philippines was ordered to overthrow the domestic institutions of the islands and forcibly subject them to American rule. Upon the assumption that the end has been reached or is near at hand, this, the final step, is about to establish over there a government essentially arbitrary, possessing unlimited power over the inhabitants, who henceforth are to have no voice in choosing their officers, or in devising laws for the imposition of taxes, or in controlling public expenditures, or in the enactment of the laws under which they are to live.

Mr. Speaker, if the fundamental precepts of liberty professed by the founders of this Government, inscribed in its Constitution and the amendments thereto, and heretofore proclaimed by Americans of all parties as the very formula of freedom, applicable to all classes and all lands—if government by force is violation of republican principles and despotic invasion of the rights of men—then certainly the departure we are making accomplishes a complete revolution in our institutions.

It vests in the President, as ruler of the Philippine Islands, executive, legislative, and judicial powers. What is the difference between the republic and the empire? Why, in the republic the executive possesses only executive powers. The people, through their representatives, make the laws, and courts chosen by the people construe them.

In the empire the emperor—one man—personally or through agencies of his own choosing, exercises all these powers. Tell me, then, when this law shall be placed on the statute books, will the Philippine Islands enjoy the blessings of the Republic, or be compelled to endure the hardship of living under an absolute government? Our Chief Executive will continue to be the President of the United States, presumably restrained by its limitations.

He will become the ruler of the Philippine Islands, exercising all governmental powers, with no limitations whatever upon his exercise of power, and may deal arbitrarily with the laws, fortunes, happiness, and destiny of 12,000,000 people who are to be brought by force under his dominion and control. Deny it as you will, but as sure as God reigns, henceforth the President of the United States will be the emperor of the Philippine Islands. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SULZER. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK].

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is a criminal farce to force to a vote a question of such gravity as this without debate, for the few minutes yielded to its discussion can not be dignified with the name of debate. There is hardly time to protest against this outrage upon the right of free speech in this House of the people, much less to debate the merits of the question upon which we are to vote.

The majority have no respect, even for the appearance of decency, in their headlong haste to perpetrate this crowning act of a shameful and iniquitous programme. An act which attacks the very fundamental principles of our free Government and disgraces forever the fair name of our country is to be hurried to completion with such swiftness that there is hardly an opportunity for honesty to utter its indignant protest against the crime.

This is no time, Mr. Speaker, to mince words. The passage of the so-called Spooner and Platt amendments will be an act of infamy, and every man who votes for them willfully, deliberately, and premeditatedly becomes a party to the crime. This, sir, is but one more chapter in this Administration's monotonous and unbroken record of perfidy, falsehood, and dishonor. I believe it will be the deliberate judgment of history that no Administration in this country, or in any other civilized land, has ever shown such brazen and cynical contempt for the nation's honor or for its own.

When the future historian comes to write the story of this Administration, he will search in vain for a single promise which it has not violated or a single trust which it has not betrayed. Sir, the sickening laudation which craven politicians in this House or in the other lavish upon the President and his Administration may be rewarded with official favors, and thereby answer the only purpose they were intended to serve, but courtiers and flunkies do not write history. They can not change the historical facts of this controversy, and these facts rise up in judgment against this Administration.

The President of the United States in a solemn message to Congress declared that the forcible annexation of a country without the consent of its people would be a crime. He is now using all the military and naval power of the United States and wasting without stint the blood and treasure of his country to commit the very crime he then denounced. This Congress passed a resolution declaring that the people of Cuba were, and of right ought to be, free and independent. Not content with that, it expressly disavowed, by solemn resolution, any intention to exercise authority over the people of Cuba, but declared that as soon as peace should be restored the people of that island should be left free and independent. The President of the United States, in a message to Congress, declared that this was a pledge, an obligation binding upon the honor and the conscience of the country, and that it must be sacredly kept.

Mr. Speaker, when the President made that declaration in his message, I, for one, dismissed as groundless and unworthy the suspicion that the Administration harbored a secret design to violate its promise and to overthrow by force the liberties of the people of Cuba. But who can say now that the President has a right to be trusted when he has given his word? That there should be close political and commercial relations between this country and Cuba I fully agree; that by dealing with these people in a frank and friendly spirit we could have obtained everything we had any right or reason to ask for, I have no doubt whatever. What, sir, is the meaning of these conditions which we seek to impose on the people of Cuba?

I put to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] the question as to what the Government proposes to do in the event the people of Cuba should refuse to accept these limitations upon their independence. He sought to evade the question, but finally answered that this proposition was our ultimatum to Cuba. An ultimatum, Mr. Speaker, presents an alternative of war. "Submit to these terms or I come upon you with fire and sword"—that, sir, is an ultimatum, and that is what the gentleman from Ohio tells us is the intent and purpose of this Administration.

Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at some of the arguments that have been made by some of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. Some of them, carried to their logical conclusion, go to the extent of justifying human slavery as it once existed in this country, and some of the very precedents now cited to justify this Administration were damned by the Republican party in the first breath of its existence.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] shakes in our face the Ostend manifesto, which the Republican party denounced in unmeasured terms in its first platform, and which many people had come to believe was buried beneath a weight of obloquy beyond all hope of resurrection. Other gentlemen cast into our teeth the laws of many Southern States, which they charge are intended to disfranchise the negro. Mr. Speaker, we have heard these accusations in the past, but they come to us now with a different meaning. They were once uttered to bring shame and reproach upon the Democratic party. They are now cited to justify the course and policy of the Republican party.

At one time the Republican party and Mr. McKinley himself used to denounce us for violating the principles of the Declaration of Independence by our restrictive legislation against the negroes; but now we are given to understand that they propose to follow our example. Mr. Speaker, I wish that I had the time and the opportunity to deal with the attempt to show a parallel between some of the laws of the Southern States and the policy of the Administration in the Philippine Islands. But let me say this, Mr. Speaker, that if it be true that we have any people under our flag with respect to whom we can not act in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, it is unfortunate that it should be so, and if that condition did not already exist I would not go 10,000 miles away to wage a bloody and costly and destructive war in order to create it.

Let me say, further, that it is one thing to leave a people of an inferior race to govern themselves in their own country and according to their own laws and customs and state of civilization, and it is quite another thing to let such a people make and administer laws for you. I would never consent that the people of the Philippine Islands should share in the government of this country, for while I think they can govern themselves I do not believe they are fit to govern us.

But all these things, Mr. Speaker, do not touch the fact that we have bound ourselves by a most solemn pledge not to do the very thing we are doing now. The Republican party and this Administration proposes to violate that pledge upon the cold-blooded plea that there is profit in dishonor and money in crime.

Mr. SULZER. I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON].

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the soldiers in the Army of the United States being paid. In opposing this bill I am not striking at our soldiers. I am opposed to the whole miserable policy which forces upon the American freeman and taxpayer an Army so large as to make it cost five times as much as it did four years ago; but the American soldier should bear no part of the blame. It is his part to obey orders; it is his to do, to suffer, even to die in obedience to orders, and we honor him for his sturdy courage and patience. Bad as was this bill when it left the House in enormous expenditure, it was unobjectionable compared to the bill as it is returned to us with its infamous amendments. To the amendments, Mr. Speaker, I address my remarks. Out in Missouri in 1900, when I declared in public speeches that "the Republican party did not intend to live up to our honorable declarations regarding Cuba," that it was the intention of the Administration to violate our pledged faith and steal Cuba, I was denounced as a partisan falsifier. I wish I had been mistaken in my statements, but these amendments bear me out.

Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House to amendments concerning Cuba. I think it proper just here to see what we said when we were about to go to war with Spain. Let honest Americans who have some regard for national honor read:

Joint resolution for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battle ship with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Habana, and can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April 11, 1898, upon which the action of Congress was invited; Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

THOMAS B. REED,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
GARRET A. HOBART,
Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

Approved, April 20, 1898.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

Mr. Speaker, before this proposed legislation is enacted into law there ought to be a resolution pass the American Congress absolutely and unqualifiedly repudiating the resolutions of Congress approved April 20, 1898. Men ought at least to be brave when they determine to enact villainous legislation; legislators should not enact villainies under shadow or cover. The Congress should boldly say: We fooled the world when we made it believe that we went into war with Spain to avenge our honor or in the interest of humanity; Congress ought not to hide any further: the Administration and its Congress ought now to mean what they say, and to do that, should repudiate all declarations of the past.

I have just quoted the action of Congress on April 20, 1898; now, what is proposed in this bill?

The text of the Cuban amendment is as follows:

That in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled "For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect," the President is hereby authorized to leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows:

I. That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

II. That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt to pay the interest upon which and to make reasonable sinking fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which the ordinary revenues of the island after defraying the current expenses of government shall be inadequate.

THE RIGHT OF INTERVENTION.

III. That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

IV. That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

V. That the government of Cuba will execute and as far as necessary extend the plans already devised, or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba as well as to the commerce of the Southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

VI. That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future judgment by treaty.

VII. That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

VIII. That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

Here is notice served on the people of Cuba:

Put the substance of these declarations into your constitution or the United States will maintain its military control of your territory.

The United States shall be suzerain over Cuba, we here boldly say by an amendment to an appropriation bill, or we will not remove the military forces of this Government from Cuban territory. We demand of the convention now preparing a constitution for the government of Cuba that it shall solemnly agree that the United States shall be permitted to assume a protectorate and become suzerain over Cuba or we will hold and exercise authority with the mailed hand of military power.

By the amendments to this bill we assert our right to stand in the same relation to Cuba that Great Britain did to the Boer republics, which she has recently destroyed and for which she is denounced by the great majority of Americans.

That is a shrewdly constructed clause which demands that the United States may "exercise the right to intervene for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty." Under this clause our Government may on the slightest pretext pour into Cuba soldiers to suppress outbreaks of internal troubles.

Section 4 proposes to validate all acts of the United States while in the island, and particularly to validate rights acquired while we were in possession. It is meant here to fasten on the constitution of Cuba all franchises procured while we held military possession. It is meant to force the Cubans to indorse all unconscionable contracts made for the benefit of corporations. In this clause the Republican party proposes to keep faith with the plunderers who have furnished the funds to keep it in power.

Mr. Speaker, these declarations which come to us from the other end, and which this majority will soon fasten on this bill, and which by the signature of the Executive will soon become an act of Congress, show the inconsistency, the lack of good faith of the party that said in their national platform of June, 1900:

To Cuba, independence and self-government were assured in the same voice by which war was declared, and to the letter this pledge shall be performed.

And this bill will doubtless be signed by the same Execucutive who said: "Forcible annexation would be criminal aggression." Within the week the American Congress will spit on, repudiate the promise we made to the people of Cuba, to ourselves, and to the world in the declaration:

That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

When it is done this Government will be dishonored, because a government is dishonored when it breaks faith, and we will be doing it for the meanest of reasons—material advantage. It is said we have a right to supervise Cuba in her treaties and other obligations because of our assertion and maintenance of the Monroe doctrine. I deny it. As an American and Democrat I deny it.

The doctrine that takes the name of the patriot and democrat who left his blood on Revolutionary battlefields and who gave us a wise, brave, patriotic Administration, goes to no such lengths. The true, honest American doctrine is to permit the people of Cuba to establish a government of their own, under our solemn pledges made to them and to the world, demanding no cession of territory as our right; no demand of military, naval, or coaling stations; no demand that dishonest bargains be validated; no suggestion that the military of our Government will continue to control. When Cuba has a government, when she is sovereign, then if a foreign power shall endeavor to encompass her sovereignty in any way, or make demands detrimental to our rights as we declare them under the Monroe doctrine, we can say, we must say, no. We shall then declare the United States stands by to see the liberties of Cubans preserved and our own rights on this hemisphere observed. This is not only the honest American doctrine, but is the true democratic doctrine. We have no right to put Cuba into "leading strings." These amendments are not put on this Army appropriation bill for Cuba's good, but to make excuse for keeping soldiers of this country in Cuba and to validate franchises procured by scoundrels while our Army was in control there. The Republican party ought to stand out in the open.

Mr. Speaker, your party is in full and complete control of every branch of this Government. The Cubans, who have longed for liberty and fought for freedom so faithfully, are at the mercy of this Goverment, which is in control of the Republican party, and your party is owned, body and soul, by a conscienceless lot of looters and plunderers. Sir, the great Republican party, that is just about to begin a new lease of power, should not shuffle in this matter. Be brave enough to say that you have made these dishonorable demands on the people of Cuba, expecting them to refuse, and that it is then your intention to maintain military supremacy. Say boldly that you intend to back up the buzzards that are preying on the prostrate Cubans by driving hard bargains and procuring by intrigue special privileges.

Sir, your leaders boast of Republican courage; now exhibit it. Announce to the world that you intend, though Cuba is now pacified, to repudiate section 4 of the joint resolution of April 20, 1898. Say you intend to make the United States an Ananias. Tell the world that the United States is in Republican control, and that means the control of plutocrats, who have no regard for the honor and pledged faith of the great Republic. This bill lacks one amendment to complete your real meaning. You should add: "Resolved, that Cuba contains good stealing for more Neelys and Rathbones; that her people can not help themselves, and we intend by these amendments to drive the Cubans into desperation and then to boldly take the island and make of it what we propose to make of the Philippines—a plundering ground for trusts and syndicates."

Men trained in the real faith of the Democratic fathers believe that our Government ought always to encourage liberty; to see that "equal and exact justice" is dealt to all men; to use all our power as the favored people of the earth to see that free government is encouraged everywhere, and especially in the Western Hemisphere; that when any people in North or South America, or the islands adjacent, declare and maintain a government of their own, that foreign people shall be told that no interference will be tolerated by the United States which affects the integrity of such governments. And the true American, the faithful American Democrat, believes that such base repudiation of our pledges to the Cuban people as is meant by the amendments to this bill is perfidy; that the President, who signed the Teller resolution, was right in declaring that the "highest honorable obligation rests on this Government to carry out the provisions of our pledge."

And we believe that no excuse can be offered for refusal to stand by that pledge that will not emphasize our national disgrace. In that resolution we affirmed that the people of the island of Cuba were and of right ought to be free and independent, and I voice the belief of Democrats when I denounce the intention of the Administration to repudiate that solemn pledge. The people of Cuba, by their constitutional convention, have adopted a constitution for their government, republican in form, and should be permitted to decide for themselves, as did the Republic of Texas, as to whether they want to become a part of the American Republic, and then it will be time for us to decide whether we will admit Cuba into these United States. Sir, let us be honest with each other. No political student can deny that these amendments destroy the sovereignty of Cuba; no government can be sovereign that is denied the right to make any treaty. We herein demand that she covenant with us for all time not to become sovereign. Mr. Speaker, on this Army appropriation bill, carrying a larger amount of money than is expended by any foreign nation for its army, we have tacked this amendment:

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by the treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such a manner as the President of the United States shall direct for the establishment of civil government, and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Here we see proposed power unlimited to be given the President. Never before has any Executive of these United States had such power. The curb is to be taken off and free rein given the President.

The President of the United States is a creature of the Federal Constitution. In the States comprising the Federal Union he can have no such authority given him, yet ten millions of people over whom our Government claims dominion, a constitutional Executive of a free republican government is to be given the right to make and judicially construe laws. The advocates of this amendment insist that they have a Democratic precedent during Mr. Jefferson's Administration, in the Louisiana territory. I challenge the assertion. This amendment is not on all fours with authority given Mr. Jefferson. Article 3 of the treaty by which we acquired the Louisiana purchase is as follows:

The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States; and in the meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess.

Here we see that Mr. Jefferson was hedged in by a treaty which has the force of law—to see that this territory be formed into States as soon as practicable. Meanwhile he was compelled to see that the people be protected in their liberties and religion. No such guaranty is given the Filipinos; no promise is made that they shall ever have the proud boast of American citizenship. The reading of Article IX of the Spanish-American treaty, ratified by the United States in February, 1899, says: "The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territory hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress." No treaty rights protect the Filipinos. And now Congress is to surrender its power to legislate, here you are to give the President power to legislate, and he is under no treaty obligation to give to these people at any time the blessings of free government. Mr. Jefferson was bound by treaty, as was the Congress, to carve the territory of Louisiana into sovereign States as soon as practicable. But the majority here insist that the proposed amendment confers the same power that was by act of Congress given to President Jefferson. I deny it. Here is the act of 1803:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That until the expiration of the present session of Congress, unless provision for the temporary government of the said Territories be sooner made by Congress, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

Approved October 31, 1803.

By its terms the authority for the President to act was limited to the expiration of the session of Congress. Besides, Mr. Jefferson was only authorized to appoint persons to exercise the same powers as were already "exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same." In other words, they were authorized by the President, through Congress, to execute and enforce power existing when the United States made the Louisiana purchase. Another statute was passed in 1804 vesting the power of governing the Louisiana Territory in "a governor and thirteen of the most fit and discreet residents of the territory."

The act of October 31, 1803, was temporary, to continue until Congress could act. We have had such title as Spain could give by quitclaim deed of the Philippine Islands for more than two years. Ample time has been had for organizing a Territorial government, as was done for Louisiana within a year of its purchase, yet the Congress is to turn over the control of the archipelago to the President. And more, the views of Mr. Jefferson, well known to Congress as being in favor of government by the people, made it clear that he would shrink from exercising imperial power. In the Louisiana case the few people then in the territory were protected by treaty, while in the Philippine case the people depend upon the whims of an Executive who can not be depended on to have the same mind on any question very long. Mr. Jefferson believed and taught the blessed doctrine of government by the people, while Mr. McKinley believes in government by force and by manipulation of trusts. Mr. Jefferson fostered liberty. Mr. McKinley fosters commercialism at the expense of liberty.

Mr. Speaker, from the day of our landing at Manila we have fooled the Filipinos. They were our allies before the power of Spain was broken. They were bullied into fighting our soldiers and then pronounced rebels and traitors, though they never did acknowledge allegiance to this Government. You take a people against their will and then proceed to govern them as if these United States had the power of a monarchy. I denounce the whole miserable business as being un-American, undemocratic, unrepublican. The Republican party is drunk with a renewed lease of power and is determined to exploit Cuba and the Philippines for the benefit of the trusts, no matter how much blood is vomited, no matter how much liberty is destroyed. I expect to see the time come when your crimes will overtake you. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HAY. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VANDIVER].

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Speaker, the infamy which this amendment seeks now to legalize is a monstrous outrage upon the Filipino people. It is well illustrated in this modern fable of the eagle and the fish. The eagle having rescued the fish from the hawk, then seeing what a dainty meal he would make, pounced on the fish himself; and as he sails away with his prey the fish makes appeal for liberty and freedom; and the eagle makes this response—the same that McKinley now makes to the plaintivecry of the Filipino:

How ungrateful you are
Since I've traveled so far
To emancipate you from
The tyrannous hawk,
Thus of freedom to talk,
And imagine you've a claim
To the home whence you came.

Indeed, I've designed
And had only in mind,
As distinctly I said in my late proclamation,
To secure for your race
A superior place
By means of benevolent assimilation.

[Applause.]

Thus into the air,
'Spite of protest and prayer,
The fish goes aloft to the bird's habitation;
And the bird is so filled
With the fish that he killed
That he too dies of benevolent assimilation.

[Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, what does the Republican party propose? Observe, it says "all military and civil and judicial power" is to be vested in the President. His appointees are to be the only legislators also. Is anything lacking to make up imperialism? During the last campaign your party denied the charge that you were seeking to change the character of this Government. You denied that you were imperialists. Everywhere throughout the length and breadth of the continent you proclaimed your love for the Constitution. You professed still to cherish the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence. You laughed to scorn our charge that your party was not faithful to the ideals of this Republic. You succeeded in carrying the election. Now, you openly and boldly repudiate the plain provisions of the Constitution. With unblushing effrontery you even go a step farther and do the very thing we prophesied you would. Here is an amendment that was offered to your proposition in the Senate day before yesterday, and it was defeated by a strict party vote; Senator HOAR was the only Republican Senator who still had courage enough to show his fondness for the Republic and dread of the empire:

And provided further, That no judgment, order, nor act by any of said officials so appointed shall conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Every Republican voted against this amendment except Senator HOAR.

Your party has even refused to make these officers whom you appoint in the Philippines take the ordinary oath required of officers in this country to support the Constitution of the United States. They are merely to be the satraps of His Majesty William of Canton, who is to be enthroned on next Monday.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that nothing I may say, nothing that any man can say on this floor, will change the result. It has been predetermined. Your "boss" has drawn the party lash, and like slaves you will do his bidding. "Base, ignoble slaves," "you crouch and cower like belabored hounds," and do your master's bidding. It is a shame and disgrace—a foul infamy. The vocabulary of condemnation is too weak to express the profound contempt which your conduct merits. Words are feeble instruments. I would to God I could command some more powerful means of expressing my horror and condemnation of this infamous proceeding.

Men calling themselves gentlemen, and representatives of a Christian country, professing faith in Democratic form of government, now propose to legalize and authorize robbery, murder, and spoliation of weak and helpless people, merely because you want possession of their lands, and the patronage and profitable business of governing them, and you are not even willing to govern them under the limitations and safeguards of that Constitution which has been the bulwark of liberty on this continent. You propose to go into the business of government purely for profit. Your war of "benevolent assimilation" has degenerated into a war of conquest and extermination. The mines, the forests, the fields, and all franchises in the Philippines have tempted you, and the devil of tyranny which has so long slumbered in your bosoms now asserts itself. I speak advisedly and prudently when I speak of these selfish motives which lie back of this cruel war.

As early as August 13, 1898, a Cabinet official cabled to Admiral Dewey that the President desired to know what were the most desirable possessions for us to make in those islands. Here is his cablegram, addressed to Admiral Dewey, Manila:

WASHINGTON, August 13, 1898.

The President desires to receive from you any information you may have of the Philippines; desirability of the several islands; character of the people; coal mines; other mineral deposits; harbors; commercial advantages, in a naval and commercial sense; which would be the most advantageous.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

In reply to this Dewey mentioned the "undeveloped coal mines, mineral deposits, and other advantages" of the island of Luzon, and also called attention to other islands, after which McKinley decided to take them all.

Do you find in that cablegram or its reply anything about the good of the governed? Anything about humanity or civilization? Anything about the spread of constitutional liberty? No! It is a cold proposition of greedy and damnable conquest. More than this, all the shameless proceedings are well illustrated here in this House to-day. The chairman of the committee having this bill in charge, which now increases the Army of the United States to an hundred thousand men at an expense of $150,000,000 a year to carry on this infamous business of conquering the Philippines, openly confesses that he is himself interested in the business—financially interested; that he is the president of a great land and lumber company lately organized for extensive buinesss in the island of Luzon. Without meaning any disrespect or personal offense to the gentleman from Iowa, who is the president of this Philippine land and lumber company, I mention it only because it illustrates the low standard to which we have fallen.

Here is one leading member of this House operating in the timber lands of Luzon; another prominent member operating in sugar lands in Cuba; another company is now being organized to control the street-car lines in Manila; another one to secure railroad franchises; another one the electric franchises, while the great monopoly, which includes the whole Republican party here, is now seeking to get control of the entire business of government. A monopoly of government means a thousand or more fat salaries for civil officers in addition to the immense list of the Army and the Navy.

Who is it crying out for the blood of the Filipinos because they refuse to submit to these outrages? Is it the ordinary American citizen, wanting a place to build a home for himself and family? No, he would never think of going to the Philippines, where the climate is hostile to the white race, and where the country already has a population of 65 to the square mile, while our country has only 23. Who is it that urges on this campaign of slaughter and extermination? It is the speculator, the franchise grabber, the land grabber, the gambler in other men's rights, the trafficker and trader, who is willing to slaughter a thousand helpless victims in order to build up his own private fortune. Aye, willing to exterminate whole tribes and races of people in order to exploit their lands and resources. Oh, sir, this is a crime against humanity; a curse which future generations will hold you responsible for. A day of retribution is not far distant. Your hypocritical pretenses of patriotism have carried you along so far, but the time of awakening will come.

You say you are giving these people the same privileges and safeguards that Jefferson gave to the people of the Louisiana territory. You know it is a falsehood. You know it is an outrageous falsification of the facts of history. Turn to the third article of the treaty of 1803, by which we acquired possession of the Louisiana territory from France; read those words in that treaty. How do they compare with your absolute refusal—by a party vote—to be governed by the Constitution. You say that Jefferson did not wait for the consent of the Government. You know very well that the people of the Louisiana territory preferred to be under American government instead of French government. You know that that sentiment was so nearly unanimous that it was taken for granted, without a formal declaration. Furthermore, you know that, with the exception of the Indian tribes, the settlers in that territory belonged to our own race of people and had come mostly from our own States. They were the children of our own Commonwealths.

You know, too, that the colony of New Orleans under French rule was a source of danger, and our country needed possession of it in order to avoid a foreign war, while McKinley purchases distant islands and brings on a foreign war. You also know that the promise of statehood was held out to the inhabitants of the territory, and that now we have fifteen States carved out of it and three more ready to be, while nobody here is willing to admit the Philippines to the privilege of statehood. You know all of these things, and still, with falsehood on your lips and hypocrisy in your hearts, you plead the peaceful acquisition of contiguous territory, settled and to be settled by an homogeneous race for the spread of constitutional liberty and the permanent establishment of peace and happiness on this continent as a sufficient excuse for the war of foreign conquest and the establishment of arbitrary and imperial government over millions of people of an alien race 7,000 miles beyond the sea.

Your hypocrisy will not go unmasked. The thin veil of patriotic pretense will be torn away; the truth must be known. The sacred name of religion can not always be used to shelter the devil's purpose. Thank God, there are still some Christian people in this land—some people who still preserve the essence of Christian teachings. The political freebooters who masquerade as Christian civilizers will some day pave the streets of hell with their sordid souls, and God will raise up a generation of honest men, who will see the truth and be willing to deal justly with their fellow-men, of whatever race.

It may be that we shall first have to learn the unprofitableness of the dangerous business in which we are engaged. We may have to learn that an Army of an hundred thousand men and a Navy of 40,000 can not be supported on nothing; that they can not even be supported on the proceeds of plunder and spoliation of the helpless people we are slaughtering. We may have to learn by hard experience that $750,000,000 a year—the amount appropriated this year by this Congress—has to be wrung from our own people year after year by the hand of the taxgatherer. We may have to learn that this amount is equal to a tax of $50 on each family of five people in the United States, or that it is equal to the entire volume of the wheat crop of the United States, or, to put it in a different way, we may have to learn, as the people of Italy and some other parts of Europe have learned, that a blue-coat with a frowning musket on every street corner, with all the other accompaniments and privileges of a governing class, will mean that taxation from 10 to 20 per cent of the valuation of all property must sooner or later eat up every dollar of surplus earnings and drive out of existence the great middle class and leave no career open to our children but that of the soldier or the tenant of the soil of a landed aristocracy. Militarism and landlordism—the plague and the curse of Europe and Asia—stare us in the face.

I say we may have all these things to learn, but I am confident that sooner or later impartial history will render a juster verdict than that which this day registers on this, the most vital question that has confronted this Congress.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I shall submit as a part of my remarks portions of a letter now in my possession, written by a gentleman of eminent position and remarkable ability, who has spent many months in the Philippines and made a more careful investigation of conditions there, and reported them with more independence and accuracy than any writer whose observations have been printed. That he is a close observer and able writer the letter itself bears proof; that he is a man of unimpeachable veracity and integrity I can testify from personal knowledge. The whole letter is in my possession and in the author's own handwriting.

His name is withheld because the letter is written only as a personal letter from one friend to another, and not for publication; and his position, as well as the privacy of the communication, makes it improper for me to make it public.

It is dated "Philippine Islands, December 12, 1900," and after the introductory sentence is as follows:

DEAR JUDGE: * * * I notice by your letter, even the intelligent man that you are, that you are yet talking about our "looking after them (the Filipinos) until they are fitted either to be admitted into the Union or given self-government;" and, of course, you are not to blame for this condition of mind; you are entirely dependent upon the papers and magazines, etc., for material to form your opinions. But let me say to you, Judge, honestly and candidly, if you were dependent on the same sources for your knowledge of the people of the old circuit you reside in you would say the same about them. The class of people that are coming out here and running hurriedly around among these people and writing them up and passing judgment on them would be dead sure to pass the same kind of judgment on the people of J——, W——, I——, and W—— counties if they were to find those counties, with the same people they now have, situated in some other country of the world, and a large majority of them would decide that they are incapable of self-government if they were to go and visit them where they are and without ability to speak their language.

We, of course, have savages and semisavages here—several millions of them—but even a large majority of them are much more capable of casting an intelligent vote than are more than that many cotton-field negroes in the South to-day. But the savages and semisavages live to themselves away off in the forests, and in "frontier regions," and maintain their own governments (as our Indians always did). And besides them there are the people over here—the people of the country—the Tagalos and Visayans; and I should say the Tagalos and Visayans include people called, locally, by other names, just as some of our people are called Alabamians and some Virginians and some Vermonters; and there is not any more difference between those of the different names in the Visayan class and the Tagalo class, respectively, here than there is between those I have mentioned there in the United States, either in language or anything else. The Tagalos and Visayans have different languages, but they are very similar; something like high Dutch and "low Dutch," for instance, I imagine. All Tagalos coming in contact with Visayans learn their language almost at once, and vice versa. And you probably think their languages are languages of savages, or, at most, semicivilized people. You probably do not know that each has its history, literature, poetry, etc., and hundreds, in fact, thousands of schools (if we include private schools and classes, etc.).

At the Visayan College, at Cebu, over 400 young men are being educated, and when I visited there last spring four of them were studying Spanish as one of the modern languages they thought it profitable to learn. The rest, of course, were studying in Visayan just as people in our schools study in the English language. Cebu is the city in which the Spanish Catholics established their first church and school over here—in about 1521, about three hundred and seventy-nine years ago—and they have had churches and schools there ever since, and still have them. But the "savages" still stick to their own schools and language and literature, etc., that they had when the Spanish found them here in 1521. And practically the same thing can be said of the Tagalos, but probably a greater per cent of the Tagalos learned Spanish. * * *

Now, of the Tagalos and Visayans there are about 6,000,000, and they are lawyers, doctors, druggists, merchants, artists, artisans, farmers, bankers etc., just the same as the people called Virginians are, and they live at home in families just the same as Virginians do.

Now, Judge, I am not afraid that you will misunderstand me, but a casual reader of the nonthinking class would come to the conclusion from what I have written above that I claim that these people are just like Virginians, and the equal of Virginians; and would "pitch into" me at once and contradict me, up and down, and call me a fool, and if I were to answer their assertions and contentions, etc., I would have to admit that these people are not white, and that they (at least a great many of them) "go barefooted," and that they dress so as to look to me and you and my critic like "guys," and that they can't talk so as to express an intelligent thought to an American of ordinary education, who does not know their language, and that their principal diet is rice, and that it is very common for them to sit on the floor in a circle when eating their meals, instead of on chairs at tables, as we do; and that if you meet one in the street riding in his buggy or other vehicle he will turn to the left instead of to the right, and if one of them motions with his hand to another to indicate to him that he wants him to come to him he will do it with the ends of his fingers pointing down, etc.

* * * That is, they belong to a different civilization, and thousands of years of character building and civilization, construction on lines essentially different from the lines of our civilization, have made them a different people from us: but that is not saying that they are better than we are, or as good; but most fools think that it is a conclusive proof that they are not as good as we are and that God has made us His agent—"humble instrument" they hypocritically express it—to make them perfect by making them just like us.

The long and short of the whole matter is that they are to-day as capable of self-government as we are. I do not mean by that that they have the capacity to "give" us a good government. (And if they were admitted to be a thousand times as capable to govern us as we are to govern ourselves, we would say that they had no right to "give" us a good government or any other kind.) They could not "give" us as good a government as we can make and maintain ourselves, and quite likely they could not "give" us as good a government as we could "give" them, and I do not think that they can govern themselves as well as we can govern ourselves; that is, their government (if they governed themselves) would probably not be equal to what our government of ourselves at home is; at least it would not be as good in our estimation according to our views of such things. But none of these things touch the matter of self-government.

There is no question at all in the mind of any intelligent person who has had an opportunity to study things here on the ground and has done so, but that these people are capable of self-government, and a thousand times more capable to govern themselves than we are to govern them. We are simply not capable of governing them at all. We can not understand them nor they us. We can govern the people of Canada, or of England, or Germany, or Denmark, or Norway, or Sweden, or we could cut off the States of New York, Kentucky, and California and make provinces of them and govern them. We could do these things because it is possible for us to understand all these peoples. They belong to the same civilization with us. We know that we could cut off States this way and govern them, because we have done it. You remember the reconstruction days. The South was governed that way then, and a great many people who think that God has appointed McKinley as His agent to kill off a portion of these people over here and govern the rest, think (and say) that the Southern States ought to be governed that way yet. I have heard it said a number of times within the last year.

A good many officers over here have concluded that these people are not capable of being governed by Americans—which, as above indicated, I also think is true—and, having come to this conclusion, these officers think that we should change the war into a war of extermination, and wipe them clear off of the face of the earth. You would be surprised at the number of officers in the islands who think the Americans should show no quarter, but should kill men, women, and children, and burn houses without limit, and that the sooner we wipe out the whole race the better. And you would also be surprised to know of the amount of the work of that character that has really been done and is yet being done. * * *

* * * We know that these people can govern themselves, because they have done so. The Aguinaldo governments stood for a year and a half in a majority of the provinces, cities, pueblos, etc., and for two years in some of them, before they were destroyed by the advance of our army; and they were entirely successful, whenever I have been able to learn the facts. Under the Aguinaldo government they had, or rather that government included, governments corresponding in a sense to our State, county, and city governments, etc.; and those, or at least the most of them, have been destroyed by our people; and in only a very few cases have we replaced them with anything.

Along the northern and eastern coast of the island of Mindanao they had three provinces, where they had in successful operation all the machinery of government, courts, administrative offices, and ministerial officers—everything to meet the wants of a civilized people or community. And this state of things continued for two years. At the end of that time we got possession there, and at once shut everything down tight, and so it stands, and has stood for nine months, with no visible indication whatever that it will ever be different. Nobody is authorized to make a conveyance; there is no way to protest a note; no possibility of trying any kind of a civil case whatever; no sort of means of administering an estate—nothing, absolutely nothing, to enable the people to attend to the affairs of ordinary civilized life.

And that is not the worst of it. In nearly all cases in these islands the Americans in charge do not know that these things are lacking. It is astounding to see the ignorance of such things among Americans. They do not know that these things are lacking, because they do not know of the things themselves and their uses. Nearly all the Army officers think if you sweep the streets of the towns and make people keep the pigpens away from their houses the people are well governed. The only thing they know of government is bossing, or at best, commanding them. Not one in a thousand has any just conception of government.

* * * No, Judge, these people are now ready for self-government, but will never be capable of being satisfactorily governed by people of the Western civilization. And for the same reason there will never be a time when it would be safe to admit them as States into our Union. * * * And it is also true that we can not govern them as a foreign and subject people without so stultifying ourselves in the matter of our professions of principles of all true government as to endanger our own Government in the course of time. And we can not govern them as well as they can govern themselves. And why do we want to govern them at all? * * * It has always been the policy and practice of the English to represent to the world that the people it is profitable to rob and destroy are ignorant and vicious savages who amount to national nuisances, and a curse to the world, etc., and our nation have evidently made up their minds to adopt that policy and practice—or at least those who "run things" and "do things" have—and therefore it would not be popular to tell the truth about the Filipinos. I could write a book that would be interesting, and that would possibly sell, if I could get my own consent to join the procession, and write about the odd and curious things over here, and so exaggerate these as to make the whole work amount to a tissue of lies. I have not seen anything in print that was other than this, in the form of books, speeches, etc. * * * And official reports have lied for purposes had in view.

Future generations will read in the school histories that we, at this day and time, were either vicious or criminally ignorant. * * * And after all, Judge, what do we want these islands for? Hypocritical cant among a certain class says we want to Christianize and properly civilize these people—they say we want to elevate them without using a halter. But that, of course, is the veriest bosh. A few religious cranks, who are entirely ignorant of the situation, may really think this, but of course no one pays any attention to them, because all sensible people know that that is not it. And then again others have been made to believe that God forced them onto us—that circumstances that our people could not control placed them in our hands, * * * etc. * * * We got them on our hands because we wanted them, and worked to get them there; and it took lots of hard work and scheming, too. And it was not all honest or creditable. * * * Of course, some investors of capital will probably make money out of it. In fact, Army contractors and shipowners have already done so.

But for the common run of American people there is absolutely nothing in it. * * * Nor will the islands serve as an outlet for Americans; furnish homes for people. In the first place, the islands already have more people to the square mile than the United States has, and, besides, they are more mountainous than the Rocky Mountain region of the United States is. That is, not a greater per cent of them is inhabitable by man than there is of the Rocky Mountain region of the United States. In short, they (the habitable portions of them) are much worse overcrowded now by the people that are here than the worst overcrowded State of the Union is by the people there. And white people simply will not live in this latitude. They never have done so in any age of the world, and why will people persist in such nonsense as to suppose that they will do so now or hereafter. I know a great many think that Hongkong is a community of white people, and that there are white people at Shanghai and Singapore, and Penang and Molucca and Java and Sumatra and Sandockan, but they think this because they have not read the authorities.

They only have to read the books of the English to see that the English and Dutch colonies in the Tropics are not colonies at all; they are simply Governments by English and Dutch people of tropical peoples. None of these so-called colonies have white people permanently settled in them, or in them at all, except such as are connected with the army or the government, or acting as agents for commercial companies at home.

In short, the English and Dutch have not migrated to these "colonies" here in the Tropics, notwithstanding they (the colonies) have been maintained for centuries, some of them three centuries. And there are to-day almost no Spanish people at all in the Philippines, and there never have been any except what were connected with the army or the government. Spaniards have never migrated here.

And Americans who produce things could not come here and enter into competition with these people as producers. It is conceded by all that these people can do everything here (except govern their country) better and cheaper than Americans can.

But it is poorly worth while for me to try to give you, in a letter, any idea of the "Philippine situation." It involves too much, and as you say "the Philippine problem will not be settled for a long time." It could be. We could settle it in a year, if we should say to the people to-day "we will treat you as we promised to treat the Cubans." No Filipino asks more; and mighty few of them will ever accept less, either willingly or unwillingly. They talk about the war being over. There is more fighting going on to-day than there has been at any time since the first part, or what may be termed the beginning, of the war; and we have fewer real friends in the islands than we ever had before, and each day sees the number diminish.

Our great misfortune has been in the "caliber" of the men that have been in charge over here, Otis and his outfit of incompetents. There has never been a time when they, in the slightest degree, comprehended any part of the situation here. One thing was that they thought that all they had to do was to whip a Filipino army. It never occurred to them that in doing so they would stir up a Filipino people that would have to be conquered; and they are a people that are practically unconquerable. The main reason that they are practically unconquerable is that their conditions of life are such, and their view of death and small regard for it so peculiar, that the things that would unquestionably conquer any people of the civilization that we understand have practically no effect on them at all. In fact, what would conquer an American people (such as what caused the surrender of the South, for example) only renders them desperate, and sets them to fighting in cold earnest, and without parading themselves and their feats, etc.—only settles them down to the real purpose of hurting their enemy. I have no doubt that we will suppress them some day, and will probably do it three or four times within the next dozen years or so, but we will finally give up the islands. They will show themselves to be unprofitable to our people, and become burdensome to our Government, and we will give them up.

There are three classes of people here—the Mohammedan Malays, called Moros, the pagan Malays, and the Christian Malays. They are all Malays. It's all folderol to blow around about our having an unknown kind of people to deal with—I mean a people that the world never knew of before. They are simply Malays—a people that have always been known, and always been known to belong to the Oriental civilization, and to be incapable of adopting or accepting and adapting themselves to the Western civilization. The European nations have been controlling more or less of the Malay race right here in this immediate vicinity ever since they (the European nations) became powerful enough to come here and rob them and live off of them. And with them it has long been known and settled that there is no use to try to make "white people" out of them, and that the less they are governed the better off both they and their masters are, and therefore the European nations content themselves with just as little government of them as will enable them to tax them and otherwise get money out of them. They are like a certain distinguished American. They claim to be an instrument of God appointed to do that much.

* * * It is, as I said before, simply astounding to see the density, and volume, and weight, and height, and breadth, and depth, and force of the ignorance of civil-government affairs that fills the hide of the average Army officer. And it is not confined to officers of low rank. In fact, Otis is a shining example. For instance, he issued general provisions for establishing provincial, and city, and town governments, and all the governments established by the Americans have been established under them. His provisions describe in detail what the governments shall consist of, and how they shall be established, and in the whole scheme courts are not mentioned or referred to, nor is any other sort of judicial body provided for. There is no provision made for any means of trying cases, except, of course, that the Army has a provost court, and it has criminal jurisdiction only. Nor is any provision made for the execution of deeds or wills, or other instruments that need to be proved by official certificate of acknowledgment, etc. Yet the Spanish law is declared (by Otis) to be the law of the land, and it prescribes that deeds and wills and all other instruments shall be executed in a particular manner; and the scheme of government does not provide for the officer—a notary—that can perform the necessary acts, or give power to any other officer to do so. Some notaries have been appointed in Manila, but it was done in response to urgent petitioning of the localities that needed them; and a few courts have been established in the same way.

The point that I am making is that so little is known about civil government among the authorities that they do not know that a judiciary is absolutely necessary to complete any system. Nothing but executive and ministerial officers ever occurs to them—somebody to boss and command, as in the army. * * * The Aguinaldo governments of provinces and towns, etc., torn down by us were a great improvement in form and constituent parts, etc., over the Spanish governments that I do describe. In fact, they are an excellent form of municipal government for a country where the Spanish laws are in force; and it was a disgrace for them to be destroyed by Americans, a liberty-loving (?) people. In my opinion it will be many a day before these people have as good a government over them again—one that will be as satisfactory to them and do them as much good. This was one framed and established by themselves, and they were pleased with it and thought it a good one. And it was a good one. It was effective, and furnished a means for the people to attend to all affairs among themselves that governments are established and maintained for among civilized peoples. And there was actually a state of peace and order in each and every one of their provinces so established from the time they got rid of the Spanish till the day our troops would enter the province; and this was, in some cases, quite a good deal over two years.

* * * The American people have evidently made up their minds to ignore all our old-time principles of, or in regard to, the honest and moral and true doctrine of governments among men and human rights in general. They want to rob these people over here now. That is, they think that these people have money and lands, and other things of value, and will produce more wealth in the future, and we want what they have and will have, or as much of it as we can get; and as these old principles and doctrines are in our way to prevent us from taking it at will, we have made up our minds to set them aside and shut our eyes to them. * * * Not one man in a thousand in the United States wants to know the truth about things over here. If they were told the truth, and they knew what they were told was true, they would not allow themselves to believe it. They have made up their minds as to what they are going to do, and they are going to do it; and what is more, they are not going to allow themselves to believe anything that would make it very wrong for them to do it. * * * In my opinion, there is a day coming when this whole scheme and the policy back of it will be condemned by the whole world, and especially by the American people; and the time will begin to approach rapidly as soon as the people become convinced that there is no money in it for them, and that it is expensive to them besides. * * *

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COONEY].

Mr. COONEY. Mr. Speaker, Congress, composed practically of the same men now sitting in its two branches, did on the 18th day of April, 1898, pass the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

First. That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

Approved April 20, 1898.

After three years the Republican party now presents its scheme for entering upon the fulfillment of our promise to depart from Cuba, and "leave the government and control of the island to its people." Here is the scheme, attached to the Army bill, and to be forced to passage this afternoon.

That in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled, "For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect," the President is hereby authorized to "leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people" so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows:

I.

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

II.

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt, to pay the interest upon which, and to make reasonable sinking fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which, the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government shall be inadequate.

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

IV.

That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

VII.

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

VIII.

That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

No one knows better than Republicans that this is a scheme to remain and not to depart from Cuba; no one knows better that the demands now made on Cuba is a shallow scheme by which the solemn vow made by the American people over the sacred relics of the ill-fated Maine is to be broken, and the most infamous national perfidy is to be committed. Let it be known that these demands upon Cuba's liberty are not made at this time by Congress voluntarily. It has ceased to have a voluntary action. It has sunk to that state of pusillanimity that it now strikes Cuba at the behest of McKinley and a promise of a long vacation.

The story of Cuba is told. No power can save her from the thieves that now hold her by the throat. Spain is dead, but her spirit and her religion, which were her greed and her despotism, have survived and conquered. Her blood in spilling was diffused through Anglo-Saxon veins; the ghosts of her Cortez and Pizzaro are reanimated and walk these halls, and the spirit of her Philip dwells in the White House. For years to come we shall boast our honor and glory through press and pulpit, but we shall wait in vain for a single act of the Administration that will distinguish us from the most sordid of nations.

THE PHILIPPINES.

At the last session of Congress the Spooner bill was introduced in the Senate. Its object was to complete the colonial scheme of the Republican party in the Philippines by turning over the future government and control of the islands to the President. It is now attached to this bill, and adds its weight to a measure already burdened with infamy. Knowing it to be unconstitutional, the most conscienceless Republicans are put forward to claim for it a paternity from Thomas Jefferson.

On the 20th of February the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] in referring to the manner in which President Jefferson undertook the administration of the Louisiana Territory, said:

And the very language of the law under which Mr. Jefferson took possession of that Territory is to-day embodied almost verbatim in the Spooner bill.

The advocates of the Spooner bill for some time past, both in Congress and through the public print, have been attempting to impress the public mind with the belief that it had good authority and precedent for its passage at this time in the action of the Democratic party in the past; that in its language and the powers conferred the Spooner bill is identical with the law passed by a Democratic Congress in 1803 for the administration of the affairs of the Louisiana territory. Nothing can be further from the truth. I will read both the law of 1803 and the Spooner bill, that they may go into the RECORD together and be judged as to their identity and difference.

LOUISIANA BILL OF 1803.

Until the expiration of the present session of Congress, or unless provision be sooner made for the temporary government of the said territories, all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the officers of the existing government of the same shall be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of Louisiana in the full enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

PHILIPPINE BILL OF 1901.

When all insurrection * * * shall have been completely suppressed by the military and naval forces of the United States, all military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the said islands shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons, and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion.

The law and the bill are as far apart as the poles. But, clearer than any party platform can make it, they mark and illustrate the difference in action and principle of the two parties. The Louisiana purchase and its inhabitants were never cursed with the badge of servitude and plunder that is promised the Philippines by the Spooner bill.

The Jefferson law was for temporary government; this Spooner bill is for permanent government. The powers conferred by the Jefferson law were to absolutely terminate with the end of the session of Congress that passed the law; those proposed to be conferred by the Spooner bill are to continue without any limitations as to time. The Jefferson law contemplated immediate legislation for the government of the Louisiana territory by Congress itself; this Spooner bill contemplates that there shall be no legislation for the government of the Philippines by Congress.

The Jefferson law gave authority to the President only to administer such government as he found already existing; this Spooner bill gives authority to the President to overthrow any government existing in the Philippines and to establish any government he pleases. If Republicans believe that the Spooner bill is identical with the Jefferson law, let them substitute the latter for the former, and every Democrat will vote for it as cheerfully as Democrats voted for it one hundred years ago.

The Constitution ordained:

All legislative power herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, and shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

I thought that this was that Congress; but the President has set up a commission in the Philippines, and has made of it his ideal of what a Congress should be. Through that congress he has been legislating and experimenting in civil government for the past two years.

He has claimed this power as Executive of the nation, and he has repeatedly declared that by the exercise of that power he was fast bringing the islands to a condition of peace, protecting life and property, and extending municipal and civil government as fast and as far as the Army extended the sphere of its subjugation. If that is a fact, why not let the President continue his good work under powers that he has declared to be ample and sufficient for the purpose? Why should he now for the first time appeal from his rump congress in Manila to his possum policy Congress here in Washington for a further grant of power? The reasons and inducements for that appeal are to be found in the recent report of the Taft commission made to the President. I will read some of them from that report. A dispatch from the commission to the Administration:

If you approve, ask transmission to proper Senators and Representatives of following: Passage of Spooner bill at present session greatly needed to secure best result from improving conditions. Until its passage no purely central civil government can be established, no public franchises of any kind granted, and no substantial investment of private capital in internal improvements possible. * * *

Sale of public lands and allowance of mining claims impossible until Spooner bill. Hundreds of American miners on ground waiting law to protect claim. More coming. Good element in pacification. Urgently recommend amendment of Spooner bill so that its operation be not postponed until complete suppression of all insurrection.

This report further shows that there are 73,000,000 acres of land in the islands; that scarcely 5,000,000 of them are held in private ownership, and the balance, which is practically all of the islands, are public lands to be disposed of; that these lands are very fertile and most of them naturally irrigated; that there are large forests of the finest timbers, extensive deposits of gold, copper, high-grade iron, and excellent coal, and that there are over a thousand foreign capitalists, promoters, prospectors, and their agents on the ground anxiously waiting for the passage of the Spooner bill that they may make a rush and secure titles to those lands, forests, and minerals. The Spooner bill was misnomered; it should be called "the Sooner bill."

Within the covers of this report there is not another single reason given for the passage of the Spooner bill. That bill does not add one iota to the power that the President now has and exercises that will aid him in the prosecution of the war nor in the establishment of such government as will bring peace and tranquillity to the islands. The bill is nothing more and nothing less than a patent deed conveying to President McKinley the title to the islands and their inhabitants.

I do not care how good a man he is, the islands are not his. He is not the lawful owner of them. They belong to the people. I shall never place the seal of my vote to that conveyance. I am for holding on to the islands. You know, for you have said it repeatedly, that these islands came to us through the hazards of war; that Providence placed them in our hands as a sacred trust; and I am opposed to conveying or transferring them to any prince, power, or potentate, either foreign or domestic.

If the President will return to us the $20,000,000 we paid for them, and the $300,000,000 we have spent upon them, and the 10,000 American lives we have sacrificed in them, then I will be in favor of the Spooner bill and willing to transfer the whole archipelago over to President McKinley, washing our hands of the whole business.

It is remarkable that a President of the United States should ask the passage of any law like the Spooner bill; that he should seek to clothe himself with power so great and responsibility so small. Here are franchises and rights and lands and minerals to be given away by the Spooner bill. The commission in this report says there is just enough peace for the President to dispose of all of them and just a little too much war for Congress to exercise its powers of legislation on the subject. And the evidence is that the commission is ready, willing, and able to maintain just that condition of affairs in the islands as long as the President desires it and as long as there is anything left worth giving away.

A remarkable thing contained in this report is the demand of the commission and the greedy vultures assembled in the islands that the Spooner bill be passed now, and not to wait until the war is over. They recognize that if they are compelled to wait until the war is over their chance for plunder will be diminished.

Sir, this is one part of this Philippine business the settlement of which Congress can not pass to the President or other hands without dishonoring itself and subjecting its members to the charge of having shared in the wild orgies of plunder that would inevitably follow. The title to the lands in those islands should be preserved for their own people, to be by them obtained under happier conditions than now exist there, and under laws and rules that are clearly defined and justly made by Congress.

Neither under American nor Spanish rule have these people ever had the opportunity to acquire peaceable and permanent titles to anything in their own country, and it will be inhuman and monstrous to undertake to dispose of everything of value in the islands in the very midst of war, when even those who are friendly to our Government will be prevented by the prevailing excitement, fear, and lack of information from taking advantage of such an opportunity.

It is true that the Spooner bill as amended and attached to this bill in the Senate is shorn of the power to dispose of the lands in the Philippines, but everyone knows that another Congress will restore that power. That is the power McKinley has asked and demanded, and he will have it. We are now passing a law which absolutely transfers to him the sole government and legislation of the Philippines. It can only be taken away from him by the enactment of another law, and as he has the vetoing of any such a measure, it will be absolutely impossible for this or subsequent Congresses to take that power away from him.

Legislation on the lands, mines, rights, and franchises will in the meantime become necessary for the progress of the islands. Who is to do that legislation? We can yet answer, "Congress;" but when an hour shall have passed, and the roll shall have been called, and the last Republican shall have come forward, mean spirited, guilty looking, and abdicates the proud position of an American Representative, while he hangs on to its emoluments, then there will be no power left to wrench that prerogative from McKinley nor to prevent him from giving the islands over to be sacked by his personal friends.

> Nor all that heralds rake from coffin'd clay,

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, of course in the time which has been allowed us by the majority of this House it is impossible for any member to discuss this measure on its merits. We can only enter our protest, and that I solemnly do. It seems that gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber can only defend this measure by citing Democratic precedents which they themselves say they do not believe in. They are not willing even to accept the precedents which they cite.

Mr. Speaker, the time will come when these gentlemen will regret that they have muzzled the representatives of the people upon this floor on questions which are the most important which have been debated in this House for many, many years; and they will repent the haste with which they are hurrying through this House a bill dealing with policies which involve the future fortunes of the Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan

[Mr. CORLISS], with unusual frankness, has helped to clear the atmosphere of this debate. He says that under the stress of excitement in the early days of the Spanish war he voted to give to the people of Cuba the right to govern themselves. But now that his mind has recovered its usual calm—and now, being inspired, no doubt, by a knowledge of the fact that the lands of Cuba are fertile and opportunities to exploit the island abundant—he repents that decent and honest vote and hopes that the troops of the United States will not be withdrawn and that our sacred pledge will not be kept. He frankly speaks what is in the minds of the majority of his political associates.

The language of that resolution is so plain that the wayfarer, though a fool, can not fail to understand it. There are two very conspicuous features of the resolution to which, for a moment, I wish to invite your attention. The opening sentence declares that "the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent."

It does not say that they shall be semi-independent or in a state of vassalage, but that they shall be independent. Now what does that mean, Mr. Speaker? It does not mean that Cuba shall be to the United States what India is to England or Java to the Netherlands. To be a free and independent nation is to occupy, in respect to other nations, the same relative position that Russia has to Germany or France to England.

In some countries the hand of tyranny presses less harshly than in others. But there are no gradations in liberty. Either the people of a country are free or they are not free.

We declared that the people of Cuba were free, unconditionally free. That resolution was an honor to the Congress which passed it, and God forbid that we should now dishonor it as these new resolutions propose to do, and as I fear we are about to do. We wrote one chapter of shame into the history of our country when we betrayed a trusting people and repudiated an ally. We are now about to repeat in Cuba the shameful and despotic thing which we did in the Philippines. And what did those resolutions say about our duty and our programme in Cuba?

It declared—

That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

Do you remember how the nations of Europe sneered when we passed that resolution?

Do you not remember that they, with a frankness which bordered on rudeness, said that we were lying, and that behind our high-sounding phrases there lurked a lust for land and gold which would keep the American soldier in the Philippines and the West Indies? And the pity of it is that their sneers were founded in a knowledge of the situation.

Is it not preposterous to say that we are living up to either the spirit or the letter of those resolutions?

We specifically disclaimed any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control in Cuba.

Now, among the inherent rights of sovereignty is that of making treaties. By the resolution attached to this Army appropriation bill we deny that right to Cuba. Another of the attributes of sovereignty is the right of any people to control their own schemes of taxation and expenditures. Here again we propose to cheat the Cubans of the essence of independence. These new resolutions, only a degree less infamous than our behavior in the Philippines, set up a new territorial claim, Mr. Speaker.

There is not a schoolboy in the country who has studied the geography of the West Indies who does not know that the Isle of Pines is as much a part of Cuba as the island of Galveston is a part of the State of Texas. And yet we seek now, with dishonest cunning which is a disgrace to the country, to set up a claim to the Isle of Pines. Step by step in this career of despotism and dishonesty we are justifying the sneers of Europe. It seems that no promise is so sacred, no pledge so solemn, that it may not be broken.

Why is this, Mr. Speaker? Have the American people lost all sympathy with liberty? Do they no longer revere the precepts of the Revolutionary days? Alas! sir, it is due to greed. The love of money, which is the root of all evil, has chilled the blood of our people and dulled their sense of honor. Commercialism has taken the place of patriotism, and when any new scheme is proposed, no one asks, "Is it right; will it reflect credit upon our country; will it promote human liberty and human happiness?" but, "Will it pay?"

We denied an alliance and destroyed a republic in the Philippines because the forests of those unhappy islands contain valuable timbers and their mountains are reputed to hide gold. We now repudiate a solemn covenant with God and the world and will take and retain Cuba because in her pleasant valleys our capitalists can grow the most fragrant tobacco in the world and secure the extravagant returns from sugar plantations. Quite recently the Taft Commission gave as one of the reasons why civil government should be promptly established in the Philippines the desire to gratify the demand for franchises.

With the Republican party the opportunity to grant a franchise is esteemed a higher privilege than the chance to set up a free government or to promote liberty.

Should it ever be called upon to write a new Bill of Rights that party will, I do not doubt, forget the existence of men as men, and devote itself to the guardianship of the rights of corporations. Unless it may be considered already to have a de facto corporate existence, it should, by all means, go to New Jersey and have its syndicated, dividend-hunting, liberty-crushing nature formally recognized.

The Army has ever been the instrument of despotism. It is fitting, then, that this assault upon the rights of the Cubans should come as it has in the way of an amendment to the Army appropriation bill. The association is suggestive. I print now the Teller resolution.

[Public resolution—No. 21.]

Joint resolution for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Habana, and can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April 11, 1898, upon which the action of Congress was invited: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

Approved, April 20, 1898.

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, let the country take notice that the Republican majority here in Congress has deprived the Democracy of the opportunity of properly discussing this question, which is attracting public attention all over the country.

Being deprived of the privilege of showing how at variance this bill is with our promise to the Cubans, I content myself with placing before the House and the country the advance sentiment of Republicanism in a Republican legislature in a Republican State, as embodied in the following resolutions, which I clipped from the North American, a Republican paper in another Republican State. These resolutions show the trend of public sentiment even in Republican circles. I hope no Democrat on this side will take offense to my reading these resolutions:

TOPEKA, KANS., February 24.

Senator Thomas Noftseger and F. Dumont Smith, Republican floor leaders, have drafted the concurrent resolution providing for final adjournment of the legislature. The resolution will be introduced to-morrow.

It is very unique, and doubtless its wording will be strongly objected to by the Democrats and Populists in the legislature. However, the Republican majority in both branches is very large, and it will be adopted. The resolution follows:

"Whereas William I, formerly William McKinley, is to be crowned as emperor of the United States of America, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, king of the Philippine Islands and Alaska, protector of the Ladrones, and prince of Guam on Monday, March 4, 1901; and

"Whereas this nation will cease to be a republic on said date, and will become a military despotism; and

"Whereas a legislature elected by the people has no part, place, function, or office under said empire: Therefore, be it

"Resolved by the senate (the house concurring therein), That this legislature shall conclude its business, wind up its affairs, and adjourn sine die before noon of said March 4, 1901; and be it further

"Resolved, That we assure His Most Gracious Majesty hereby that all acts and resolutions of this legislature are subject to his royal will to approve or set aside, as to him seemeth best, and we, his loyal subjects, do hereby desire to testify our loyalty to His Most Gracious Majesty William I."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OTEY].

Mr. OTEY, after addressing the Chair, stood silent for several moments and looking at his watch, and then said: My time has expired. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, destructive though this measure may be to Philippine freedom, threatening though the hour of its passage may be to Cuban independence, menacing though it be to the constitutional rights and liberties of the free men of the United States, a bright lining appears on the ominous dark cloud, for the enactment of these amendments so hurriedly grafted upon this appropriation measure marks the rejuvination of a united, aggressive, and a triumphant Democratic party.

Within its organization will be welcomed all our citizens who believe in maintaining in its integrity the Government which came down to us from the fathers of the Republic, and under which we have reached the high-water mark of progress, reputation, and material development.

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAM E. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I feel duly grateful for the courtesy shown me by the House in according me a portion of the brief time allotted for the discussion of this bill, and will avail myself of this final opportunity to pay my respects to the Administration and the political issues it has engendered. This is the closing day of the Fifty-sixth Congress, which will go into history famous for the good it has avoided and the evil it has accomplished. It has been my fortune, good or bad, to participate in a negative way in all that has been done, and after resumming my part I can truthfully say that I have cast no vote which I feel ashamed of or for which I have been called upon to apologize. I have protested by speech and vote against the objectionable legislation which has been enacted, but I have found the majority at all times merciless in their intolerance, heedless of our warnings, and deaf to our protests.

Responsibility is largely measured by opportunity, and with its limited opportunities and the utter helplessness of the minority under the arbitrary rules of the House more could not be expected of this side of the Chamber or of a new member, and in taking my leave of this body after so brief a service I am reminded of the inscription on the gravestone of the 6-weeks-old infant:

> I was so quickly done for,
> I wonder what I was begun for.

It seems to me that this would be an opportune time to review some of the issues of the late campaign and see whether or not all that we predicted has not been confirmed. Three great issues were presented representing cardinal principles of the Democratic party. We denounced the single gold standard and proclaimed our allegiance to the ancient and righteous principle of bimetallism. We arraigned the trusts and charged the Republican party with being in league with them, pledged to afford the people no remedy against their rapacity.

We warned the public against the dangers of imperialism, so manifest in the policy of the Administration relative to Cuba and the Philippines and lurking in the very shadow of the Republican platform. These questions have not been settled, but are living issues, and, like Banquo's ghost, will come up to haunt the Republican party in the future. The country, basking in the sunshine of general prosperity, which came inevitably in the course of things, not by reason of the Republican Administration, but in spite of it, was loth to disturb existing conditions, was content to let well enough alone, and assumed the risk of arresting in the future the tendency toward imperialism rather than run the risk of unsettling business conditions, which always attends as an incident to the change of Administrations.

Do not deceive yourselves, my friends, the people have not approved your policy of imperialism, and when that question shall be fairly presented, unhampered and uncomplicated by individual necessity and temporary expediency, the voice of the American people will be heard in one triumphant acclaim against the infamous policy which you have so assiduously endeavored to fasten upon the country. The theory of bimetallism has been vindicated by events, which may be misleading now, but which will be fully understood and appreciated in the future. Bimetallism means more standard, more basic money, the necessity of which was admitted prior to the phenomenal increase in the production of gold in Alaska, which, in the light of history, can be only temporary. This increase in the output of gold has supplied the place of silver for the time being and brought relief and prosperity to the country.
